Baritz Sees Quality Education

By RICHARD NAGLE
Collegian Staff

Lean times have been predicted by many for this University but the new provost hopes to keep some meat on its academic bones.

"The budget is obviously tight. We're going to have to learn to live with it," said recently-appointed Provost and Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Loren Baritz.

Baritz, who was approved by the Board of Trustees July 2 and assumed office Aug. 4, replaces the acting Provost of two and a half years, Jeremiah Allen.

Living with the slim budget appropriations from the state legislature can be made easier, said Baritz because, "If you can't get the money from one place, go somewhere else."

It is increased external funding Baritz said that will help him achieve his top priority as the University's chief academic officer: quality of education.

"Generally, my overwhelming priority is quality," he said, leaning forward in his chair. "People come here and pay their bill. They should get the best education possible."

But he said, "I don't mean quality in the elitist sense. It can be a code word for an unopen university."

In his past position as Director of New York University's Institute for the Humanities, provost and acting chancellor for the State University of New York system, and history professor at other institutions, Baritz said he envied UMass. "Many departments are very good. There are very many good faculty here," he said.

While UMass is highly regarded outside of Massachusetts, it is unjustly belitted in state, Baritz believes. "Poor little UMass is always compared to Harvard, Yale, and Princeton. It's an unfair comparison," he said.

External funding, particularly for the liberal arts, is imperative, Baritz said. "It is not done to the extent it should be. If we don't get more external funding we're going to have a noose around our neck," he said, in an acute manner.

He said, "Scientists are more aggressive because they need all that damn equipment. The most sophisticated equipment I use is a typewriter. Humanists in general are not aggressive as scientists but they need the money. They have more potential because they're starting from ground zero."

"I know of many places to get money. I can be helpful in that regard," he said.

Baritz cited a program sponsored by Exxon Corp. that funds entire educational systems. "They're very interested in the humanities," he said.

Baritz said liberal education in general is in a state of "intellectual disarray." "It's an enormous mish-mosh. I think it is a result of the growth of the past and allowing students to 'do their own thing.' There are some students who benefit from more structure," he said.

Financial Aid Cut: $ 2.5 Mil

By MAUREEN McMANUS
Collegian Correspondent

University of Massachusetts students will bear the brunt of the fiscal squeeze now that attempts by President Carter to balance the federal budget have undercut their financial aid awards.

Financial Aid Director Edward C. Apadaca said students who apply late, appeal, or request additional awards will receive no money because of a $2.5 million cut in federal funding.

'It has been a nightmare experience . . .'

Before Carter's demand for a balanced budget, the UMass office of Financial Aid had packaged awards to over 8,000 students, Apadaca said.

"All indications pointed to the idea that there would be more money available," he said.

"It has been a nightmare experience. The Federal government came through with drastic cuts on the BEOG (Basic Educational Opportunity Grant) program, changing the figures three times after having granted them to students," he said.

The U.S. Senate decided to go along with the $50 across-the-board cut in federal financial aid, Apadaca said.

"This resultd in less money for individual students, but as a whole, more students on the campus were granted BEOG aid," he said.

Ashoke Ganguli, associate director of Auxiliary Services, said because the Campus Center is the largest employer of work-study students at UMass, the cutbacks will have a major effect on Campus Center hiring.

He said if students receive smaller amounts of work-study money, they will lose their jobs when they run out of money early in the year.

Dean of Students, William Field, said students affected by the cuts should apply to the Higher Education Loan Program. He said in cases where the Financial Aid office is at fault, students should send their applications in after insuring the University was in error.

"Financial aid involves more than an interaction between the students and the University, and while students complain to the Office of Financial Aid, the decisions lie with the Department of Education," said Apadaca.

"We don't know what we're doing because the Department of Education doesn't know what they're doing," he said.

Apadaca said his office will award financial aid cautiously next year to avoid similar problems. He said some changes will be made next year based on this year's overcommitments.

Apadaca said financial aid funds were depleted because a record number of students were eligible to receive aid.

In November of 1978, the Middle Income Student Assistance Act increased student's eligibility to receive aid, he said.

"They ran out of money by April," he said. "There are not enough funds to meet the number of applicants. We went out on a limb with the students by helping more than ever before," he said.

Apadaca explained although financial aid began as an office to help lower-income and minority students it is now trying to help all students. He said while new applicants were happy with the money they received old applicants who he said were usually late in applying were angered by the cuts.

A survey conducted in April by the Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office indicated that UMass was third highest in the number of financial aid awards last year when compared to similar institutions.

Larry G. Benedict, SAREO director and assistant vice chancellor for student affairs, said, "We are one of the most productive, cost-efficient institutions in the country, processing more applications at a lower cost."

But another part of the survey found that the UMass Office of Financial Aid which employs 37 workers is understaffed. The survey concluded that the office should

Campus Roads To Be Safer

By ERINN ERVIN
Collegian Correspondent

What now creates havoc and confusion for automobile and bicycle riders is the University's new road system in the making.

And the result of all the dust, bumps and broken pavement is aimed at making UMass roadways safer for pedestrians.

The work, which is costing the University $1.5 million, is scheduled to be completed by the fall of 1981 and also includes features to improve access for the handicapped, according to William Lambert, university landscape architect.

The bulk of the road work involves the four main roads that surround the campus—Massachusetts Avenue, Commonwealth Avenue, Governors Drive and North Pleasant Street, Lambert said.

The Land Corporation of Meriden, Conn. is installing curb cuts, which are little ramps in the curb, in all the crosswalks from Governors Drive to Nutting Street to allow wheelchair access, he said.

New sidewalks along Massachusetts Avenue, Commonwealth Avenue and Governors Drive, from parking lot 31 to the Graduate Research Center and Engineering East, are being laid to make walking around campus more bearable.

Governors Drive is being straightened and widened and Commonwealth Avenue is being widened.

To make way for a tree belt and a sidewalk along the east side of Commonwealth Avenue, one barn has been torn down and another was lifted off of its foundation and moved back again, the architect explained.

In addition, Massachusetts Avenue is being resurfaced and the traffic islands will be extended to control traffic flow. Lambert said the intersections of Massachusetts Avenue and Commonwealth Avenue with North Pleasant Street will both have traffic lights.

The plans also call for North Pleasant Street to consist of two northbound and two southbound lanes, separated by a traffic island. That traffic island will run as far down as the Newman Center in order to block the illegal lefthand turn which has been commonly made out of a parking lot there, Lambert said.

'As The Crow Flies'

By ERINN ERVIN

Many campus paths are turning from dusty brown to hot-top black in an effort to "clear up a few myths and clean up the campus," said Campus Landscape Improvement Project Director Benjamin Fieman.

In the first of a series of projects, University Grounds crew this summer installed new sidewalks between the Main Library Tower and the Campus pond, and Herter Hall and the Campus Center.

CLIP, begun in 1976 by the University Planning Office and the Department of Landscape Architecture, works on the notion that a brown path worn across lawns does not represent disrespect for the work put into keeping them green, but rather the straightest route to a common goal, Fieman said.

Fieman said his solution is to put sidewalks where people walk, rather than expect people to walk at right angles just because the sidewalks are there.

Two thousand dollars were spent last summer to design this year's construction. Another two thousand dollar designing project is underway for the construction of a "few spots of beauty" next summer, Fieman said.

Because the work is being financed by the grounds crew's limited budget, an effort is being made to keep costs at a minimum by using coal slag from the University power plant as fill, and transplanting, rather than destroying 15 trees in the way of road construction, Fieman said.

Reorg Installs Superboard To Govern Higher Ed

By RICHARD NAGLE
Collegian Staff

Some call it a "superboard"—and rightly so.

Commanding 28 colleges and universities, including UMass, 30 campuses, 174,000 students, 5,300 faculty and a $300 million budget, the newly formed Board of Regents represents the most dramatic reorganization of public higher education in the history of the state.

The board was created on June 10 when the state legislature, without public hearings, consolidated the five boards of trustees, the board of trustees, the board of higher education and the office of the secretary of educational affairs with the aim of streamlining public education in Massachusetts.

The board was created when the state legislature, without public hearings, consolidated the five boards of trustees, the board of higher education and the office of the secretary of educational affairs with the aim of streamlining public education in Massachusetts.

The new Board of Regents is authorized to set budgets, and tuition, discontinue or transfer academic departments or entire institutions throughout the state system.

There are no provisions in the reorganization statute for student representation on the boards of trustees or board of regents.

Although the new board will not be fully empowered until March 31, 1981, many features of the plan are already in place.

One of the board's most important duties is to hire a

Anti-draft Group Remained Active

By TRACY O'CONNOR
Collegian Correspondent

Demonstrations, pickets, petitions, and counseling by foes of draft-registration highlighted this summer's anti-draft activities in Amherst.

University of Massachusetts Students Against the Draft, (SAD), formed in January after President Carter's call for the registration of 18 and 19-year old men for the military draft, collected about 200 signatures of area draft age men on a registration for peace petition, said SAD member Charles Bagli.

The liason sent 200 letters to community groups offering information on speakers and debates about the draft, said SAD member Adena Gilbert.

Area students, parents, and draft-age men set up a counseling center in Amherst's Jones Library during the two-week registration period to answer questions about the draft and the rights of men required to register.

Gilbert, one of the counselors at the center, said about 250 people attended the counseling sessions between July 15 and Aug. 2.

Gilbert said the center was not just a student group but rather a community effort. "This group was very different from SAD because we were not advocating the anti-draft movement, we just provided information," she said.

Gilbert said draft-related sexism and racism is also some of the groups' concerns. "The blacks are discriminate against in that they are sent overseas and to the front lines much faster than the whites," she said.

SAD members do not consider the registration of women an issue because they belive in "total resistance," said member Ellen Bagli.

No Housing Crunch Expected on Campus

By RITA L. CAPRINO
Collegian Correspondent

Despite a record number of new students, an incompletely renovated dormitory, and tight off-campus housing market, there will not be an on-campus housing crunch, said Housing Assignments Coordinator Gerald A. Quarles.

Approximately 4200 freshmen and 600 transfer or exchange students are moving on campus with returning students, he said.

Knowlton dormitory in Northeast Residential Area was renovated this summer and is tentatively scheduled for completion on Sept. 5 Quarles said.

"There's nothing wrong with the building, it's an inspection hassle," Quarles said. The building has no furniture, he said.

Lounges in Knowlton may not be completed until after the students are moved in. He said his main concern is getting the student rooms usable.

Students originally assigned to Knowlton have been relocated in the Northeast and Sylvan Residential areas, he said.

"Housing Administration have the trucks and the people and we will help the students move back to Knowlton," Quarles said. He said this includes only students originally assigned to Knowlton, not students who were placed in Knowlton after late housing assignments.

Problems were averted in Leach and Dwight Houses in Northeast and Baker House in Central, when an impending welder's strike was settled with the commonwealth.

Quarles said rooms will not be filled beyond capacity nor will students be housed in the Campus Center Hotel.

He said there have been individual cases where students have been placed in the Hotel because of leaky dorm roofs or other individual problems. Although housing office officials say they didn't request it, hotel officials have reserved rooms in case there are too many students.

This action was based on the situation in 1977 when approximately 160 students lived in the Hotel for an average of six weeks.

Joanne Levenson of the Off-Campus Housing Office said off-campus housing is tight.

"The reason for this is that most students rented earlier this year," Levenson said. "They took on leases, deciding it would be easier to find housemates in September than finding a house."

All students who have contacted the housing office for assignments have been placed, including late paying freshmen and sophomores.

Juniors and seniors are exempt from dormitory living, however those who wish to live on campus may contact the housing office after Sept 8, Quarles' Special Assistant Craig Sherwood said.

Quarles said there should not be too many problems with housing because the system is not completely full. More spaces also are expected to open up because of "no-shows", Quarles said.

Campus Bars Reborn

By MARK L. CURELOP
Collegian Staff

Food Service operations in the Campus Center and Student Union Building complex have been slated $450,000 to $500,000 for renovations.

The newly added "Flagstone Cafe" has been in operation since June and will remain open weather permitting. Contoured cement benches and cement tables with umbrellas are located near the Pillbox on the Campus Center Plaza where the victuals are dispensed.

Major renovations are occuring to the Top of the Campus and the Bluewall. Proposed plans for the Bluewall includes a mirrored bar, new tables, chairs and benches. The tone will be changed from blue to brown, said Campus Center Purchaser Donald LaCombe.

"Brown is a more appealing color," said LaCombe.

A new system will be added to accomodate under 20 year-old customers, enabling them to purchase drinks from the same bar as the older customers.

Demolition work for the Bluewall has been completed and a new tile floor is expected to be installed by midweek Lacombe said. The renovation contract has not been put out to bid yet, he said. "There will be some period of inconvenience," said LaCombe.

"But, we're hoping to reopen as soon as the floor is completed."

Harris said the work on the Bluewall will be completed the end of September. Until then, the Hatch will accomodate Bluewall customers. Work on the Hatch will not begin until the Bluewall is completed, he said.

Wine, cheese and salad bars will be put in the Hatch, Harris said, "the furniture, the curtains and carpet in the Hatch will be changed, but not until Fall. It's all a matter of time," he said.

TOC Lounge renovations will be finished by the end of September Harris said. A sit-down bar is the major addition to the TOC. Red carpet and satin wall coverings have also been added. The decorating is to appeal to those who use it—the faculty, students and staff.

"The idea is to create warmth," Harris said. "One aim of the redecorating is to dissipate anger. No one goes about ripping it off if they feel good about it," he said.

The funds for these projects has come from Conference Service profits, Harris said. Last year the University made $500,000 from the Transcendental Meditation convention.

The renovations have been designed by the Amherst firm of Ruth, Shives and Williams.

This, except for the floor and ceiling, will be the new "demolished look in the Blue Wall. Campus Center officials expect renovations to be finished by the end of September.

Greeks Future Bright

By JUNE KOKTURK
Collegian Correspondent

Optimism is the mood of newly-appointed University of Massachusetts Greek Area Director Leslie Chambers.

"The future is looking good," said Chambers, who assumed the position Aug. 25. "I see the houses growing more individually with educational programs, leadership development and better unity among the houses."

A UMass alumna and former sorority member, Chambers worked with the fraternity/sorority system from 1976-79. The 1979 graduate served as Panhellenic Council President and chaired the committee that created the Inter-Fraternity Council last year.

After graduating with a degree in human nutrition, she worked as a behavior modification counselor at a diet clinic in New Hampshire. She is now working towards a masters degree in Public Health at UMass.

As director of the Greek Area, Chambers is responsible for various programs such as leadership development, membership recruitment and the Alcohol Education Program. She hopes to establish a career development program for Greek area students.

The Greek Affairs Office is the liaison between the fraternity/sorority system, the University administration, and the community. The office also works with the national chapters of fraternal organizations to help with the policies, ad procedures and maintenance of individual houses. These national groups often enlist the aid of the Greek Affairs Office to start chapters on campus, such as the Delta Upsilon Fraternity last fall.

Chambers believes declining enrollments will not hurt the Greek system because she said it is a positive way of life.

"All the things that the system has to offer will come as an advantage when enrollments decline," she said.

"The system offers a more meaningful living option, with a home to come back to after classes and graduation," she said.

Chambers replaces former Greek Area Director Shannon Ellis who left in July to take a similar position at the University of Southern California. Christy Cole of Miami University in Oxford, Ohio, who was originally hired as Greek Area Director last spring, sent a letter to Dean of Students William Field at the beginning of August declining the position for "personal reasons." A regional search was again conducted and the search committee chose Chambers from three finalists.

Two trees in front of Herter Hall died when their roots were exposed after crews repaired an emergency break in a utility line.

Fieman said the old, worn paths are a product of habit. "In institutions things are dead. Trucks drive through the campus competing with students for paths, and leaving huge ruts in the lawn not from malice, but habit. Deliveries could be made to back or side doors if the order came from somewhere but it's such a common thing, who's going to think of changing it?" he said.

"The age of growth is clearly behind us, and the age of maintenance ahead of us. If we do not now pay attention to the repair and improvement of the campus environment, we will be permitting the degradation to continue," Fieman warned.

SGA Untangles Budgets

The Student Senate coordinating committee spent most of the summer approving bites out of the Student Activities Trust Fund pie and telling some groups they've already eaten too much.

The 13-member committee, which has the authority to act as the student governing body during vacation periods, approved summer spending by student groups, as well as untangling the finances of the 60 groups the senate funds.

One student-run business, the Stereo Co-op, folded and is not expected to reopen after a $12,000 budget deficit was discovered, said Committeee member Peter Taggart. Taggart coordinated the 10 student businesses on campus this summer.

Taggart said poor financial management over the past two years made it impossible for managers to revive the business this past year. A plan to liquidate the deficit is still being considered.

The People's Market, another student-run business, was closed for two weeks in late June after a $750 robbery. An investigation of the robbery also showed a $22,000 deficit because of poor management.

Student Government Association Treasurer Al Wallace said stores are not allowed to have more than two days cash in the store. The robbery indicated the need for reorganizing the group's management, he said.

Taggart said prices at the store will increase because of the new system. He said the store in the past had marked up food on a "philisophical basis," rather than a percentage basis. For example, he said, the "junk food" was marked up considerably while other foods were barely marked up at all.

Student Government Co-president Richard Moran said the market closing indicated the senate is "very serious" about plans to make sure the businesses and other student groups are well run.

"We only have so much of a pie. If some group is left unmanaged, they could very well eat that pie. And it could be someone elses," he said.

Moran said unused Student Activities Trust Fund money is being put back into the fund and will be reallocated this fall.

Student-run businesses are allowed to keep profits they make to reinvest, Wallace said. The Collegian, while not classified as a student-run business, was allowed to keep the first profit it has made in recent years, he said. Editor-in-chief Robert E. Stein said the $8,000 will be used to insure the paper's daily publication.

Wallace said the Union Program Council, which schedules concerts throughtout the year including the Spring Concert, has about a $30,000 to $35,000 deficit for the year. The original printout showing the deficit had a $42,000 error. That $42,000 was from UPC ticket sales at the Fine Arts Center which had not been transferred to the Council's account, Wallace said. The group will liquidate the debt through student senate funds and profits from upcoming concerts, he said.

Wallace said he will be examining the budget for each show this year to insure the group will not go into debt again.

"The draft should not be a stipulation in our equality," she said.

About 350 Amherst men registered for the draft while over 800 signed the peace petition, said Bagli.

"I think it will show a victory for the anit-war movement," said Bagli. "An estimated 30 to 40 percent for the men did not register. I think this either relates directly or indirectly because of the anti-draft organization. I think the figures will illustrate what the American people want," he said.

The peace petition was sent daily to the selective service during the registration period, Bagli said.

During registration, SAD members picketed the Amherst Post Office and staged a rally July 4 on the Amherst Commons.

Last May, they dedicated a memorial stone at the UMass campus pond to the four students who died at Kent State University in Ohio during an anit-Vietnam War protest 10 years ago.

SAD will continue anti-registration activities at UMass this fall, Bagli said. "The draft is not a big issue right now but it will be soon because of the registration for men born in 1962 coming up in January," he said.

If it's sick to love a pen, then the world's going crazy.

It happened to secretaries first. Then lawyers, bookkeepers, waitresses, cabbies, housewives, and businessmen succumbed to the beauty of our Pilot Razor Point and Fineliner pens.

Some people felt it was sick to get so emotionally involved with our pens. But is it really so crazy to love a Pilot Razor Point pen that writes with a sharp smooth line and costs a mere 79¢? Is it nuts to flip over its unique little metal collar that smartly helps to keep its point from going squish?

If it is crazy, it's going to surprise a whole lot of people. In fact, we understand that Pilot Razor Point even has what it takes to score extra points with football players.

It also comes to our attention that many coaches are fans of the Pilot Fineliner. Along with all the other Razor Point features, the 69¢ Pilot Fineliner has the strength and drive to go through carbons.

It's hard to resist a pen that holds the line like a Pilot.

Library Resumes Service

By JAMES F. MAHONEY
Collegian Staff

The message from library spokesperson Paula Mark is the library is alive and well, so use it.

Ever since the closing of the main library tower on Sept. 4, 1979 by Chancellor Henry Koffler there has been a mystique surrounding the use of the Goodell and University tower libraries on campus.

Mark said the use of the libraries on campus has declined dramatically because of the uncertainty of the safety of the main structure and the subsequent relocation of materials and resources. Students have adapted to the lack of a central study area by moving to less conducive spots, Munchies and the Dining Commons, to study or have adopted an "I might as well stay in my room and study" attitude, she said.

Starting on Labor Day, the library will implement an intensive "get to know your library" program that will include guided tours for those who are not familiar with the current set-up of the library, and with the distribution of a free library directory. The tours will be led by a librarian who will take interested students and faculty through all the major areas of the library system, pointing out locations of pertinent facilities and guides.

Mark said she and other librarians will be talking to specific classes about the use of the library and facilities. Mentioning Management 301 and Rhetoric as specific examples, she said these particular classes are based around the use of the library and a working knowledge of the facilities is a must to do a good job with the courses.

"We also have intensive high level seminars for upper classmen who will use the library extensively in their studies which last for up to 1½ hours and leave everybody flattened," Mark said.

The availability of the Main Library tower will be held to the 500 person maximum, as was the case last spring. Mark said that although this sounds like a small number of students, there were only one or two occasions last year when more than 500 people were in the building at one time. She said this occured around finals time when students make their pilgrimage to the library to catch up on the past semester.

To gain entrance to the library, all one must do is show a valid UMass or Five College I.D. card to the person at the door.

Ronald Keefe, a member of the Faculty Senate Library Committee, said the 500-person-at-a-time rule was originally designed to protect some of the more expensive volumes and books which were starting to be destroyed and also to cut down on the amount of vandalism taking place in the library. It just happened to coincide with the reopening of the main tower in the late fall.

The card cataogs and resource material are located at the Goodell library. Many of the more heavily used volumes are in the Goodell facility. Mark added that unless you are an engineer or a scientist you will be using the Goodell library almost all of the time.

She also said things are going fairly smoothly, with most of the rough edges resulting from the move smoothed out.

The library is staffed by 54 full time professionals and employs approximately 160 part time workers. The library also employs nearly 200 student employees. Students fill positions in nearly every department, library director Richard Talbot said, with a majority working in the circulation department.

Of the 200 student employees, close to one half are paid partly through the work study program on campus, Talbot said.

One goal of the library program this fall will be to stress "assertive use of the library" and not to allow a valuable resource to be wasted.

Included within the heading of "System" are the Main Tower, the Goodell building, the two science facilities, the music library and numerous reading rooms.

The library hours are going to be the same as they were last year. They are Monday through Thursday 8 a.m. to midnight, 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. on Friday, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Saturday, and on Sunday from 10 a.m. to midnight.

Apadaca said the office and staff are working beyond what should be expected of them because of the staff shortage.

Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst, disagrees with the federal cutbacks.

"It is important with the rising cost of education as well as the different educational needs to have financial aid available, particularly for public higher education," he said.

"Practically speaking, the situation will get worse in the 80s unless there is more organization among students and more lobbying of congressmen. Money is tight now and it is important for all people to become active. We all need a positive attitude for a belief in accomplishments," Collins said.

When Amherst is home

DOONESBURY

I remember when Faces of Earth was a bowling alley and when Fleetwood Mac played at the spring concert; I guess that qualifies me as a long time resident of Amherst.

Most people are so transient around here that long time resident is often defined as "one who remembers the years before the twin towers dominated the sky." As permanent as the library and the Graduate tower may appear (maybe not so much the library . . .), they were constructed as recently as 1976. The oldest of the "new looking" buildings is actually Southwest, built in 1965. Watching the Fine Arts Center being built was particularly interesting; the building is so amorphous that it was hard to tell if a section was actually complete when work on it stopped.

Although no twenty story towers have been erected in the center of Amherst, things have changed fairly radically since I came here in 1969. Part of the space now occupied by the Boltwood Walk project used to be what was affectionately refered to as "The Alley." Its official address was One Cook Place, and it housed several stores, the funkiest of which was The White Light—the complete store for the complete hippy. The White Light sold and traded books, grains, used musical instruments and, more importantly, Zap Comix to minors such as myself. Also part of The Alley were The Amherst Bicycle Shoppe, Sound Ideas (eventually Amherst Audio) and For The Record, now in Faces of Earth.

I opened with the outrageous claim that Faces used to be a bowling alley. I wasn't kidding: Amherst Candlepin Lanes closed in 1971, and when Faces opened, they sold the balls, shoes and pins for a quarter apiece. Everyone in Amherst Junior High was wearing bowling shoes for a week.

Those who complain that Faces "sold out and went Disco" should keep in mind that this change helped the store survive: Originally Faces was one of three cheap places that sold used clothing and head supplies; the other two have long since gone under.

Three charmingly named stores that didn't survive the end of the sixties were The Dangling Conversation, The Superficial Smile, and—you guessed it—The Boarders of Our Lives, all from the Simon and Garfunkel songs. Dangling Conversation, where Walter Dyer is now, carried scented candles and terribly deep, meaningful cards; Superficial Smile was replaced by Just Desserts and sported records, psychedelic posters, black and strobe lights and, of course, head supplies; Boarders of Our Lives sold sixties furniture (a euphemism for waterbeds and beanbag chairs).

The Raspberries played in the Amherst Cinema in 1972 (they were touring with their big hit, "Please Go All The Way"), Taj Mahal used to play in The Drake, and Sha Na Na rocked the Amherst College Cage in 1973. Lastly, Delanos, that bastion of alligator shirts and khaki chinos, was a succession of

Paul's Confusion: Part One

By Eric Janszen

Sporadic striking of a small fist on the door of Paul's third floor, off-campus apartment cracked like water droplets leaking, after a rain, from the gutter above his window onto the bulkhead below.

Meanwhile, he dreams he is sitting quietly in a bar with a friend, the tonic bubbles rising in his drink, unable to think of anything to say. His friend begins rapping on the dirty table, setting their discordant thoughts to an impatient rhythm.

The door thunders. Paul's eyes shoot wide open. He glimpses at the clock (four in the morning), pulls on the sweat pants at the end of his bed and lurches to the door.

"Hello?" Paul suggests, hesitating. Three or four voices exchange noisy uncertainties in the hallway. Michelle, he thinks, and opens the door. A short, sweet round faced woman smiles gleefuly and thrusts her hand onto his face—the palm over his nose, the fingers on his forehead, eyes and cheeks.

"Hello!" Michelle says.

Through her fingers Paul can see two other women leaning on the dark hallway paneling and a bearded man standing in front of them next to the banister. Paul's allergies are moderately severe this morning but their damp, alcoholic breath creeps under the woman's hand and is pulled in with long, sleepy inhalations. Their eyes droop and grin. They seem deliriously happy.

greasy spoons, the most memorable of which was The Quicksilver Cafe which sold quarter beers to the Hell's Angels types. After the owners were arrested for possession of heroin, subsequent restaurants kept inheriting Quicksilver's clientele; thinking that it was the same old dive, the bikers kept returning there to raise hell.

I haven't talked about the movie that was made in Amherst ("Silent Night, Lonely Night" which still runs on channel 56), nor about the body that was in the upstairs hallway of The Drake for three days before anyone realized that the poor slob really was dead, not just dead drunk. But some stones are better left unturned.

Chancellor's greetings

To the Editor,

I wish to extend my personal greetings to all students, newcomer and returning student alike, at the start of this new academic year.

I take particular pleasure in greeting the Freshmen. One year ago, like you today, I was a newcomer on campus. Ahead of you lies the same pleasurable experience which I have enjoyed. You will meet interesting people and stimulating ideas. I know that one year ahead, like me today, you will have confirmed for yourself that you have elected to come to a very fine university indeed. You have my pledge that I will do everything in my power to maintain and enhance our reputation as one of the top one or two per cent of all higher education institutions in the country.

Good luck to you all in the coming year.

Yours sincerely,
Henry Koffler
Chancellor

★ Baritz

As a solution to this incoherence of liberal arts Baritz suggests that the faculty ask themselves a question, "What does it take to become educated?"

He said he would like to work with the faculty to strengthen liberal education at UMass.

Baritz believes there is too much concern with the differences between "professional" and "liberal" education at UMass. That preoccupation "is a real bore," he said.

"It's a false distinction. A professional education is one that prepares a young person for a job. If a person is majoring in history, doesn't that prepare him to teach history?" he asked rhetorically.

His overall goal as provost is to achieve what he calls the three variables in higher education: high quality, good accessibility, and low cost.

"It is relatively easy to achieve any two of them. The trick is to achieve them all. You can achieve all three probably only through public higher education," he said.

For example he said, private colleges generally have high quality, and good accessibility, but high cost.

In public institutions, there is high accessibility, low cost, but sometimes the quality is lacking, he said.

At UMass, he said, student costs are relatively low, access is "not what it should be but it is not a disaster," and quality is a concern because of the incoherence of liberal arts in general.

Baritz said he was not familiar with all the details of the recent and controversial reorganization of public higher education in Massachusetts but he said, "As long as it allows the serious work of this place to continue, it's no matter how it's organized. Organization doesn't make money."

A graduate of Roosevelt University in Chicago , Baritz received is Master's and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Wisconsin. His best-known work, which was published in 1960, is Servants of Power: A History of the Use of Social Science in American Industry and is still considered the definitive treatment of the subject. His latest work at the Institute for the Humanities included research on the culture of Manhattan, and intellectual repression in the Soviet Union and South Africa.

In addition to his new position, Baritz will be a tenured professor in the history department.

"I am absolutely committed to public higher education. I couldn't have paid my school bills without it," he said.

Why would a nationally-known historian and scholar come to a public university at a time when budgets are getting smaller and costs are growing? "Let's say I could have gone to Berkeley. All the great achievements would be behind me in the past. I came here because the great achievements are yet to be made."

★ Regents

$54,000-a-year Chancellor of Higher Education to administer the new system.

At its first meeting on Aug. 20 in Boston, the board formed a five-member committee to recommend an interim chancellor and set hiring policy when a permanent chancellor is appointed.

Opponents of the plan including Rep. James Collins, D-Amherst, criticize the use of the budgetary process to reorganize higher education and the highly centralized power of the new board.

The plan's sponsors, including Rep. John Finnegan, D-Boston, point to better coordination of the centralized board and its ability to coordinate planning and budgeting for the whole system.

The board will replace the boards of trustees for the University of Massachusetts, University of Lowell, Southeastern Massachusetts University, all state colleges, and regional community colleges.

Instead of the five present trustee boards each of the 28 colleges and universities, except UMass, will have a nine-member board that will serve in an advisory capacity to the regents.

As before, UMass will have one board for all three campuses.

The regents' main responsibility is the submission to the legislature of one lump-sum budget for all public higher education in the state. After the legislature appropriates the money, the regents determine allotments to the individual institutions.

Budget recommendations from each trustee board can be made to the regents.

The regents budgeting power cannot reallocate any money for salaried or part-time employees after it has been approved by the legislature.

The regents also become the employer for all workers in the state-wide public higher education system and act as a collective bargaining agent. Under the existing system, each institution employs and bargains with its faculty and staff.

No regent may be an employee of a public school in Massachusetts.

When the new eight-member trustee boards are appointed by Gov. King in December, they will have the power to advise the regents on admissions, enrollment, academic and labor relations policies. With the regents approval, the trustees can award degrees, set management policies for employees, conduct general university business, and appoint and remove the president of the institution.

The governor must appoint at least two alumni of each institution to the individual boards of trustees.

There have been recommendation from several lawmakers, University officials, and Regents Chairman James R. Martin that the UMass board be expanded to 15 members because of its size and state-wide operations.

On July 2, Gov. King appointed James R. Martin, Head of Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Co., the tenth largest insurance company in the country, as chairman of the new board.

By July 31, King had appointed the remaining 14 members of the board for staggered five-year terms.

★ Roads

Although the road improvements do not call for special bicycle lanes all roads will be at least 44 feet wide allowing two 12-foot lanes and two 10-foot shoulders. Lambert said the shoulders should be sufficient for safe bicycling. He also noted that the sidewalks will be at least 10 feet wide and should be able to carry much of the bicycle traffic.

Lambert said that although the contractor is from out of the area, much of the material was purchased locally and so has brought a lot of business to Amherst.

He also said the cut in federal spending on road work has left contractors hungry for work and the general slump in the economy means they need only hire the best. Lambert said the University is having a good job done at a bargain price.

During his 25 years working here, Lambert said he has "never seen so much of the University torn up at once."

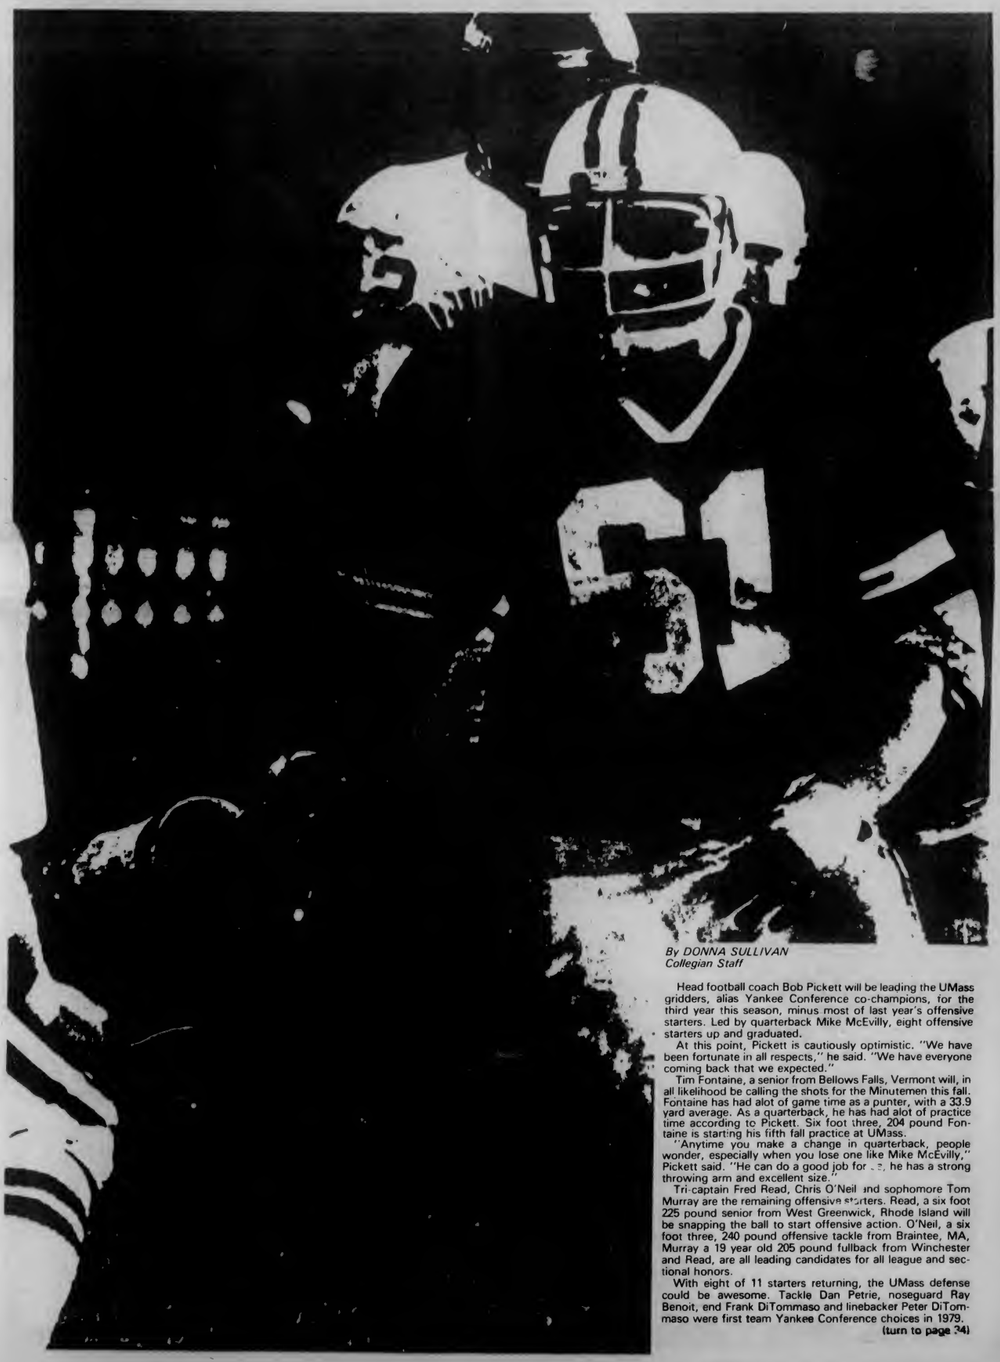
Gridders overhaul offense



By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Head football coach Bob Pickett will be leading the UMass gridders, alias Yankee Conference co-champions, for the third year this season, minus most of last year's offensive starters. Led by quarterback Mike McEvilly, eight offensive starters up and graduated.

At this point, Pickett is cautiously optimistic. "We have been fortunate in all respects," he said. "We have everyone coming back that we expected."

Tim Fontaine, a senior from Bellows Falls, Vermont will, in all likelihood be calling the shots for the Minutemen this fall. Fontaine has had alot of game time as a punter, with a 33.9 yard average. As a quarterback, he has had alot of practice time according to Pickett. Six foot three, 204 pound Fontaine is starting his fifth fall practice at UMass.

"Anytime you make a change in quarterback, people wonder, especially when you lose one like Mike McEvilly," Pickett said. "He can do a good job for us, he has a strong throwing arm and excellent size."

Tri-captain Fred Read, Chris O'Neil and sophomore Tom Murray are the remaining offensive starters. Read, a six foot 225 pound senior from West Greenwich, Rhode Island will be snapping the ball to start offensive action. O'Neil, a six foot three, 240 pound offensive tackle from Braintee, MA, Murray a 19 year old 205 pound fullback from Winchester and Read, are all leading candidates for all league and sectional honors.

With eight of 11 starters returning, the UMass defense could be awesome. Tackle Dan Petrie, noseguard Ray Benoit, end Frank DiTommaso and linebacker Peter DiTommaso were first team Yankee Conference choices in 1979.

Booters rebuilding, looking to improve on '79

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

A large rebuilding program will be the key to success for this season's men's soccer team. High scorer Wayne Moran, midfielder Mark Vasington, and last season's defensive four - Mike St. Martin, Bret Simon, Mark Vassalotti and Greg Omasta were snatched from the squad by graduation.

Moran led the booters with seven goals and three assists for ten total points last season.

Head coach Russ Kidd is optimistic about the young 1980 squad. Goalie Mark Marilla comes into the season with ten shut outs behind him, five of them coming last year. Marilla made 68 saves last year, 5.7 per game and allowed 11 goals in 12 games.

Marilla will be challenged by Matt Esteves and Brett Olsher, a transfer from Indiana. Esteves chalked up two shut outs last season in three games.

Tony M. Dias will be one leader in the scoring attack along with senior Scott Cooper. Dias, a junior, was second in scoring for the Minutemen last year with five goals and one assist. Halfback Cooper scored two goals and two assists.

With Cooper, Greg Draudt, Doug White, Dave Harrington, and Joe Bortolotti, Coach Kidd expects the midfield to be the best in four years.

"Cap" Kidd is in his fifth year as head coach of the soccer team with a 34-23-3 record. A 1956 UMass graudate, Kidd came back in 1970 to coach hockey and lacrosse. He took over the soccer team from Al Rufe in 1976.

The Minutemen start off the season with the Keene State Kickoff Classic at Keene State September 13 and 14. The regular season starts with two home games against Bridgeport and Southern Connecticut September 18 and 20. UMass started the season off last year with the same two teams, both were tie games after overtime.

They will be looking to improve upon a 7-5-2 record, 2-4 within the Yankee Conference.

The junior varsity booters start the season September 24 at Williams College. They face Boston University at home on October 9. Coaching the JV's will be former UMass star Joel Mascolo.

Harriers; depth key to success

By JANE WOLFSON
Collegian Staff

With the strength of nine returning lettermen, the UMass men's cross country team is entering the 1980 season on a positive note.

Leading the returning harriers are co-captains Paul Beaulieu and Mike Doiron.

Beaulieu, a 4:08 miler, was the team's most valuable runner last season. A former western Mass state champion in the mile, Beaulieu was consistently the team's top one or two man on last season's squad along with since graduated team captain Rick Walls.

"Mike (Doiron) has made a habit of consistent big meet performances," cross country coach Ken O'Brien said. His freshman year he was the Yankee Conference Champion in the three mile run. Doiron was the team's steadiest performer in cross country last season, according to O'Brien.

Rounding out the remaining squad will be juniors Kevin Corcoran, the team's leading performer in the 10,000 meter run last spring, Dan Fitch, "The most improved runner of last year," according to O'Brien, and Chris Omeltchenko, this spring's Yankee Conference champion in the steeplechase.

"Chris has shown the ability to be one of the front runners this season," O'Brien said.

Others to watch for are senior Bob Martin (4:10 in the mile and 8:52 in the two mile), juniors Frank Prial, Jon Caffrey, Rick Cameron, Steve Snover, and Don Trembley, and sophomores Tom Lawrence and John Marr.

Last season the Harriers finished with an overall record of 2-3, a third place in the Coaches Invitational at Penn State, fourth in the Eastern Eight Meet and third in the Yankee Conference Championships.

The team's toughest competition will come early in the season with its second meet of the season against cross country powerhouses Providence College and Harvard University, the two top teams in New England last season.

Having no outstanding forerunners the Minutemen will be relying heavily on depth provided by the returning lettermen, and O'Brien considers the early difficult schedule conclusive to deciding early the ability of the team.

"Even as we enter the middle of the season we'll know exactly where we stand. Those first meets will determine for us just how good we are."

The harriers open their season on Sept. 19 when they travel to Boston to take on Boston College. Their only hoome meet of the season will be on Oct. 18 in a tri-meet against the University of New Hampshire and the University of Vermont.

Youth determining factor for women booters

By JANE WOLFSON
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's soccer team, coming off of its finest season in its brief three year history, is looking forward to an even more successful season on the strength of its youth and depth. The returning squad, primarily sophomores, lost only two seniors to graduation and retained seven starters.

The team looks very promising according to first year coach Ken Banda. The women have dropped only one regular season game in the past two years at the hands of the University of Vermont, last season,6-2.

Last year's highlights include a number one seed in the Eastern Athletic Intercollegiate Association for Women, a fourth place finish in the Eastern Championships, and a 12-3 record.

Offensively, the Minutewomen's attack is expected to be built around sophomores Natalie Prosser and Nina Holstrom. Last season Prosser was the team's leading scorer with 19 goals and three assists. Holstrom, with eight goals and three assists was voted the team's most valuable player.

Defensively, UMass will depend heavily on veteran goalie Kelly Tuller, who last year compiled six saves, midfielder Maddy Mangin who was third in overall scoring for the Minutewomen with four goals and eight assists, and fullback Jackie Gaw.

The booters will be receiving their stiffest competition from the four schools that they competed against in the Eastern Championships; Harvard, Vermont, Brown, and the University of Connecticut.

Cortland State is also expected to provide excellent competition.

"On any given day one of these teams could win," Banda said. "The talent is improving every year, each year the incoming freshmen are coming in with greater skills."

The women open their season on Sept. 13 against Plymouth State at Plymouth, and open their home season the 24th with Westfield State.

Peter DiTommaso, a six foot one inch, 200 pound junior from Staten Island, New York led the Minutemen in tackles last season with 81; 55 primary tackles and 26 assists. DiTommaso tallied eight interceptions and 59 quarterback sacks during his career.

Tri-captain Bob Manning, a six foot one, 173 pound safetyman from West Newton totaled 68 tackles; 46 primary tackles and 22 assists. Last year he intercepted six passes and recovered two fumbles. According to Pickett, Manning adds great stability to the defense.

The biggest losses were the defensive corners; Steve Lemay and Kevin Sullivan, Picket said. Max Jones who has had alot of practice, Steve Woodlock who started towards the end of last season when Sullivan was injured, and Dwayne Lopes a sophomore from New Bedford are all prospects for the positions.

Harvard is off the schedule this year but will be back on in 1981 according to Pickett.

"We have an excellent home schedule this year," Pickett said. The Minutemen play six of ten regular season games at Alumni Stadium hosting Villanova, Delaware, Delaware State, Connecticut, New Hampshire and Boston College.

The season opens on September 20th when the UMass gridders host Villanova at 1:30. Last year UMass lost a tough one to the Wildcats 7-35. The Minutemen have won two games in six meetings with Villanova.

New season, same "Strong" Minutewomen

Judy Strong

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Led by United States Olympic team member Judy Strong, the UMass field hockey team, last year's Eastern powerhouse, will face Westfield State on September 20th. Westfield was the first of many schools to fall to the Minutewomen on their way to the AIW (Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women) Tournament last season.

Strong, a junior from Hatfield, Mass., was selected to play on the first U.S. field hockey team ever. Strong was one of 16 women selected to the team after eight consecutive weekends of try outs in Philadelphia.

Last season Strong led the stickers with 24 goals and 10 assists. Strong, along with Laura O'Neil, Laurel Walsh and Julie McHugh were the top scorers for the women. O'Neil, who tallied 20 goals and 17 assists will be back this fall. Walsh, who had 15 goals and two assists and McHugh with six goals and 16 assists were both lost to graduation.

UMass will be coached for the third year by Pam Hixon, a graduate of Springfield College. Diane Moyer will coach the junior varsity squad.

For two years Hixon has taken the Minutewomen to the Nationals where they have been seeded fourth both years. In '79 they defeated Michigan State 3-2 in the first round and St. Louis University 3-1 in the second. St. Louis has been undefeated.

They fell to Penn State and the University of Maryland in the double elimination tourney.

Last year's only regular season losses were to the University of New Hampshire and Dartmouth. The UMass stickers turned and defeated New Hampshire in the Easterns.

The Minutewomen start the season off on the road, at Westfield, Harvard and Vermont before facing Mount Holyoke in the home opener of September 30th. Harvard, West Chester and Rhode Island have been added to this year's schedule.

Women harriers run into a new season

By JANE WOLFSON
Collegian Staff

Coming off of a tremendous season which included winning the New Englands, finishing fourth in the east and 21st in the Nationals, the 1980 women's cross country team is looking forward to a repeat of last year's season.

Returning letterwomen from last year's squad include the team's number one runner last season Judy McCrone. McCrone Placed 12th in the Easterns and 68th in the Nationals, as well as qualifying for the National Championships in indoor and outdoor track. McCrone, a junior, is expected to lead the 1980 team.

Returning also will be the number two runner, senior Cathy Petrick. Veterans Linda Welzel, Tricia Moores, Robyn Dally and Priscilla Wilson are expected to round out this season's squad under the guidance of first year coach Julia Lafreniere.

Lafreniere, a 1977 UMass graduate, was the Most Valuable Performer for the women's track team in 1977.

The harriers will be missing one of the team's top runners, junior, Julie Burke who is participating in a year long exchange at the University of Oregon.

The Minutewomen's toughest competition will be from Harvard University as well as from the University of New Hampshire and the University of Vermont.

The Harriers travel to Boston on September 19 to open their season against Boston College and host Springfield College on Sept. 27.

Other important meets for the Minutewomen will be the New Englands held at the end of October and the EAIAW Championships (Eastern Athletic Intercollegiate Association for Women on Nov. 1.

INTRODUCING HEWLETT-PACKARD'S HP-41C.

A CALCULATOR. A SYSTEM. A WHOLE NEW STANDARD.

The new HP-41C has more than any handheld calculator HP has ever offered. More capability, flexibility, ease-of-use features and options. Memory Modules, an "extra smart" Card Reader, a Printer, the Wand—a new input device, and Application Modules.

Truly, the HP-41C represents a totally new standard of design for all handheld calculators.

THE CALCULATOR.

It features over 130 functions and offers up to 400 lines of program memory or 63 data storage registers—expandable to 319 registers or up to 2,000 lines. And for power, ease-of-use and efficiency—RPN Logic.

It communicates. The HP-41C's alphanumeric capability lets you name and label programs, functions, variables, constants—and prompt for data with words or sentences.

"Customize" it. Reassign any standard function, any programs you've written, or programs provided in the Application Modules—to any keyboard location you want. (Blank keyboard overlays let you notate these assignments.)

Continuous memory. Even when turned off, the HP-41C retains all your program, data and key assignments.

Enhanced programmability. No complicated language to learn. And alpha capability lets you label programs with easy-to-remember names. The HP-41C also features: up to 6 levels of subroutines, 10 conditionals, and 56 internal flags, specific loop control, indirect addressing, local and global branching.

THE SYSTEM.

Memory Modules. For storing programs and data. Can increase capacity to 319 registers or up to 2,000 lines of program memory.

"Extra smart" Card Reader. Records programs and data back onto blank mag-cards. Load programs in any order. And to protect your work—programs can be run but not reviewed or altered. Accepts preprogrammed HP-67/97 mag-cards.

The Printer. Portable, quiet, thermal operation. Prints upper and lower case alpha characters plus special characters. Does high resolution plotting routines.

The Wand. Unique input device. Enters programs and data by reading "bar codes" much like those found on many grocery items. Wand and bar codes will be available with HP-41C software in early 1980.

Application Modules. A growing library of preprogrammed solutions to a wide range of problems.

A WHOLE NEW STANDARD.

HP-41C is a synthesis of the latest state-of-the-art technology and HP human engineering. It's powerful, easy-to-use and flexible enough to solve a multitude of problems. And it's backed by comprehensive reference and training materials—including a full range of software.

The HP-41C—no wonder it's a whole new standard in personal calculators. And at just $295 for the handheld unit, it delivers unprecedented capability for the money.

We invite you to stop in today for a complete "hands-on" demonstration of this remarkable HP-41C. A calculator, a system, a whole new standard.

If you think you could pick your beer with your eyes closed, here's your chance.

Probably just one beer drinker in 3 can pass this test.

All three major premium beers are distinctly different in taste. After all, they're made by different brewers using different ingredients and different brewing processes. Still, it takes a pretty educated tongue to tell them apart.

You may not win, but you can't lose.

This test requires a blindfold. That's so your eyes won't influence your mouth. Because taste is all that counts—in this test, and in a beer. Here's how the test works. You pour Schlitz, Bud and Miller into identical glasses. Have a friend label them 1, 2 and 3 and switch them around. Now, taste. The one you pick may not be your beer, but it's the beer with the taste you want.
See? You can't lose.

What is that taste you're tasting?

Maybe beer tastes so good because you're really tasting each sip more than once. First, the lively, refreshing character of beer comes from the aroma and flavor of the hops. Next, as you swallow, you sense the richness—the body—that barley malt adds. Finally, the finish. Now the balance of tastes becomes clear. No one taste should intrude on your total beer enjoyment.

How do Schlitz, Budweiser and Miller compare on taste?

That's for you to decide. Simply rate each beer from 1 to 10 on the flavor characteristics below. When you're finished, try to guess the brands by name. Very, very few people can do this.

Does the taste of a beer ever change?

Yes. All beers have changed over the years. One example is Schlitz. Two years ago a master brewer named Frank Sellinger came to Schlitz. He came to be president. And to brew a Schlitz that was smoother than any other beer. Taste that beer for yourself. Because taste is what it's all about.

The best beer is #

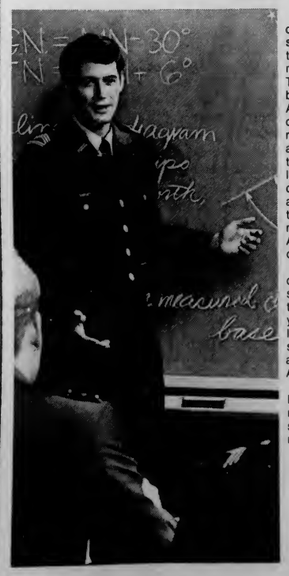
What Do You Want From College?

Management Experience? Add It To Your Schedule.



College military science courses are courses in leadership development. You learn techniques involved in the management of resources. Techniques that are applicable to any management job. Another important leadership characteristic is interpersonal relationships. Things are accomplished by people and the kind of relationship established goes a long way in determining your success as a leader. Whether you intend to become a manager in a military or civilian career, Army ROTC can give you a competitive edge.
You can take the first courses as a freshman or sophomore without obligation. Advanced courses, in your junior and senior years, lead to a position of responsibility as an officer in the active Army, Reserves, or Army National Guard.
Don't wait until after college to get practical management experience. Add leadership to your class schedule now.

Fine Arts Center

Services and conveniences, 1980-81

Dinner-theater parties, group ticket sales, gift certificates, senior-citizen discounts, phone reservations, and mail orders are some of the services and conveniences that will be offered to patrons of the University of Massachusetts/Amherst Fine Arts Center Concert Hall during the 1980-81 season.

More than a half-dozen restaurants in and around the Amherst area will be participating in the Fine Arts Center's group dinner-theater plan. Currently the roster includes the Ambrosia Cafe, Chequers Restaurant, Delano's, Hahjee's Place, the Lord Jeffery Inn, Plumbley's Off The Common, and the Top of the Campus Restaurant and Lounge in the University's Campus Center.

Dinner-theater parties for groups of ten or more can be arranged around any of the more than 40 concerts, plays, musicals, dance performances and special attractions now included on the 1980-81 Concert Hall schedule. Besides a pre-arranged and prepaid dinner at the restaurant of the group's choice—which the participants can enjoy at their leisure and with the assurance that they will be on their way to the Concert Hall in plenty of time for the performance—the dinner-theater package also includes a $1 discount on each ticket.

Patrons interested in organizing a dinner-theater party should call the Fine Arts Center's Community Relations Director, Prue Arbib, at (413) 545-0190. She will mail out an information packet containing brief descriptions of each participating restaurant, along with menus and prices. Also included are maps showing the locations of the restaurants and campus maps indicating parking lots.

According o Ms. Arbib, most of the restaurants offer at least a 10 percent discount on the dinners, which average between $5 and $8 not including drinks, taxes or tips, and offer a choice of at least six different entrees.

The organizers of the dinner-theater party should then select a restaurant, obtain menu choices from the others in the group, and call Ms. Arbib back with this information. She will then take care of making the reservations at the restaurant as well as reserving the desired number of Concert Hall tickets from the Fine Arts Center Box Office. Arbib suggests that, if all members of a party wish to sit together in the Concert Hall, tickets be reserved at least three weeks in advance. In any case, tickets can be mailed out or held at the Box Office after payment has been received; it is also preferable that the dinners (including cost of the meals, taxes, and a 15 percent tip) be paid in advance.

On the evening of the performance, patrons should plan to arrive at the restaurant between 5 p.m. and 5:30; in most cases, Ms. Arbib will greet the members of the party and make sure that all goes smoothly.

Groups of 20 or more patrons are eligible for a $1 discount on each full-price ticket purchased. Seats should be reserved and paid for at least three weeks in advance of the performance if members of the group want all seats together; for more information, call Prue Arbib at (413) 545-0190.

Senior citizens (ages 60 and older) are eligible for a $1 discount on each single-event (non-series) ticket they purchase.

Gift certificates for any desired dollar amount, and valid through the end of the current concert season (through June, 1981) are now on sale at the Fine Arts Center Box Office.

Fine Arts Center patrons who have purchased either single-event or series tickets and then learn that they will not be able to attend a performance may now request that the Box Office resell their tickets. The cost of the tickets then becomes a tax-deductible contribution to the Center.

This new ticket-resale policy will benefit the Fine Arts Center by generating some needed extra income; it will also benefit other patrons by making seats available, especially for sold-out performances, that might otherwise go to waste; and finally, it benefits patrons who offer their tickets for resale by allowing them to claim the contribution on their income-tax returns.

Patrons wishing to offer their tickets for resale should call the Box Office; the staff will take the necessary information and mail a receipt to the donors.

The Fine Arts Center Concert Hall offers wheelchair access to the handicapped; arrangements should be made through the Box Office. Structural modifications which will make the Concert Hall more accessible and comfortable for handicapped patrons are now being planned; the special one-night appearance by the National Theater of the Deaf scheduled for Tuesday, February 10, 1981, will be a benefit for this purpose, and

The Rolling Stones

Stones:
An emotional cue

The Rolling Stones
Emotional Rescue [Rolling Stones Records]

By JIM MORAN
Collegian Staff

So the Rolling Stones aren't relevant anymore. So what. Whoever said that good music had to be calculated to the point of encompassing all the politically-revealing, sexually-liberating, musically-innovative themes that make each new album the Pavlovian bell to the canine pseudo-musicologists? Can't one simply enjoy an album for its own worth (or lack of it)?

But perhaps we expect a little more from the "greatest band in all rock and roll?" Therein the problem lies.

As the title aptly suggests, the thematic intention is to do some "soul-searching." But unlike other old heroes, who could easily be running the Gideons to every sleazy motel along the highway, this outfit doesn't have to resort to fear tactics. Rather, their approach these days is quite basic—self-mockery, relating to the instinctual desires of their audience, and just plain fun.

The album's first cut, "Dance (Part One)," is a state-of-the-mind/times' response by the Glimmer Twins on their residency in the Big A. From the opening holler: "Hey Keef, watchoo doin'?" and the back-up cawing of Max Romeo, with its implied sense of funk and hedonism, the song illustrates an awareness of the present condition. But with lines like: "It's time to get up/Get out/Move onto something new," it suggests a restlessness to be released from stagnation.

"Summer Romance" is a just-o.k. dance tune which never pretends to be anything more. Keith Richards' guitar work shines here, with the Chuck Berry licks that make the listener ask "Is it live or is it...?"

Then comes the "ethnic" songs of the album—three of 'em. One is Godawful. Two are not. And even the bad one is pleasantly Godawful. "Indian Girl" just doesn't come off as sincere in its presumed attempt to show compassion toward the daughter of a mercenary soldier. Though Jagger tries to show an up-to-date concern about the father who's "fightin' for Mr. Castro in the streets of Ang-o-o-la," the mundaneness of the song's chorus might be a convincing argument that Mick Jagger flunked his high school creative writing class. But, as I've said, the melody is pleasant enough. Still, I'd take "Angie" for sentiment, and put this with "As Tears Go By" and "Tell Me," and the bulk of Cat Stevens' work on a K-Tel solid gold of Hits to Peal Onions By.

The other two songs with a more continental flair are very listenable. One, the reggaeish "Send It to Me," seems a response to those pluralistic forces which chastised the Jaggered One for his racial inuendos on the last album's title cut. It's replete with invitations to women of various national demoninations—"She might be Hungarian/She might be Yukranian/She might be Australian/She might be the alien," all under the framework of postal service: "Send it to me." And you just know Mick is gonna make the girl pay the C.O.D. bill. With regard to criticism of this particular cut, it's obvious to me from her written wincing in Rolling Stone that Real Paper critic Ariel Swartley is long overdue in paying her N.O.W. membership fee. Either that or she's never really gotten over "Under My Thumb."

Only the Stones could make misogynistic minced-meat out of the trendy, Latin American form of left-wing purism. I've often thought that a "Rock Against Reggae" has been a long time coming. Thanks Mick and Keith. And "Death to the Ska!"

"Down In the Hole" shows the Stones' adept-as-ever in existing on the seedier side. "Youll be scrounging for cigarettes/Hunting for nylons/In the American zone" is blues gone to Berlin. Mick reigns supreme. The gay songs aren't to be scoffed either. "Where the Boys Go," in addition to its "Saturday Night" inferences about where the male of the species would prefer to spend their time, is a two-fisted punch. Not only does it flirt with the phoney gay, chic lifestyle, but it seeks to explore the fascination of women (and not dykes) attracted to that gay, chic lifestyle. One more strike

Internships:
Fact or Fantasy?

Practical experience before graduation in a major related job is a fantasy no more. It's an internship and it's happening now.

The Office of Internships, located in 16 Curry Hicks Field House, can help you plan for such an experience. The Internship Program helps students identify internship sites, select an appropriate faculty sponsor, maintain the student's records related to the Internship, and supervise the on-site experience.

To qualify for a full-time Internship you must have a 2.0 cum, 45 credits toward graduation and be in good academic standing.

Eligible undergraduates from all academic disciplines can apply to any of the over 1,000 agencies that have requested student interns through the Office of Internships. Placements are primarily within the Northeast region including all of Massachusetts, New York City, and Washington D.C. You can intern full time for a semester or part time for a few hours per week. All interns are full time students.

A faculty sponsor will guide you in integrating the Internship experience with your academic program as well as working with you in determining the number of credits you can receive.

It is possible to receive up to 15 credits for a full-time Internship. Internships are available for the Fall, Spring or Summer semesters. The best Internships can require a search of several weeks. Therefore, if you are considering one for the Spring its best to start soon.

The Office of Internships' staff will help you complete all the steps toward your Internship experience through both small seminars and individual appointments. With a counselor you will decide which Internship sites are best for you. If, for example, an Internship you want is not in our resources, we will help you identify other sources for placements. In addition, we will help you write your resume.

The Internship Program is the place on campus where practical experience, before graduation, related to your major, for credit can happen.

Ensemble Auditions Upcoming

If you play an instrument or like to sing, the Department of Music and Dance can provide an ensemble experience for you. All of the Department's ensembles are open to non-majors by audition. Auditions will take place during the first week of class and you may contact the Department for the time and place of the audition.

Instrumentalists specializing in band instruments may audition for the Wind Ensemble, the Symphony Band, the Chamber Winds, Brass Choir, Percussion Ensemble, or participate without audition in the Minutemen Marching Band.

Jazz instrumentalists may audition for the Jazz Workshop I and II, or the Chamber Jazz Ensemble.

Orchestral instrumentalists may audition for the newly formed Smith UMass Symphony Orchestra, The Group for New Music, and string players may audition for the Five College Chamber Soloists, or the UMass Chamber Orchestra.

Singers can audition for the University Chorale, Chamber Choir, Madrigals, the Vocal Jazz Ensemble, the Performance Workshop for Singers (Opera Workshop), or the Choral Class.

Persons interested in Early Music may audition for the Collegium Musicum and in some cases receive free instruction on the early instrument.

Airplane

A disaster flick 'you'll love to hate'

AIRPLANE!
A Paramount Pictures film. Written and directed by Jim Abrahams, David and Jerry Zucker. Produced by Jon Davison. With Robert Hays, Julie Hagerty, Lloyd Bridges, Peter Graves and Robert Stack.

By JIM MORAN
Collegian Staff

"Flying an airplane is just like riding a bicycle—except it's a little harder to put the baseball cards on the spokes."

Such is the wisdom of Paramount Pictures' Airplane!, a magnificent parody of all those great disaster films you love to hate, complete with a little girl passenger who will die if she doesn't get a heart transplant. But the film is more than that—it's also a "nothing is sacred" attack on all the little hang-ups, quirks and just-annoying features of life in the post-1960's, socially-aware, media-immersed, liberal guilt trip-ridden society.

Starring Robert Hays, as Striker—an insecure, war-shocked Air Force pilot wh is challenged by stewardess girlfriend (Julie Hagerty) to act like a man and "take a job with Boeing," the plot centers around what happens when Striker follows his love on board a plane en route to Chicago and is forced to forget the agonies of his war experiences for the sake of saving the passengers on this vehicle, who are about to crash because the crew and some of the passengers were doing something fishy. And the zaniness ensues.

What makes this film even better, though, is its ironic cast: Peter Graves, Lloyd Bridges, Leslie Nielson and Robert Stack, all veterans of the so-called "action" films. (Where's the Duke when we need him?) Graves is splendid in his deadpan delivery of pederastic innuendoes to a young male passenger. Bridges is believable, if sometimes annoying, in his portrayal of the hard-assed control tower technician who has a penchant for uttering "Boy, it looks like I sure picked the wrong day to give up (various drugs)." Stack is typecast-perfect as off-duty pilot (read "man who saved the day") Rex Kraemer, who is brought to guide Striker via radio to runway. This interchange could well be labeled Kramer vs. Striker. Of course, I'd always thought Stack would be perfect for the part of Tom Ellis in Around the News in Eighty Stares.

The flick contains some marvelous digs at religious cults, the Peace Corps, black jive-talkin', homosexuals, Ronald Reagan, the media, nuns, overdone movie themes, overused cliches and disco, among others. Watch for cameos by Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, Howard Jarvis and Ethel Merman.

One really humorous moment occurs when a little boy, acting very much the little man, approaches a little girl sitting by herself, and makes one of those really-typical pickup lines. Offering her a cup of coffee, he asks her how she takes the beverage. You'll crack up over her "socially-aware" response.

Another of the movie's many rib-ticklers, is the scene where an old lady, who looks like one of the last remnants of the Temperance Society, gapes condascendingly at the man across the aisle who is swigging down a bottle of whiskey. When he asks her if she'd like to partake in some, she moans, "Cer-tain-ly not!" in eloquent biddy-esque fashion. Seconds later she's spooning coke up her nostrils. Superb!

Written and directed by Jim Abrahams and David and Jerry Zucker, the team responsible for 1977's Kentucky Fried Movie, this film is one of the funniest I've ever seen. With all the terrific technical effects and great, trashy, throwaway lines, I doubt you'll ever see it on the telly. So if you haven't been to Airplane! yet, make your reservation now. And if you have, ignore this review and go see it again.

Beck Opens Season

UPC Predicts Good Fall

By JAMES F. MAHONEY
Collegian Staff

The Union Program Council, the entirely student-run and student-funded concert production organization, is peering optimistically at the year ahead, said Frank Gironda, newly elected talent coordinator.

The Jeff Beck Group is currently the one booked and confirmed act, although Gironda said the Council, over the next few weeks, will confirm and announce other shows.

The Council will institute a new ticket policy this fall. Prices for shows will be increased one dollar when purchased at the door the day of the show. Publicity Director Justin Griswold explained the reason as one of logistics. Last year, many students waited until the last minute creating a difficult situation for concert organizers. He hopes the price raise will be incentive for any early purchase. "It will also make it easier for us (the Council) to determine how well we did for a show (in terms of sales,)" Griswold said.

A difference in student and public ticket prices will also be implemented Griswold said. "This will give the Council more of an opportunity to offer the students the best deals," he said.

The Council has approximately 125 students involved in the array of activities necessary to produce and promote the numerous shows. Gironda said the Council is open to any interested student. Some areas in which students can get involved are: security; hospitality; promotional and publicity responsibilities; and even artwork and design. An organizational meeting is scheduled for September 9.

UMass is a popular stopping ground for many major acts because of the successful events held in the past. Gironda said the University has an industry-wide reputation for being an easy going place to work.

"We're not considered a school by many of the acts because of the organized way we work with the groups," Gironda said.

Gironda supported this statement by pointing out the Kinks, who twice passed up concerts in Springfield and instead played at UMass. In fact, he said, three cuts from their last concert here were used in their recently released live album.

The Council plans to bring five to six major acts to UMass this fall. Along with the major shows there will be weekly bookings at the Blue Wall bar in the Campus Center.

Theater Dept. Schedule

The University's Department of Theater announces its schedule of performances for the Fall semester:

"Fashion" will be performed in the Rand Theater, October 23-25, 30 & 31 and November 1.

"The Bride" will be performed in the Curtain Theater November 19-22, with a mati eead an evening performance November 8.

"George Dandin" will be performed in the Curtain Theater November 19-22, with a matinee and an evening performance November 22.

"Henry Sparrow" will be the Department's final production of the season with performances scheduled December 4-6, 11-13 in the Rand Theater.

A Theater Department spokesperson said, "Tickets are generally $3 for students and $5 for the general public, but prices may vary with particular shows." Evening performances usually begin at 8 p.m. Further information can be obtained by calling the Theater Department Box Office at: 545-3511.

Concert Season Starts Sept. 7

A two-day "Festival Showcase of Performances" will mark the opening of the concert season at the University. Beginning Sunday, September 7, the festival will present the faculty of the Performing Arts Divison (PAD), the University Department of Music and Dance, and the Five College Early Music program in three recitals.

PAD Coordinator Susan Huettman said, "The performances offer area residents and students of all ages an opportunity to experience a unique display of vocal, instrumental, keyboard and dance talents." Recitals, she said, will be held in Benzanson Recital Hall in the Fine Arts Center and are open to the public without charge.

The Festival is scheduled to begin at 2 p.m. next Sunday with an Open House and Inquiry Sessions, sponsored by PAD faculty from the Department of Music and Dance. Faculty will be present to meet informally with guests interested in participating in dance, chamber, string or woodwind ensembles and children's performance groups. Special offerings in harpsichord, reading figured bass, auditioning for Broadway and nightclubs, choral conducting, reedmaking for oboists, instrumental repair, piano class, and introduction to the basics of music are but a few of the classical and popular music studies for the Fall semester.

At 3 p.m. the same day, the music and dance faculty of the Division will present a showcase of dance, vocal, piano, organ, guitar, flute, oboe, trombone, clarinet and bassoon performances.

Continuing the program, at 8 p.m. the Department of Music and Dance will present JoAnne Tanner, flute, and Charles Lehrer, oboe, in recital, with the assistance of Dorothy Ornest on piano and other department faculty members.

The concluding performance of the two-day festival will be held Monday, Septmeer 8 at 8 p.m. Alice Robbins, viola da gamba, Emily Samuels, recorder, and Frances Fitch, harpsichord, will present a recital of trio music co-sponsored by the Five College Early Music program and PAD.

The festival is held in conjunction with the Walk-In Registration of the PAD, September 2-12, for group instruction. Private instruction registration is on-going throughout the year. Application for credit study may be done through Friday, September 26. For complete information call 545-0519 or visit the PAD office in the Old Chapel.

SSO Auditions

Season Opens Sept. 26

Wayne Abercrombie, the Choral Director for the Springfield Symphony Orchestra, has announced there will be auditions for those interested in singing in the Springfield Symphony Chorus.

The auditions will be held at the Old First Church, in Springfield, on Saturday, September 6, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Auditions in Amherst are available, but one must send a letter to the Symphony Office, which is located at 56 Dwight Street, Springfield, Ma. 01103 requesting an appointment. You will be notified regarding an audition appointment.

Rehearsals are held every Tuesday evening at Springfield College. Members of the 150 person choir come from the greater Springfield area and are from more than 20 surrounding towns.

Abercrombie said that although many of the chorus members study voice privately or at area colleges, anyone who has had background in church choirs or other singing groups are welcome to audition.

The auditions will consist of three parts: a prepared piece, vocalizing – following the conductor's direction – and sight reading. Further information about the auditions may be obtained by calling Joyce Carter, in Wilbraham, (413) 596-8651, or Betty Greenaway (413) 737-1960. Audition appointments must be made before September 3.

A Gala Performance will mark the September 26 reopening of Symphony Hall in Springfield with the performance of the "Finale" of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 in D Minor.

Other scheduled performances will include Mahler's' Symphony No. 2 in C Minor, "Resurrection" with guest soprano, Sharon de Fremery and mezzo-soprano Linn Maxwell, followed by the Chrismas Pops on December 12, with Richard Hayman. Verdi's Requiem Mass is also planned to be performed in the 1980-81 season.

Craft shop offers skills, gifts for (almost) nothing

By FRAN BASCHE
Collegian Staff

There's no credit, no classes, no sign up and you can "know nothing," and still walk out with a handmade pair of sterling silver earrings, a belt or mug.

The Student Union Craft Shop is used by about 6,000 students per year, yet many pass through the Student Union by way of the Hatch and never notice the shop, now in it's tenth year of operation.

Penny Worman, who runs the shop, said students can make a simple pair of earrings for about $1.50, a belt, depending on the width and buckle for about $2 to $5 and up, and a mug, bowl or pot for about 50 cents.

There are six student instructors on hand to teach the arts of: jewelry making, leather, photo darkroom, pottery, woodworking, silk screen, stained glass as well as helping repair broken goods. Use of tools, including a soldering iron, and the instruction is free. The shop is funded through the Campus Center fee each undergraduate student pays, Worman said.

"People think they shouldn't come in because they don't know anything," she said. "We'll teach them."

"Sometimes people didn't even know they're good at something," she said.

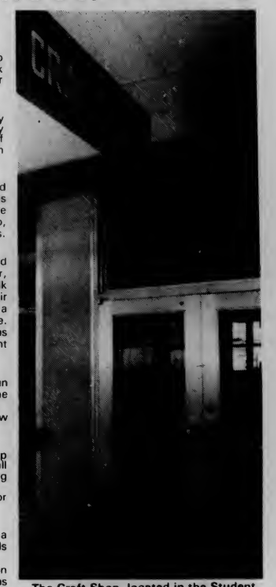
The majority of students who use the shop make presents, she said, and the fall semester is usually busier than the spring because of the holidays.

"Now's the time to get ideas going," for holidays she said.

This semester the shop will offer films a few afternoons a week on the various tools in the shop and how to use them.

"It's just for fun. You can come in anytime," she said. Worman, who has directed the shop for nine years, said the budget is flexible, ordering materials and tools as need indicates.

The shop is open Monday through Friday, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. and 12 to 4 p.m. on Saturdays. It opens today.



The Craft Shop, located in the Student Union, opens today. UMass students can make jewelry, leather goods and pottery and pay only for the materials used. Instruction is free and available for all crafts. If you are thinking about making holiday gifts, start now and avoid the rush.

Tours Slated For Fall

If you have a passion for bicycle riding and would like to be involved in an organization which promotes the sport, then why not look into the Bicycle Club.

The club is interested in promoting touring and racing activities for Amherst area bikers. Bicycle club members will also be sponsoring intercollegiate races this fall.

Touring is the most frequent Club activity. Day and weekend overnight tours are the most common events. These tours are usually in the New England region. They vary from 10 and 20 miles a day to "century tours" which involves rides of over 100 miles a day.

Tours have included going to Vermont, to see the fall foliage, and to Martha's Vineyard. Longer tours the club has ventured on, have included three weeks in Florida, during the winter intersession, and the annual Spring break tour (past trips have been to South Carolina, Virginia, and Tennessee).

The Club has weekly meetings which are open to anyone interested in bicycling. The meetings usually have slide presentations and often include maintenance and repair demonstrations. Planning for future trips, tours and races are also discussed at the meetings.

UMass Council Supports Arts

Grants Available in Fall

The University of Massachusetts Arts Council has expressed a financial commitment to the many areas of artistic endeavors on campus. The Council is an arm of the Campus-shared governance system which is composed of students and faculty appointed by the respective senates: undergraduate, graduate and faculty.

Other groups on campus which serve as ex-officio members on the council included representives from the Student Activities Office, the Fine Arts Center, PAUMA, the Provost's office and the Arts Extension Service. The Councils' primary goal is to dispense the $3 per semester Fine Arts fee which is levied upon Undergraduate and Graduate students.

The Visual Arts programs have always received constant support from the Council via grants to the University Gallery, Herter Gallery, the Augusta Savage Gallery, and the Hampden and Student Union Galleries. Funding is also available for special projects in the visual arts field.

The performing arts at UMass is another area which is heavily supported by the Council. Music, in many diverse areas has received a balanced allocation of funds from the Council. During the academic year, '79-'80, the Council has worked with the Union Program Council, the UMass Department of Music and independent agents to bring to campus a varied selection of musical talent and artists.

Among last year's shows include Todd Rundgren, Leiderkreis, Bonnie Raitt, Elaine Bonazzi and Papillon.

The theater, dance and film programs have also been supported by the Council. Successful production of The Royal Dancers and Musicians from the Kingdom of Bhutan last March is one of the many highlights from last year and the Council looks forward to a bright fall.

Council Chairman Trevor Robinson recently announced the Council is accepting applications for funding of artistic programs for the fall semester. Any Campus group, organization, department or individual who is interested in applying for Council's support can obtain an application from the Arts Council office in room 215 Herter Hall. Any questions relating to applications should be directed to the office during the working day.

Through all it's activities, the UMass Arts Council continues to uphold the belief that student voice and representation in the area of arts presented on campus will help to provide the university community with a diverse, but balanced exposure to the world of art.

Wheels Spin At Coop

The Bicycle Cooperative is an entirely student-run enterprise, located near the Student Union Ballroom entrance, that sells bicycle accessories and parts at low cost.

It maintains a work-shop, which for a modest rental fee, is available for bicycle repairs. The coop will order special parts if you need them for your bicycle.

Bicycle Coop members receive a discount, but to qualify you must work a minimum of number of hours per week. The Coop, however, may be used by anyone in the University community. As a cooperative, decisions on policies are made democratically at the Coops' periodic meetings.

GREEKS PROVIDE OPTIONS

By JUNE KOKTURK
Special to the Collegian

There are 1200 "brothers and sisters" who live, eat, and work together in 24 fraternities and sororities at the University of Massachusetts.

The so-called Greek living option provides students "a home environment with opportunities to meet students who are involved with many aspects of student activities such as student senate, campus publications, and many others," said Greek Area Director Leslie Chambers.

The 14 houses of the Inter-Fraternity Council and the eight Sororities' Panhellenic Council sponsor campus events each year including The Student Union Plant sale, the Winter Carnival, Homecoming Activities, and other alumni programs.

Twenty-two fraternity and sorority members also conduct The University Tour Guide Service for prospective students and their parents.

Membership recruitment or "rush" is done twice each semester, particularly during September. Each Fraternity and Sorority sets up tables in the Campus Center to answer questions about the Greek living option, what "rush" is all about, parties and open houses.

A hypercurricular sampler:

Whatever your penchants or needs there are as many things to do, see, and digest at this University as there are germs in your mouth.

If you want to get some foodstuffs at three in the afternoon or morning, go for a swim, take a quiet walk, smoke a joint, talk to someone about legal or academic problems, jump off a cliff or out of plane, call CUMQUATS, stroll through the sewers or a combination of any of the above, it's all here for the taking.

Here is a partial listing of both on and off campus places, things, and activities available to anyone regardless of race, national origin, religion, or grade-point average.

Even a pass through the Campus Center and Student Union shows a smorgasbord of shops, information table, eateries and hang-outs.

The Hatch is probably the most popular hang-out on campus. It has some of the most talked about coffee and food around. There are about 400 to 500 students in there every day at lunchtime. It's a place to talk, study or just kill time between and during classes.

A bar will be open in the Hatch this semester because the Blue Wall is closed for a facelift until the end of September. The Top of the Campus Restaurant and Lounge becomes the Almost Top of the Campus until October. The 11th floor is closed for renovations but the operation has been moved to the 10th floor.

The best place to spend all your money in one afternoon is the pinball arcade near the Hatch. The buzzers, lights, and lure of pseudo-competition attract people like flies to garbage. It is still fun though.

The games room across from the Hatch offers pool, pingpong and foozball tables that can be rented by the hour.

The coffee shop is just as crowded as the Hatch but has slightly more varied fare.

The Newman Center is usually less crowded and offers about the same food. There's only two ancient pinball machines there though.

For a quick coffee and donut on the way to class there are also tables set up in the entrances to Herter Hall and the School of Business Administration (SBA).

Tables, umbrellas and food make up the newest feature on campus, aside from the torn-up roads, the Flagstone Cafe. It's located on the plaza level outside the Campus Center.

So much for coffee and donuts.

Aside from those places, you can spend some loose time or even study in the Music room on the Campus Center Concourse. It's quiet and you can sit down and listen to some favorite music with headphones. There is the lower level of the campus center, called the catacombs by some, to relax, read or talk.

The other extreme of the TOC is the Bottom of the Campus (BOC). Located in the dark and damp recesses of the Campus Center, it provides a haven for users of illicit drugs, musicians or both.

It goes blink blink and is called the flashcube. "IT" is the box-shaped room at the top of the Grduate Research Tower.

There is a nice and different view of the campus and the graffiti is beginning to rival that of the New York subway system.

Earthfoods in the Student Union specializes in healthfoods. Even for the non-organic minded it is an alternative to the cheeseburgers and coffee of the Hatch.

Other quiet places to relax are the lounges in the Student Union and 9th floor lobby in the Campus Center.

Along with your daily ingestion of caffeine and bagels you can pick up a newspaper at the Newman Center or the Student Union News and Candy Stand.

These are the obvious places around campus.

There are hundreds of Recognized Student Groups on campus that cater to just about every need and taste. These include the record coop, the stereo coop, the sports coop, the outing club for camping and hiking gear rentals, the sport parachute club, the ski club, and others.

Two offices in particular are usually unknown to most students but are there when you need them. The University Ombudsman can help you out with academic or other problems with university red tape, and the Legal Services Office provides free legal aid in non-criminal matters including landlord-tenant disputes.

For the culture-minded there are inumerable plays, shows, concerts, films, art exhibits and lectures on campus each semester. Keep an eye on bulletin boards and in the Collegian for announcements.

Those are only a few of the most obvious things to do around the area but it is usually the unusual and exotic activities that entertain the most. Many say a casual walk through the UMass sewer system is quite theraputic if not a bit slimy. The chain-link maze out by the University stadium is something to try some day, but be sure to get out by nightfall. Puffers Pond in North Amherst is a popular spot for swimming. There is a diving cliff and a rope swing to show your bravery and gracefulness or corresponding lack thereof.

This is only a partial list of things to do, see and eat while in Amherst. If you keep your eyes and ears open and clean, you will notice more.

The Box Office will be continuing its policy, begun last spring, of accepting telephone reservations two weeks before each event. After being reserved, tickets will be held for three working days, during which time patrons can mail or bring a check to the Box Office. Those who wish to have tickets mailed to them should include a self-addressed, stamped envelope with their checks; otherwise, the tickets will be held. Tickets not paid for within three days will be released for sale, in order to minimize the possibility that tickets may remain unsold. The last day for payment of reservations is two working days before each performance.

As of Monday, September 1, 1980, single tickets for all the events on the 1980-81 Concert Hall season schedule may be ordered by mail from the Box Office. Students, as well as the general public, may obtain tickets without having to visit the Box Office in person. When ticket orders and payments are received, whether by mail or in person, the orders are filed as received and the checks deposited. Two weeks before the performance, the tickets are pulled; if the patron has included a self-addressed envelope, the tickets will be mailed out. Otherwise, they will be held at the Box Office.

On-campus parking for Fine Arts Center events is available at no charge after 6 p.m. on weekdays and throughout weekends. The lots most convenient to the Concert Hall are less than a five-minute walk away: Lot 62 is across North Pleasant Street from the Fine Arts Center; Lot 71 is behind the Whitmore Administration Building; and Lots 32 and 34 are across Massachusetts Avenue from the Haigis Mall. Fine Arts Center patrons may also park in the Campus Center Garage, which charges a nominal fee.

The Fine Arts Center staff invites the comments of its patrons on programming, services, and other matters of concern; contact Concert Hall Manager Barbara Aldrich or Publicity Mananger Monica Faulkner at (413) 545-0190.

The Fine Arts Center Box Office is open Monday through Friday between noon and 5 p.m. On performance evenings, the Box Office opens one hour before curtain time and remains open until the end of the first intermission so that patrons may purchase tickets for future events. When there are Saturday and Sunday evening Concert Series performances, the Box Office will be open between 1 p.m. and 5 p.m. as well as one hour before the performance and until the end of the first intermission. The Box Office telephone number is (413) 545-2511. All checks for tickets should be made out to "Fine Arts Center Box Office."

Copies of the brochure for the 1980-81 Fine Arts Center Concert Hall season are available on request from either the Concert Series Office (129 Herter Hall; telephone 413-545-0190) or from the Box Office.

TASTE THE BEER THAT OUTSELLS MOLSON GOLDEN IN CANADA: LABATT'S.

Good news!
Labatt's, Canada's No. 1 selling beer, is now imported to the U.S.
So, now it's easier to compare the taste of our Labatt's with the brew of our friendly competitor
See what you think.
We, like most other Canadians, prefer a bottle of Labatt's Beer over a Golden.
If we didn't, we'd likely be drinking Molson® instead—and we certainly wouldn't be running this ad.

against faghags! And the interplay riffs between Richards and Ron Wood are, honey, just flawless. It would be great though, if on the next tour, Mick and Connie Francis could do a duet with Jagger covering her "Where the Boys Are" and her on this number.

"Let Me Go" is as good as any fast song from the Sticky Fingers/Exile period. Maybe Mick will "become a playboy/Go to gay bars/And move to the West side of town?" And maybe we suppose he already has?

The title cut is a parody of Barry, Maurice and Robin a.k.a. the Bee Gees, as we've been told. The "oooh-oooh, oooh-hoo, oooh,oooh,oooh" falsetto of "Miss You" is dragged to full proportions here. And it works well. I disagree with critic Lester Bangs in his assessment of this song ("The Stones Cruise on Eighth Street," Village Voice, July 23) because, although he's correct when he says it isn't "sexy," there is something unpretentiously mystical about Jagger's heavy breathed "I will be your knight in shigh-ning ar-mah/Riding 'cross the desert on a fi-i-ne Arab char-gah."

Along with the aforementioned, and "Let Me Go," "She's So Cold" is the third standout of this record. In fact, in its lyrical simplicity, this song further demonstrates the full dynamism that makes the group every bit worthy of their legendary status. To pull off a hit with the devoid-of-serious-thought words to this song is like doing a feature piece on Three Mile Island in Better Homes and Gardens. But they do it. Some samplers "I tried rewiring her/I think her engine must be permanently stalled." and "She's so cold/She was born in the Arctic Zone," or the cutesy throwaway "She's so cold/Ice Cream cold," set against a backdrop of mock-shivering delivery by Jagger, make this the silliest song since "I Know An Old Lady Who Swallowed a Fly."

"All About You" is Keith's usual, token offering in the vocal vein. It is the best love song he's ever done. About common-law wife, actress Anita Pallenberg, this one's full of put downs as blunt as "I'm so sick and tired/Of hanging around with jerks like you," yet bounces back with the ironic closing: "So how come I'm still in love with you?" Gone is the pretty boy voice of "Something Happened to Me Yesterday" and "Salt of the Earth," and the adolescent wail of "Happy" and "Before They Make Me Run," in place of which is a raspy, Dylanesque sound of a grown man hurt/questioning about his longtime girl, yet committed enough to say, "Oh, what the heck?" Also, hats off to Bobby Keys for the great sax job which carries this one meaningful song on the album.

No, maybe the Stones aren't as socially-influential or as lyrically-potent as days gone by. And, yes, maybe there are other bands who fill that gap better. But after hearing "we only bands that really matter," i.e. – the Clash, Gang of four, Public Image, Talking Heads, etc., though good they may be, I can honestly say that acts like the Stones, David Johansen, Johnny Thunders, the Ramones, the Undertones and even Led Zeppelin and the Who are the ones we come back to when we want to be moved to feel like a kid in love with rock and roll again.

Personally, I prefer Keith Richards conception on the matter: "Rock and roll starts from the neck down...Nukes may obsess your brain, but they really don't obsess your crotch!...Rock and roll: it's a few moments when you can forget about nukes and racism and all the other evils God's kindly thrown upon us." And I don't think that's just a clever device for excusing a lack of ability, or will on his part (or the Stones) to be creative and socially inspiring anymore. I honestly believe he honestly believes it. I do.

Emotional Rescue is the logical follow-up to Some Girls. It is also a fine piece of "ahh" on its own account. Though lyrically impotent most of the time, though formulaic in conception, it is backed by enough high-energy music and interesting quips, and shows enough carefully-constructed producing to hold the interest of any Stones fan and the record-buying public in general.

And that wrap-around, oversized, Thermographic poster accompanying the album would be best placed on a glass firedoor, so as to obtain the full benefits of its two-facedness.

I am in agreement with Bangs on one point regarding this album: After reading some of the negative reviews given the Glimmer Twins latest effort, in the foreign and national press, I feel safe in saying that they'll all be eating their own words five years from now when they're spinning Emotional Rescue at the parties in their plushly furnished, fashionable apartments, and forgetting their original pre-conceived expectations of what a good Rolling Stones album should be.

Union still without contract; Negotiations resume today

By STEPHEN MORAN
Collegian Correspondent

As 1260 University of Massachusetts clerical workers, technicians and administrative services workers enter their third month without a union contract, talks are scheduled to resume today amid growing speculation that the union may take additional job action.

At the August 14 negotiating meeting, Brian Hayes, chief administration negotiator, abruptly walked out after University Staff Association officials presented him with a list of possible alternative actions. This list included informational picketing, leafleting, a phone campaign to congressmen and Board of Trustees, a sickout and possible authorization to strike.

Talks resumed the next day, however, and have been proceeding on a weekly basis.

Hayes, a partner in the Springfield law firm of Skoller, Abbott and Hayes, said the progress of the negotiations was "working out as it always does." He would not elaborate.

USA officials were less optimistic of a speedy settlement. Penny Schwartz, USA spokesperson, described the talks progress as "terrible", and voiced concern over the intransigence of the administration's negotiators, claiming that their tactics have stalled the signing of a new contract. "We are only trying to get the administration negotiators to abide by the normal process of collective bargaining," she said.

The union seeks a cost of living increase of approximately 25 percent for each year of the new contract. The administration refuses to negotiate salaries until all other issues are resolved.

These issues include abolision of the current dual pay rate system, which allows employees hired after 6/7/78 to be paid less than other employees in similar jobs hired before that date.

Fearful of possible layoffs due to the recent restructuring of public higher education which allows for a single Board of Regents to be employer for all state college and university

Housing snarls leave students without rooms

By STEVE DENSMORE
Collegian Correspondent

At least 250 students, most of them juniors and seniors, who paid for on-campus housing this semester have not yet been placed in dormitiories, according to Housing Assignment Coordinator Gerald Quarles.

"This is not a permanent problem," Quarles said, stating that most students should find openings by next week.

Quarles attributed the high number of unplaced students to procedural errors on the part of the students, such as late payment. "All those who followed the proper procedure have been accommodated," he said.

The number of available openings will not be known until noon today which is the deadline for dormitory entrance. At that time a census team from the Housing Office will begin a survey of residence authorities for a head-count and an accurate assesment of openings will be made.

Unplaced freshmen and sophomores will have priority on openings until 10 am Friday. Room assignments will then be given out on a first-come, first-serve basis, according to Quarles.

Junior, Mike Coleman, who has lived in Washington Dorm for the past two academic years, lost his room assignment because his payment form was post-marked one day late. Coleman admitted he was angry about the housing situation. "I guess they took too many freshmen in, but that's their problem not mine," Coleman said.

Quarles said that freshman admissions were up by 300 students over last years enrollment, but there were 200 fewer transfer students this year. Consequently, he said,

Library future Still uncertain

By JAMES F. MAHONEY
Collegian Staff

Although the Library staff is predicting smooth running this fall for the UMass libraries, there still remains an uncertainty about the future of the main library facility.

The main library, which held the bulk of the University's book collection up to last fall, has been an area of concern and trouble for both administrators and students since chips of its brick facade began to fall off shortly after it opened in 1973. The situation became so hazardous last fall that Chancellor Henry Koffler closed the structure and moved a majority of the volumes to Goodell Library.

Shortly after the closing of the building, Koffler appointed a special Task Force to investigate possible solutions to the problem of having no central research and study facility on campus.

The task Force, headed by Vice Chancellor Terence Burke, defined the problem of the library as going beyond its structural defects, stating that distribution of materials within the building was both confusing and inconvenient to an inexperienced library user.

Other trouble areas listed were that the building was originally designed to be a research facility, therefore not allowing proper flow in the closed stack environment of a library, and the "skip stop" elevator service was inefficient in moving large numbers of students during peak usage hours.

The committees reported included seven possible solutions to the problem. Those who received the report for evaluation were the library staff, the undergraduate Student Senate and the Graduate Student Senate. They in turn sent recommendations back to the Task Force indicating what

UMass Press

'We don't publish textbooks'

By KAREN D'AMATO
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Press is like a whisper that no one can hear for the trees on the front lawn. But a look inside the modest gray ranch house on East Pleasant Street reveals the wealth of energy, enthusiasm and efficiency that makes the UMass Press a dynamic voice.

Founded in 1964 when funding for higher education was plentiful and "university presses were springing up all over the country," the UMass Press has distinguished itself by its work," editor Richard Martin said.

"As a small press, we publish only the best," he said. The press, like most university presses, publishes works of outstanding scholarly and esthetic value.

"We don't publish text books," Martin said. "What we publish are books of interest to scholars and books of substantial scholarly background that might be of interest to the general reader in the northeastern United States."

He cited UMass Press books on the gypsy moth, trees and shrubs for attracting birds in the northeast, bicycling in the Pioneer Valley and Shaker furniture.

As a publisher, the UMass Press is responsible for soliciting, screening and selecting manuscripts for printing in book form, Director Leone Stein said.

One of 76 presses belonging to the Association of American University Presses, the UMass Press publishes a variety of books on history, natural history, poetry, women's studies and Afro-American studies.

"We're a small press," Martin said. "We do very good books, and very good books don't sell well."

But he said that UMass Press books are eeround the world to libraries, individual scholars, and to wholesale distributors for resale. Its $300,000 annual income is subsidized by $125,000 from UMass.

The UMass Press reports to the Office of the Dean of the Graduate School. Publications are approved by a 15-member committee including nine chosen by the UMass/Amherst Faculty Senate and two selected by Boston and Worcester faculty. The four permanent members include the Dean of the Graduate School, the University Editor, and the Director and the Editor of the Press.

Of more than 1,000 manuscripts and proposals considered annually, only 25 are approved by the Press Comittee because of a limited staff and the specialized nature of Press publications," Stein said.

A staff member since the press was founded, Stein said it is not the kind of place where "men have all the jobs and women do all the work."

Design and Production Manager Mary Mendell has received a number of awards for her book designs. This year, her work on Design: Purpose, Form and Meaning by John F. Pile was noted by both the American Association of University Presses and the American Institute of Graphic Arts.

Stein said women enjoy an equal role in the Press' operation. "It's a balanced staff," she said.

Stein and Martin present selected manuscripts to the committee for approval.

It is then revised, edited for style and sent to it's author for approval.

The production department then draws up design specifications and receives bids from outside printers and binders. Nearly half of the Press' publications are set in-house, Stein said.

Projects underway include a book about Ma Rainy, blues singer Bessie Smith's teacher, and one about Minnesota farmers who challenged installations of nitrate coal powerlines on their property.

Future frosh enrollment is expected to decline

Associated Press

BOSTON — New England colleges and universities enjoyed another fall of full enrollment, but the region's schools can expect incoming freshmen classes to shrink in the decade ahead as the nation's baby bust comes of age.

The Class of '84 arrives on campuses across the country this week, pushing enrollment to a projected 11.6 million at the nation's universities and junior colleges, according to the National Center for Educational Statistics.

The University of Massachusetts at Amherst reports a record setting freshmen enrollment of 4200.

Last fall, the center estimated total college enrollment at 11.5 million. In 1968, national enrollment stood at eight million.

New England schools, which boast 722,000 students, or 10 percent of the nation's college enrollment, did well again this year. Record numbers of freshmen are flocking to the 40 colleges and universities in the Boston area despite inflation and hefty tuition.

Freshmen enrollment at the Massachusetts Insititute of Technology is up by 50 students this fall to 1,097. Tuition is $6,200, up 17 percent. Northeastern University will have 100 more students than the 4,000 admitted last year. Tuition there rose from $3,135 to $3,600.

Tufts University expects 1,075 freshman, compared to 1,023 last year; tuition jumped from $5,050 to $5,850. In Worcester, Holy Cross College expects 662 freshmen, compared to 595 last year. Tuition is up to $4,600 from $4,250.

Harvard will have the same freshman class — 1,058 men and 584 women at Radcliffe — as last year, while tuition has increased from $5,300 last year to $6,000.

But education officials say crowded freshmen classes are short-lived. The National Center for Educational Statistics predicts that college enrollment will begin to drop in 1982 as the nation's declining birth rate shows up as a decrease in the number of graduating high school students.

"By 1982, the low birth groups are going to reach the traditional college age," says Richard Devine, a researcher for the New England Board of Higher Education. "That's when the small private colleges are going to feel the declines."

Devine says the decline will be slight at first, but by 1988, college enrollment is expected to be down by 700,000 nationwide.

To counter the decline, Devine says colleges will become more aggressive in recruiting new students.

"I think everybody is starting to do that," he said. "Some are being more aggressive in marketing themselves. Other colleges are looking at innovative programs to bring in students."

Mob damages fairgrounds

Associated Press

NORTHAMPTON — Security at one of the state's oldest county fairs was tightened yesterday, hours after a rock-tossing mob injured five persons and damaged an arena and several police cruisers.

State troopers and police officers from surrounding communities — who arrested eight persons — used tear gas to quell a melee involving more than 300 persons at the Three County Fair shortly before midnight Monday, police said.

Northampton Mayor David Musante said yesteday that fair officials agreed to ban liquor from the midway, bring in more police and stop free admissions after 10 p.m.

The four juveniles and four adults arrested during Monday night's disturbance were arraigned in Hampshire District Court and ordered to stay away from the fair-grounds for the remainder of the fair, which continues through Saturday.

Police called the disturbance the worst in the history of the 163-year-old fair.

"It gets worse every year," said Northampton Police Sgt. Jeffrey Brown, "but it's never been this bad. This year it was like a rock concert...The hot weather didn't help either."

According to Brown, the six officers onpaid detail at the fair were confronted with a crowd of about 300 when they went to the arcade to break up a fight between two men.

State police and police from Amherst, Hadley and Northampton responded to their call for reinforcements and started moving the crowd to another part of the fairgrounds when some in the mob began throwing rocks and bottles at police, officers said.

A new multi-purpose arena, under construction at the fairgrounds, was heavily damaged by rocks, as were several police cruisers, officials said.

One woman, hit by a rock, was admitted to Cooley Dickenson Hospital for observation, officials said. Other injured persons were treated and released.

Renovations create new campus image

By MARK L. CURELOP
Collegian Staff

The Blue Wall will no longer be blue after renovations are completed this fall.

Demolition teams started work August 26 and will be completed in 30 days, according to Jake Bishop in charge of Procurement for the University.

The two walls dividing the room into three sections are being made into "art forms" according to Campus Center Director Bill Harris.

The cost will be $9,899, said Bishop. Phillip Shumway of Amherst was awarded the contract for the first phase of demolition.

The general contractor bid for the Blue Wall is still open, said Bishop, but officials have allocated $170,000 for the job.

Harris said the Bluewall is "primarily a cafeteria which converts into a pub at night."

Live entertainment will not be available until the end of October when the labor is expected to be completed. Once the demolition is completed, however, and the tile floor is in place, the Bluewall will serve afternoon meals.

Harris said the name may be changed because the tone of the room will be changed to brown with only the one wall behind the bar remaining blue. The bar will have a cork top with white sides and the carpet will be brown.

The Top of the Campus Lounge is also being renovated at the cost of $61,581, Bishop said. The work started August 26 and is expected to be finished 90 days from that date.

Still in the planning stages are renovation proposals for the Hatch and Student Union Lobby.

The Hatch is in "talking stages" said Director of Auxillary Services Arthur Warren. One proposal is for a "Quincy Market type eatery," to avoid the cafeteria type lines, he said.

The plans for the Hatch are being done by a committee comprised of students and Campus Center Staff.

The Student Union Lobby project is open for bidding. All bids at this time are being referred to the Physical Plant before University approval.

SPRING CONCERT:

Year end festivities closely scrutinized

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The future of the UMass spring concert is up—in—the—air according to the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs' office and the University Program Council (UPC).

Vice Chancellor Dennis Madson, UPC and the Student Government Association are all working on evaluations of last year's concert that included such guests as the Allman Brothers and Bonnie Raitt.

Madson and UPC both agree that the type of large—scale concert held in 1980 is not desirable but some type of activity or concert will be held in the spring. Ideas will be examined and eventually decided on. Chancellor Henry Koffler and Madson will have the final say.

"We recognize that maybe it is not a good thing to have a concert of that magnitude but we want to have some concert. It would be a more mellow show, a more cultural show," said UPC President Frank Gironda.

According to Madson, the type of spring concert held last spring has problems that need to be addressed.

"I cannot support that type of activity," he said.

Madson voiced concern about the financial liability for last spring's concert. "It was considerable," he said.

According to Student Government Association treasurer Al Wallace the books are not closed yet on the concert but the deficit is about $30,000. Contrary to Madson, Wallace voiced no concern at all.

"The concert was a financial success," he said. "We gave out approximately 11,000 free tickets. If we had charged three dollars or less we would have broken out even."

"I would love to try it again... I know it would be a success," Wallace continued.

The deficit for the 1979 spring concert amounted to $2,000. According to UPC production manager Nancy Seraphin, the reason for the jump in the deficit was

Senate sends students to national conferences

The Student Senate coordinating committee this summer sent eight of its members and four other students to national student conferences in Washington D.C. and Eugene, Oregon at a cost of $3,700.

Sending representatives to both the American Students Association and the United States Students Association conferences was widely debated by the committee and criticized by some of its members.

Linda Geary, senate speaker, among others, criticized the cost of the conference and paying students salaries while they were attending the conferences.

"People received pay at the conferences. This was not a conference for pleasure. It was a business trip," said Richard Moran, student government co-president.

Moran, who attended the Washington conference, said some students might not have attended if they had not been paid, because they couldn't afford to lose a week's pay. He said most students paid for their own food.

Moran and five others drove to the ASA conference in Washington. They were: Al Wallace, student senate treasurer, Brian Burke, former SGA co-president, Candy Carlon of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy, Kevin O'Leary, who co-chairs the senate's finance committee and Ronald Reefe, of SCERA's public policy team.

Richard LaVoice, student trustee and SGA co-president flew to Oregon because, as a member of the USSA's board of directors, he had to be there one day earlier and stay one day later, Moran said. The other five students who attended the USSA conference were: Carol Grady of the Economic Development Office, Joel Weisman, a coordinating committee member and former coordinator of SCERA, Chip Nealy, John Hill of the Third World Caucus and Cathy Linn, of the senate's academic affairs committee.

Moran said the ASA focuses on educational issues such as financial aid, while the USSA considers social issues which interest students, such as nuclear power, abortion, and racism. He said membership dues for both groups totals about $300.

The costs of sending the representatives were paid by the office each person worked in, he said. For example the president's office paid for Moran and LaVoice while the Economic Development Office paid for Grady.

Some members of the coordinating committee and others involved in SCERA and the senate questioned the need for membership in both groups. Moran said he would like to see both memberships remain intact. The UMass involvement in both groups seems likely to continue, with or without senate approval because Burke was re-elected to the ASA's board of directors while LaVoice was re-elected to the USSA's board of directors.

The Southwest Women's Center seeks volunteers and interns to help staff the center, coordinate programs, conduct workshops, and develop special projects. Call 545–0626 or come by the SWWC (between Crampton and Mackimmie dorms in Southwest).

Woman's center seeks aid

Everywoman's Center at UMass/Amherst is looking for volunteers and interns to staff the drop–in and call–in resource and referral portion of EWC for the fall. Interns and volunteers provide information about health concerns; political, social and survival resources; medical and legal referrals; occasional crisis intervention. The EWC also updates and maintains the resource files, referral books, and self–use materials on many topics of concern to women.

Credit is available for this work for most UMass undergraduate students, and most single parents are eligible for a small stipend for this work through the Work Incentive Program (WIN).

For a job description and application form, see Ruth Fessenden, Resource/Referral Coordinator, Everywoman's Center, Wilder Hall, or call (413) 545–0883.

Deadline for applications for fall staffing is Wednesday, September 10. Interviews will be held as applications are received. Resource/Referral work begins Monday, September 22.

Folk singer Josy Latorre to give benefit performance

Taller Ausubo presents Puerto Rican folk singer Josy Latorre in a Latin American New Song Concert on Sunday, September 7, at 8:00 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom at UMass. Tickets are $2.00.

This is a benefit concert to replace Taller Ausubo's equipment and materials that were lost in a fire in North Village Apartments in July.

For tickets and more information contact the Commuter Collective Office at 545–0059. Tickets can also be purchased at tables in the Concourse of Campus Center at UMass and in Northampton at 'Fabrics of Life' and 'Bowl and Board'

TI Programmables lead the field in performance, quality and value. You don't have to know how to program to get all the benefits available with a TI Programmable. These solid state library modules are preprogrammed to help solve problems in: Engineering. Business. Finance. And other math oriented courses. With up to 5,000 program steps in each module you can save your own personal programming for those classes which need it most.

The TI-59 has up to 960 program steps or up to 100 memories. Magnetic card read/write capability lets you record your own custom programs or those received from PPX (Professional Program Exchange.)

The TI-58C features up to 480 program steps or 60 memories. And it has TI's Constant Memory™ feature that retains data and program information even when the calculator is turned off.

And free modules now give you that edge you need to succeed. From August 15 to October 31, 1980 is your special opportunity to purchase one of the world's most advanced programmable calculators. And get a minimum of $40 worth of free software modules with a TI-58C. Or, when you buy a TI-59, get a minimum of $80 worth of software modules and an $18 one-year membership in PPX. This will allow you to select up to 3 programs (from over 2,500) written by professionals in your field of study.

Editorial/Opinion

Why we print what we print on this page

"But for what purpose was the earth formed?" asked Candide.

"To drive us mad," replied Martin.

Candide
Voltaire

It is the will of the Universe that different opinions be held by different people. By communicating their views among themselves individuals come to more erudite conclusions, which helps them to act more intelligently, which betters the prospects for humankind's success. This, in much the same way that drivers, by allowing their eyes to wander occasionally from their cars' hood ornaments, manage to get out of serious traffic jams with only minor collisions occuring.

The Collegian editorial staff is not a group to contest omniscient forces. So we have made a few ground rules to provide an editorial section for a productive exchange of personal biases. This we term an "editorial policy."

First and most obviously, material submitted to the editorial pages that is substantially libelous will not be printed. This includes all letters, columns and editorials implying commission of a crime, tending to injure a person in his profession or job, inciting public ridicule or contempt, and so on, which the writer does not know to be true. Of course, this goes for news articles too.

Second, the Collegian does not uphold the right of the intolerant to act intolerably. This means we will not publish contributors to the editorial pages who express the opinion that their perceived enemies should be silenced (censored, sealed in their dorm rooms, cast forth into the desert, or otherwise denied their constitutional freedoms). The reason for this is simple: Such severe views block the process of information exchange by stifling individuals who should feel free to offer their views, uninhibited by intimidation. The existence of freedom of communication (which is the duty of the media to provide and an essential purpose of our government to protect) requires that all opinions be tolerated, up to the point where one excludes another's right to be expressed.

'...the editorial pages will not carry material that is blatently sexist, racist, or in some other way approximates an uncritical exhibition of its writer's malicious prejudices.'

An extreme example would be a letter the Collegian received last semester from a student who, responding to a column criticizing the nuclear industry, said all anti-nuclear activists should be put on boats and sailed out to sea where they would then be sunk by a "made to look accidental" attack of F-111 fighter-bombers. He was serious. The decision not to print this letter was effortless, but the matter is not always so clear. We are bound to make mistakes, to be too lenient or restrictive in some cases, because we are new at this. We will make a sincere effort to explain our errors.

Third, the editorial pages will not carry material which is blatently sexist, racist, or in some other way approximates an uncritical exhibition of its writer's malicious prejudices. This policy is consistent with the second (stated above) since prejudice is a form of intolerance. But, more importantly, this policy respects the glaring need at this University for our prejudices to be examined, rather than established. So, while the neuter "he" will continue to be an acceptable reference to a proper noun, feminine or masculine. Nazi propaganda, Ku Klux Klan ethos and P.J. O'Rouke style. National Lampoon editorials will not be printed.

This leaves a tremendous grey area between extremes; plenty of room for espousing capitalist patriarchy or socialist democracy or your favorite form of social and political organization—as long as it's not Nazism, etcetera.

A normal newspaper (one that is privately owned) earns its reputation as either "leftist" or "liberal" or "moderate" or "conservative" or "rightest" by handling this area in a particular way, in keeping with its publisher's policy of news selection. In the past, the Collegian, a publicly owned and run newspaper, has published letters, columns and editorials expressing differing views along the full gammut of the contributors' political spectrum, in reasonable proportion to the volume of each received. This has always seemed appropriate given that the Collegian owes its existence to the efforts of volunteer student contributors—all of them, from left field to right.

But we are going to share a secret with you, which isn't really a secret at all. It is instead something critics of public newspapers' editorial policies seem conspired to ignore: In journalism, as in real life, some opinions are better than others. What distinguishes a good opinion from a bad one is research. A good opinion is an informed opinion; it is also articulately stated. Columnists and commentators will be required to show evidence of having put a great deal of thought and effort into the material they submit. (This doesn't affect letter selection much, however. We try to print as many letters as possible).

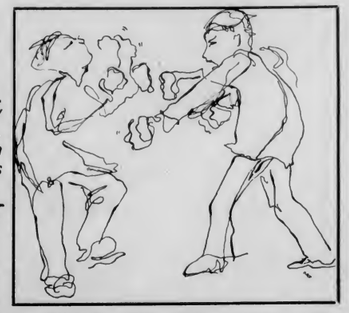
We feel our power to decide what bent the Collegian will take is derived democratically. This view is upheld by observing another occurrence in real life: A democracy is who participates in it. Democracy fails by this definition, however, when people are systematically excluded by entrenched participants from participating. For example, American democracy has become more undemocratic thanks to the efforts of our nation's leaders to make the critizen's vote ineffectual and difficult to cast (due in greater part to the electoral college and voter registration systems).

Has the Collegian developed exclusionary practices? No. At least not intentionally. There are things inherent in the way the paper functions which tends to keep certain kinds of people from wanting to contribute.

For one thing newspaper work, like politics, is show biz. Newspaper people love to entertain and impress—with what they, exclusively, know. Journalists ae essentially egotists, and a six piece collection of Collegian columnists' egos would fit tightly and convulsively into Boyden Gym. This is not to imply that their egotism is detrimental to their work—it is as respectable a motivation for effort as any—but its concentration here in the office can be a real turn-off to the timid and altruistic.

Another characteristic of the paper discourages the socially insecure: Collegian staffers, of which there are roughly 200 at any given point in a semester, often gain each other's friendship during their tendure. This isn't always the case, but we try to get along. The staffers on the upper end of the division of labor—the editors—tend toward greater chumminess because we work closer together and have necessarily known each other for at least one semester. When one editor writes a staff editorial he or she uses the first person plural "we" to indicate thoughts and actions refered to are a concensus of the group, for which the group takes responsibility. This is because we must make decisions as a team. Newspaper editing is a team sport.

We don't all sleep together or hire our outside friends to high-paying positions (aren't any), but we do go out for a drink now and then, joke about our academic terrors and have a thousand laughs. So we are good friends. Some people feel uncomfortable walking into this, as people will feel nervous upon entering a party they're invited to but where they know no one. But maybe they like the band, so they stay.



Perhaps by far the most important factor restraining wider participation is the casually held view that the Collegian is not a "good paper." We maintain that it has not been a "great paper" nor a "bad paper" either. It is a newspaper which, with some repairs, has the potential to be a rewarding paper, both for its contributors and its readers.

Think of this: Let's say you own a car. Your car on which you rely, to some degree, to run properly is not running well at all. It stalls in intersections and accelerates sporadically, often at the wrong times. There is a group of people known as mechanics who have certified themselves competent to repair your car. They have not, by the evidence, been doing a very good job. You might continue taking the car back to the mechanics hoping they've either improved with experience or have new personnel. Or you could learn to do some auto repairs yourself. Maybe you're too busy, are preoccupied with other things more crucial to you, or prefer not to hazard being associated with a group of incompetents. The mechanics shrug energetically at your complaints.

Students need friends in the Legislature

Pretty soon they won't have us UMies to kick around any more.

This summer, while we were all out frolicking on the beaches or struggling through boring jobs so we could afford to continue our educations, the legislature and our esteemed governor kicked sand in our faces. They picked on us, a seemingly poor, defenseless bunch, and bullied their way into a situation that seemed profitable to them.

It was called "reorganization" of public higher education.

Ed Levine

They created a so-called "superboard" of regents to run the public institutions in the state. Fifteen people, all chosen by the governor, 11 from business backgrounds, four from educational backgrounds. And of the 15 regents, only five have ever had experience governing an educational institution.

All the old boards of trustees were dissolved, including the UMass board, taking away any "local" representation we may have had in university-wide governance. Then, as an extra feature, they declined to place a student representative (from any campus) on the regents, and they probably never will. And since UMass/Amherst, although it is the state's largest public school, is in the hills of western Massachusetts, is not profitable or beneficial to commerce or business it will more likely be passed over in favor of schools in the more industrialized areas. Even though the chair of the board, James R. Martin (chairman of the board of the Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company), is from nearby Longmeadow, he probably won't be helpful to us.

But, most shocking of all, political cronyism really reared its ugly head in the method by which the regents were created. Gov. Edward (wish he was) King and a bunch of other reactionaries on Beacon Hill tacked the legislation onto the state budget, meaning the measure passes or all hell breaks loose when the budget is knocked down. Very neat, very fool-proof, very sleazy.

The legislature had no choice but to pass the proposal once it became part of the budget. Those who were smart to realize what was happening (a very small minority) expressed their frustration and outrage at being helpless to do anything about it. The rest of the apathetic slobs in the senate and house just sat back and let the thing go through, without giving one thought to what it may do or whom it may hurt.

Although the legislators probably won't pay for what they did, we most surely will. When our better professors begin leaving because they can't afford to feed their families on what UMass pays, when the library finally crumbles, when the buses stop running, when a UMass degree is worthless, we're the ones who are going to suffer. Not the politicians, who have already forgotten about their dastardly deed and are ignoring it in their re-election bids.

But we can't afford to forget. We must remember, right up until the time when we go to the polls to cast our votes. If we don't, we'll be throwing in the towel and surrendering. We have to stand up to them, to fight them, to let them know they can't kick us around like a cow chip. If we don't, they won't be able to kick around, because we won't be here.

Burt Reynolds, Sally Field bomb in "Smokey" sequel

By ROBERT B. CARGILL
Collegian Staff

Director Hal Needham and producer Hank Moonjean have made a big mistake.

Besides the fact that its plot is shallow, its dialogue trite, and its car and truck stunts are wholeheartedly cliche, "Smokey and the Bandit II" is a downright inane travesty of not only itself, but super-celeb Burt Reynolds, Sally Field, and the rest of the unfortunate cast who took part in this joke of a sequel.

"Smokey II" should never have been made.
Oh yes, big Burt is back, but as superficial as he's ever been, thus losing much of the respect previously gained from his roles in such films as "Starting Over," "The End," and of course, the original "Smokey And The Bandit."

Reynolds is the infamous Bandit, an obvious self-parody, as his own obsession for publicity practically proves a personal downfall. The Bandit returns to the highways because he's offered $400,000 to transport an elephant (Charlotte) to the Republican Convention in Dallas. Reynolds has evidently returned to the screen this time for the same reason—money. And Sally Field as Frog doesn't approve of his insatiated lust for fame both on and off the screen.

Field and Reynolds have consistently been the focus of those "rocky" romance-type rumors and their real-life hostility is easily identified throughout the picture's duration.

When Frog complains that Bandit lives for an occasional "Tonight Show enema," the connotations concerning Reynolds' actual guest-hosting of that show are more than obvious and are, in fact, particularly amusing. But "Smokey II" 's parodistic brand of humor is as far as the laughs go.

Also starring Jackie Gleason, Jerry Reed, and Dom DeLuise, along with Pat McCormick and Paul Williams as Big and Little Enos, the most believable performance in this mockery is given by Charlotte, the impregnated elephant, who gallantly allows herself to be transported across the Sun Belt in the back of Snowman's rig and, while in labor, sheds actual tears when Bandit coldly attempts to continue the trek, "pregnant elephant or not."

Tough task indeed, Burt, to make an elephant cry! And it won't be easy, either, to make up for this farce.

Now playing at the Hampshire 4.

DIGEST

The Associated Press

Reagan calls for slowdown of Japanese auto "deluge"

DETROIT (AP) — Ronald Reagan stood by an automobile assembly line yesterday and said the government should convince Japan to slow "that deluge of their cars into the United States."

Otherwise, he said, import competition could give rise to a new wave of protectionism in the United States.

With his call for federal pressure to curb auto imports, an endorsement of U.S. loan guarantees for Chrysler Corp., and a renunciation of an earlier suggestion of applying antitrust laws to labor unions, the Republican candidate pressed his quest for blue-collar votes in Democratic Detroit.

President accuses Reagan of promoting weapons race

INDEPENDENCE, MO. (AP)

President Carter accused Republican presidential nominee Ronald Reagan yesterday of calling for "a massive nuclear arms race against the Soviet Union" that would constitute "one of the most serious threats to the safety and the security and the peace of our nation and the world that is being dramatized in this 1980 election."

On the second day of his general election campaign, Carter came to the hometown of former Democratic President Harry Truman, one of his heroes and the only president ever to order the use of atomic weapons. Carter sought to separate Reagan not only from Carter's views but from those of all recent presidents of both parties.

Polish miner's strike persists despite government efforts

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Workers said 50,000 Silesian coal miners remained on strike yesterday despite statements by the communist government that it would meet the strikers' demands in an effort to end Poland's labor crisis.

In Katowice, center of Poland's vital mining and industrial region about 160 miles southwest of Warsaw, workers said 17 mines had been closed by strikes, idling some 50,000 miners and a number of workers in related industries.

Warsaw Radio reported that a government commission under Deputy Premier Aleksander Kopec had found the demands of miners at 10 coal pits to be "acceptable in their entirety" and that it was "ready to sign an agreement" with the joint strike committee.

Holiday weekend fatalities exceed last year's figure

AP — Traffic accidents across the nation during the Labor Day weekend claimed 521 lives — 19 more than died during the same three-day holiday period last year.

The tally is based on figures compiled by The Associated Press from all 50 states.

The National Safety Council estimated before the holiday period began that there might be between 450 and 550 traffic fatalities between 6 p.m. Friday and midnight Monday, when the count is made.

The largest death toll for a Labor Day holiday was 688 in 1968.

Syria and Libya will merge in defense against Israel

DAMASCUS, Syria AP

Syria agreed yesterday to yet another experiment with Arab unity — this time with the oil-rich North African nation of Libya. Some dipolmats questioned the practicality of such a merger.

Syrian President Hafez Assad said the result of such a move would be the consolidation of Arab defenses against Israel.

He messaged his approval of the unity plans to Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy, who proposed the idea in a speech Monday marking the 11th anniversary of the military coup that toppled the monarchy and propelled him to power. Sources said Khadafy would come here soon to firm up the merger blueprints.

Soviets spend $2 million to bribe Afghan tribesmen

NEW DELHI, India AP

The Soviet Union is spending vast amounts of money on bribes and private armies in its efforts to secure its hold on Afghanistan, members of the Afghan exile community here said yesterday.

The Soviets have paid $2 million in bribes in the past five months for the allegiance of the Paktia and Shinwari tribes south of Kabul, the capital, they said. In addition to cooperating with the Soviets, the tribesmen are supposed to block anti-Marxist Moslem rebels from operating in territory controlled by the Soviet-backed regime of President Babrak Karmal.

"Alexander the Great was blocked from passing through Afghanistan for 2 1/2 years before he learned to bribe the tribal chiefs to be allied with him," said one exile, a former Kabul official. "Now the Soviets have learned that."

workers, the USA wants layoff language included in the new contract. Such language would include preservation of seniority for the period of time members are laid off.

Also sought is a uniform 37½ hour work week. Currently, some USA members work 40 hours and others 37½ hours. Though job duties are similar, each receives the same salary.

The USA has established a crisis committee to study various options that may speed the negotiations. At its first meeting, committee members decided to distribute leaflets.

Distribution begins today in all UMass parking lots.

In a related incident, the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission has issued a complaint of prohibited practice against UMass. A meeting, scheduled for Sept. 17, will take place to decide whether 300 staff members ought to have USA coverage. The administration claims that these staff members are "confidential and managerial" employees. If those titles are substantiated, the USA cannot claim them as members. The meeting continues the process begun with the issuance of the complaint.

☆ Housing

there were one hundred more students than his office had expected.

Knowlton, a dorm in the Northeast Residential Area complex, is presently being renovated, and will re-open Friday, according to Quarles. Women who had been assigned to Knowlton have been temporarily placed elsewhere on campus until the renovations are completed.

Moving the 155 women into Knowlton will leave 140 openings in dormitories in Northeaast and Sylvan Residential Areas, where the women are temporarily residing. These openings will be made available to unplaced students on Monday, September 8th, in order to allow enough time for Knowlton residents to move in, Quarles said.

Robert L. Campbell, Director of Residential Resource Management, said the transfer, which is being handled and payed for by his office, may present some problems. "It may be a little clumsy for a while," he said.

Presently, no one is being placed in triple rooms or housed in the Campus Center Hotel, according to Quarles. He said most of the "roomless" students probably have gone home until openings become available today.

Quarles admitted it was possible that housing simply may not be available to some students this semester "In that case all payments will be refunded in full," he said.

☆ Library

they felt would be the best alternative.

Out of the seven possibilities, which Burke said were still open to variations, one was chosen unanimously by all groups as being the most viable. The option called for roofing of the courtyard and the subsequent relocation of the basic collection to the main level of the library. Also included will be the alterations of levels one and two to incorporate book stacks.

The Massachusetts State Legislature appropriated $2.5 million for "repair and renovations." Burke added the funds are not readily available for spending but will be when needed.

Burke added, construction is not scheduled for at least one year because the Task Force has not been quoted a firm price for the renovations. Another problem is all the consulting work relating to the exterior of the facility has yet to be completed, leaving in doubt the amount of money to be used to pay the consulting fees. The fees have already reached $100,000.

Although the estimated cost of the renovations has been projected at $1.73 million, Burke said they could not count on the figure staying unchanged over the course of the year.

In an attempt to find out campus opinion of the library system, the Faculty—Senate Library Committee will put a referendum question on the up—coming fall senate election. It will be directed to students in hopes of getting positive feed back to help correct the current situation of the library.

☆ Spring Concert

two—fold: dorm security and dorm policy.

"Security costs were seven times higher in '80 than in '79," she said. Seraphin estimated dorm security costs were approximately $14,000.

"The extent of dorm security that we were expected to pay for was an added burden that was not necessary," Frank Gironda, president of UPC said.

Seraphin also attributes the deficit to a dorm policy that was released two weeks before the concert. The policy that only 3500 guests were to be allowed in the dorms slowed ticket sales.

According to Madson, police and hospital reports show alcohol was another major problem with the spring concert. UPC agrees, stating that alcohol was one of the major problems, but they have definite plans to deal with it for all UPC concerts.

"No alcohol or containers of any type will be allowed in concerts, people will hand us their tickets and walk in empty Handed", Justin Griswold, press director for UPC said.

"We tried a picnic sort of atmosphere and it did not work," he said. "People did not co—operate, if they had, there would not have been any problems.

A large spring concert such as the one held last year is in jeopardy, Madson said. "I am hoping to come up with a spring activity for UMass students only."

"But things are not the same it seems as in tender dreams... And in between what might have been and what has come to pass, a misbegotten guess and bits of broken glass..."
— — — James Taylor

Between Ronald Reagan, Jimmy Carter, the US boycott of the Olympics, the Red Sox, the Slusher Four, JR Richard and John McEnroe's heroic defeat at Wimbledon, fans from all walks of life haven't had too much to cheer about this summer. Closer to home, UMass fans should have a few legitimate gripes as well. Certainly, football spectators might raise a curious eyebrow at this season's schedule which features an invasion of Alumni Stadium by the state of Delaware. Comparatively speaking then, this year's schedule is somewhat unimpressive. In other words, the Harvards, the Rutgers and the Armies are missing.

Secondly two fine athletes have had tough going and bad breaks recently. Sandro Vitiello appeared on his way to securing a spot as the Cincinnati place kicker only to find himself replaced by a free agent. Judy Strong, the talented and hard working field hockey star who made the US Olympic team had to, of course, sit out because of the boycott. Judy Strong, the talented and hard working field hockey star who made the US Olympic team had to, of course, sit out because of the boycott.

Finally and tragically came the news in June of the death of UMass basketball great Alex Eldridge of heart disease. His dazzling ball handling and playmaking used to make going to the Cage a sight for sore eyes.

But enough of this for now. Sports news also has its good moments along with its hilarious tales of sports journalism. Having recently been elected Co—sports editor of this dependable daily, and having earlier this summer held serious illusions of becoming the next Bud Collins (America's foremost tennis journalist and commentator) I travelled over to England to "cover" the matches at Wimbledon. I too wanted to sample the romantic, jet—set lives these affluent tennis superstars enjoy. After a quick jaunt to Paris, I was eagerly awaiting the Wimbledon "experience".

Little did I know that during the first week of matches it rained more than gasoline prices fluctuate. I happened to arrive just as one of many storm clouds passed by meaning I had only moments before the next shower approached. As it was the first day of the women's matches, I thought I would speak to Kathy Jordan, a promising young professional (who would eventually win the women's doubles with Anne Smith). Jordan knows an old friend of mine and having previously met her at the Avon Championships in Boston, I thought she would be quite impressed that I would come out of my way to speak with her. Wrong again, buffalo breath. Instead she thought I was bothering her and asked me not to speak with her along courtside. "Well exxccuuuuuuuuse me," I said and walked off just as another deluge soaked my Tretorns.

That night though (as the rest of the matches were cancelled that day) I was unexpectedly about to get my first interview. Searching for my flea bag hotel, I happened to pass the posh Gloucester Hotel enroute. As I walked I was passed by a young girl with the biggest set of (no fellas) white cowboy boots. It startled me enough to take noticed that it was Tracy Austin. To say the least I was flabbergasted and asked several innocuous questions as "How did your rain—interrupted match turn out?" and "Does the weather affect your concentration?" Her answers were "Fine" and "Not really"; not exactly the type of answers sports writers sink their teeth into.

And finally nothing could be more exciting and entertaining than watching Jimmy Connors as he performs on the tennis court. While his shotmaking is nearly flawless so too is his repertoire with a tennis raquet and balls. His use of his raquet as an erotic art form is unparalled, as is his placing of a tennis ball between his legs and reluctantly surrendering it to a ball boy. All in all it makes for an entertaining event—but sometimes NOT for the whole family. See you soon A.P.

Anyone interested in writing sports for the Collegian this fall should come to a staff meeting tomorrow at 7:30 at the Collegian offices in room 113 of the Campus Center. It will be at the sports desk, fall beats will be assigned.

McEnroe, Jaeger advance to quarter finals

By ALEX SACHARE
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK — Defending champion John McEnroe beat Pascal Portes of France 6-2, 6-4, 6-2 Tuesday to advance to the quarterfinals of the endurance test known as the U.S. Open tennis championships.

"Considering how hot it was, I played quite a few solid games," said McEnroe. "It was something like 120 degrees out there and you definitely feel it. You get careless sometimes because of the heat, but I didn't let that happen too much today."

Jimmy Connors, the No. 3 seed, was scheduled to play Bernie Mitton of South Africa in a night match.

McEnroe, who is seeded second, never was in any trouble against the 21-year-old Portes, getting a service break early in each set and then coasting.

"This was the best match I've played in the tournament," said McEnroe. "I've picked up my play with each match, and that's a good sign.

McEnroe next will face 10th-seeded Ivan Lendl of Czechoslavakia. Lendl enjoyed a stunningly easy 6-1, 6-0, 6-0 fourth-round victory over seventh-seeded Harold Solomon.

"I did everything right," said the 20-year-old Lendl, who won Wimbledon junior title in 1978 and captured the Canadian Open earlier this month when Bjorn Borg defaulted in the finals.

In women's play eighth-seeded Andrea Jaeger moved into the quarterfinals with a 6-3, 6-0 victory over Renata Tomanova of Czechoslovakia.

"At the beginning she was playing well, but I think she got tired in the second set," said Jaeger. "I started hitting the ball better and moving her around. If I see somebody getting tired, I usually pick up my game a little."

Also advancing to the quarterfinals were 14th-seeded Ivanna Madruga of Argentina and unseeded Barbara Hallquist. Madruga defeated Candy Reynolds 5-7, 6-3, 6-3, while Hallquist beat Lucia Romanov of Romania 6-3, 3-6, 6-3.

The women's quarterfinals will pit No. 1 seed Tracy Austin against No. 13 Pam Shriver, No. 3 Chris Evert Lloyd against Mima Jausovec of Yugoslavia, Jaeger against Madrugs and No. 9 Hana Mandlikova of Czechoslovakia against Hallquist.

Water crisis strikes UMass

By JIM KANE
Collegian Staff

A drastic reduction in the town's water supply yesterday left University Health Services and more than half the dormitories on campus with little or no running water. Town officials said they do not know when service will be restored.

Meanwhile, the Amherst Board of Selectmen declared a state of emergency Tuesday night banning the use of water for washing cars, irrigation, and other non essential purposes, said Chairman William C. Atkins.

Atkins said last night the state of emergency will allow Amherst to acquire water from Hadley, and the Metropolitan District Commission's Quabbin Resevoir.

Atkins said he did not know when service could be restored, adding, "It'll be tight until the first of October," when a new town well is expected to be completed. Construction of the well began after a similar water shortage occurred in September and October of 1978.

Officials from the Northeast, Sylvan, Orchard Hill, and Central Residential areas reported either very low water pressure, or no water at all last night. University Health Services was without any running water beginning at 7:30 p.m., according to Kathy Burbank, a nurse at the facility.

Barry Averill, executive director of health services, indicated that he would be seeking to acquire distilled water to alleviate the center's shortage.

Superintendent of Public Works Stanley Ziomek said, "With the tremendous consumption that occured with the opening of the University, we can't maintain a high enough water level in the tanks on East Pleasant St."

Dean of Students William Field said the problem was not a lack of water but rather that town water pumps could not work fast enough to meet the demand, causing the pressure to drop.

He said the crisis would not affect classes today.

Field, who is also Town Moderator, called on students and town residents to do everything possible not to use water.

He said the town has had the problems for many years. "We've always been afraid that the students would return during a dry spell," he said.

Town officials said the high-rise towers in the Southwest Residential Area were not affected because they are on relatively lower ground than dormitories in Northeast,

'Don't use the water...if you need to take a shower make it short and sweet.'

Sylvan, and Orchard Hill and Central Residential Areas.

Early last night, Ziomek said he hoped to be ablé to partially replenish the water supply overnight, but at that time, only three dormitories were affected. He could not be reached for comment later in the evening when other dormitories began reporting problems.

As of yesterday afternoon, Ziomek said, the water level in the town's tanks had dropped to 20 feet below its normal level.

"The problem is, we can produce 4 million gallons in 24 hours, but that amount is being used in 12 hours," he said.

Ziomek called the situation "serious," and called upon students and residents alike to conserve any way they can.

"Don't use the water if you don't need to, and if you take a shower make it short and sweet," he said.

He said both the town police and water departments would be enforcing the emergency water use restrictions, but "conservation by students and residents would be the greatest help."

UMass Physical Plant Director George Norton said he had notified the Department of Environmental Health and Safety and the University Student Affairs Office, and advised affected students to use facilities in other buildings on campus.

Committee oks SCERA reorg

By TIM FOWLER
Collegian Correspondent

After more than two hours of sometimes shouting debate the Student Senate Coordinating Committee last night voted to reorganize the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy.

Under the reorganization, SCERA, a recognized student organization that examines many legislative and social issues, will be controlled by the Student Government Association president's office rather than the Student Senate.

This same reorganization proposal, except for one word change, was defeated at the coordinatng committee's meeting last week.

Linda Geary, committee chairperson, said it passed last night because the meeting was attended by a different set of committee members than last week's meeting.

Committee member Ronald Keefe said the reorganization of the $98,825 group will help SCERA coordinate its goals with other SGA components—such as RSO groups, Senate officers and the Economic Development Office.

But Geary, who voted against the reorganization proposal, said the night's events took place the way they did because "it was a power struggle so that some SGA officers could have control over SCERA."

Geary commented at one point during the meeting that "something is really undercurrent here. There's more of a problem in this organization (the coordinating committee) than there is in SCERA."

Housing shortage leaves many frustrated

By PATRICK HAFEY
Collegian Correspondent

Frustrated and angry freshmen and sophomores without dormitory room assignments are expected to line the halls in the Whitmore Administration Building this morning as a tense on-campus housing shorting enters its third day.

Craig Sherwood, special assistant to the housing assignments coordinator, told roomless students yesterday the office was closing at 4 p.m., five hours earlier than scheduled, to allow the staff to spend the night counting available spaces.

He and other office staff members told students that because the housing office would begin assigning rooms on a first-come, first-served basis at 8:30 a.m. today, they should begin lining outside Whitmore at 5 a.m. this morning.

Many students who complained they had early morning classes were advised to show up as early as possible.

Housing office officials did not know the number of spaces open or the number of students who still needed housing.

Juniors and seniors who want on-campus housing will have to wait until tomorrow when rooms will again be assigned on a first-come, first-served basis.

Freshmen and sophomores, who are required to live on campus, are given priority over upperclassmen who may choose to live off-campus.

Amherst Housing Authority member Kenneth Mosakowski said off-campus housing availability was "near zero percent."

This year is as low as I've seen it," he added.

Mosakowski said students who fail to find housing through the University will have an equally hard time on their own.

"They'll (the students) all have problems this fall," he said.

Library, FAC and Tilson repairs up for bid

By JAMES F. MAHONEY
Collegian Staff

Several campus buildings are among dozens of state construction contract studies up for grabs this fall.

The state Designer Selection Board has given architects and engineers until Sept. 12 to apply for the contract studies. The studies include problems recently spotlighted by the state Corruption Committee.

The UMass facilities to be studied are the Tillson Farm Boiler Plant, the Fine Arts Center and the Library.

Some studies will investigate the possibility of recovering repair costs through lawsuits.

The multimillion dollar Tillson facility has been dormant since it was finished in the early 1970's due to improper construction. Among the suggestions regarding its' future are whether it should be sold for scrap, transferred to another location or be used for energy experiments.

Contracts concerning the Fine Arts Center are aimed at finding out how the leaks, cracks in the concrete and the crooked doors can be corrected in the facility.

Although the Board released the applications recently, the state legislature has already set aside $2.5 million in a capital outlay budget for repairs and renovations to the library in July. The haste in funding was because the Bureau of Building Construction has already spent close to $84,000 in consulting fees and recommendations for the crumbling brick facade.

Edward E. Simpson, of the UMass Planning Office, said the legislature appropriated the funds so quickly because they felt the library is an emergency situation. He added the contract for repairs is under the deferred maintenance budget, which requires repair contracts before any work can be started.

Repairs to the facade are expected to run close to $1.2 million. Simpson said that if there is enough left over from the $2.5 million figure, the University will go ahead and start on renovations to the interior.

"We are looking for a remedy that will allow students to use the building while it is under construction," Simpson said.

The construction on the library should start in the next nine to twelve months. Simpson said that they don't want to proceed when students are around, because of the amount of heavy construction equipment that will be moved in.

Polish workers return to work

KATOWICE, Poland (AP) — Victorious Silesian miners started returning to work yesterday and the Polish government announced it would impose new price controls to meet worker complaints about rising living costs.

The miners agreed to return to coal pits after winning concessions from Poland's beleaguered government in an agreement that signaled an end to the country's two-month wave of crippling strikes.

The government said the State Price Committee would take over fixing prices for meat and 46 other basic food, 55 consumer items such as shoes, toothpaste and televison sets, and rents and public transport fares.

An announcement in the Warsaw daily Zycie Warszawy and on televison did not spell out details of how the committee would set prices or what levels would be maintained.

The action appeared to be a step toward ending the practice of allowing major enterprises and service industries to raise prices for goods and services. It was seen as a move to fulfill government promises of economic reforms and to defuse worker complaints about rising living costs that had fueled the strike movement.

Police uncover drug ring

VINEYARD HAVEN, Mass. (AP) — Police arrested nine people yesterday as an alleged drug smuggling ring tried to ship eight tons of marijuana off of Martha's Vineyard island aboard a state-run ferry, authorities said.

State police estimated that the marijuana had a street value of 98 million. They added that the investigation was continuing, and they expected more arrests and seizures.

Police said they watched through the night as smugglers transported the pot from a mother ship anchored off the island. The marijuana was first loaded into smaller boats, then taken ashore and put aboard vans.

Police finally moved in as the smugglers tried to drive the vans aboard the ferry destined for Woods Hole on Cape Cod.

James Sartori, a State Police spokesman, said the ring had operated earlier in Boothbay Harbor and Portland, Maine, but moved to Massachusetts last spring.

"We've had this particular group under surveillance since April," he said. "It began because the same organization was under observation by the Maine State Police on the Maine coast. For some reason, they relocated themselves in the Cape Cod and islands area."

Sartori said police seized four small boats, four vans and a sports car, and the Coast Guard was searching for the mother ship.

The nine arrested were charged with possession of marijuana with intent to distribute and conspiracy.

They were identified as Richard S. Low Jr., 37, of Kennebunkport, Maine; Darlene Low, 33, of Edgartown, Mass.; Peter J. McCarthy, 37, of Kennebunkport; Roland W. Jacobson, 38, of Kennebunkport; Elizabeth W. Schmidt, 32, of Garrison, Md.; Norma L. Bilinsky, 41, of Saco, Maine; Mark W. Brewer of Kensington, N.H.; Anthony Roumeliotes, 29, of Haverhill, Mass., and Curland J.A. Wood of Lunenburg, Nova Scotia.

Group to sell nuclear interests

Hartford, Conn. (AP) -- Federal regulators have approved United Illuminating Company's plan to sell part of its interest in the Seabrook, N.H., nuclear power plants for about $46 million, a company executive said.

James Cobey Jr., UI executive vice presidents, said the federal Nuclear Regulatory Commission had authorized UI to sell 2.5 percent of its interest to Central Maine Power Co. and 1.06 percent to Montaup Electric Co. in Fall River, Mass.

UI had decided to sell part of its ownership in the plants because it could not continue to meet high financing costs for the Seabrook contruction program. The twin generators under construction at Seabrook have been the target of repeated anti-nuclear power demonstrations.

Cobey discussed the NRC approval Tuesday while testifying on a rate increase request before the state Division of Public Utility Control.

He said the Central Maine sale should be completed by late October at an estimated price of $34 million while an estimated $12 million would be received from Montaup if the sale is approved by the Massachusetts Department of Public Utilities.

Pres. Carter attacks Reagan social security plan

(AP) — President Carter, campaigning yesterday in the heart of ethnic, blue-collar South Philadelphia, claimed that Ronald Reagan is bent on destroying the Social Security system and thus leaving millions of Americans destitute.

After touring a community center in the city's teeming Italian market on the third day of his general election campaign, Carter went to the predominantly black Zion Baptist Church to attack Reagan for once suggesting that Social Security should be voluntary. And the president suggested that election of the Republican nominee would end years of progress in the area of civil rights.

"The Republican candidate has suggested that participation in the Social Security system be voluntary," Carter told the church audience. "That would destroy the system. Millions of Americans who have worked hard all their lives, who paid in their share for years, would be destitute.

"Retired Americans have not volunteered for that kind of suffering, and we are not going to ask them to do it," the president said.

Researchers for the Carter re-election campaign supplied the president with the text of a speech that Reagan made on Oct. 27, 1964, in support of the presidential candidacy of Barry Goldwater.

In that speech, Reagan, discussing Social Security, asked: "Can't we introduce voluntary features that would permit a citizen to do better on his own, to be excused upon presentation of evidence that he had made provisions for the non-earning years?"

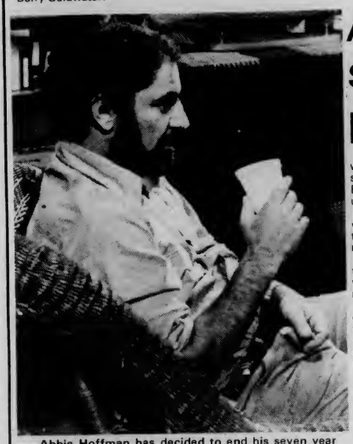
There was no immediate comment from the Reagan camp.

Meanwhile Ronald Reagan said yesterday President Carter has sacrificed America's reputation as a trustworthy ally and let "doubt and distrust" cloud U.S. relations with Israel.

The Republican presidential nominee said Carter policies have permitted the Soviet Union to make inroads in the Middle East which are "approaching a flashpoint," but added that he could peacefully blunt that thrust.

"Today we have fewer real allies, and among those we speak with diminished authority," he said."...Israel today is in grave danger, and so is freedom itself."

Reagan outlined his Middle East policy, expressed reservations about the Camp David accords and declared his support for an undivided, Israeli Jerusalem — hours after Carter announced that Egypt and Israel will resume peace negotiations within a few weeks.



Abbie Hoffman has decided to end his seven year run and will turn himself in to authorities. Hoffman was fleeing a charge of selling cocaine in 1973. The veteran of many 1960's radical protest relaxes with a drink during an interview with Barbara Walters yesterday. (ABC News via AP Laserphoto)

Abbie Hoffman surfaces; may plea bargain

NEW YORK (AP) — Yippie leader Abbie Hoffman, weighing an end to six years as a fugitive, stayed out of sight yesterday after recording an interview with ABC's Barbara Walters near the U.S.-Canadian border in upstate New York.

A prosecutor here, where Hoffman faces a seven-year-old charge of selling cocaine, said the district attorney's office had no idea when Hoffman might surrender, but did not rule out sometime this week.

"When he wants to come in, we'll be waiting," said the prosecutor, who asked not to be identified. "We've waited six years, so there's no big problem with a few more days."

The ABC interview, along with publication this week of an autobiography, "Soon to be a Major Motion Picture," marks a return to the national media by the 43-year-old founder of the Youth International Party, the so-called Yippies of the 1960s counterculture movement.

Hoffman and six other antiwar demonstrators were tried on conspiracy and riot charges in the "Chicago Seven" trial in 1970. During that trial, the defendants and their attorneys were cited 200 times on contempt of court charges. Although Hoffman and four others were convicted of crossing state lines with intent to cause a riot, the charges were eventually dismissed in higher courts.

ABC said Walters had left New York with a camera crew on a charter flight Tuesday. "It was set up by Hoffman and she didn't know where it was going," an ABC spokesman said.

Egypt, Israel will resume talks

ALEXANDRIA, Egypt (AP) — Egypt and Israel agreed yesterday to resume the stalled Palestinian autonomy talks in the coming weeks and prepare for a summit with the United States after the November U.S. presidential elections.

The development came one month after Egypt suspended the talks in displeasure with Israel's declaration that all Jerusalem, including the Arabpopulated eastern sector, was its eternal capital.

President Carter and his Middle East trouble-shooter, Sol Linowitz, announced the talks would resume.

Linowitz' announcement came after a 45-minute meeting with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat. The meeting followed two days of talks with Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin in Tel Aviv.

Sadat, who proposed such a summit after he suspended the talks over an Israeli law passed in late July that declared a united Jerusalem its eternal capital, had little to say about the agreement.

Begin called the development "very positive," adding: "We are satisfied."

The brief statement read by Linowitz here said:

"On behalf of President Sadat and Prime Minister Begin, I am authorized to make the following statement:

"First, both parties agreed that they are and remain firmly committed to the Camp David accords and process, and are convinced that they offer the only viable path towards comprehensive peace in the Middle East. Both are determined to see the process through to a successful conclusion regardless of temporary difficulties that may arise along the way.

"Second, the parties recognize that for negotiations to succeed, they must rest on firm foundations of mutual trust and friendship, and they undertake to strengthen that foundation in the coming weeks.

"Third, the parties agree to resume the autonomy negoiations at a mutually agreed date, and to consult regarding the preparations, timing and venue of a summit meeting."

At about the same time, Carter told labor leaders in Washington that the negotiations would resume in the next few weeks and that Egypt and Israel had agreed to hold another Mideast summit with him later this year.

Carter quoted the statement as saying the two Mideast leaders "are deeply committed to the Camp David peace process, they will recommence the negotiations for peace sometime within the next few weeks and they both approved a reconvening of the summit conference later on this year at an appropriate time that will be convenient for all of us."

Linowitz's statement did not, however, mention Israel's claims for Jerusalem. Sadat and other Egyptian leaders have maintained in the past that Israel must soften its Jerusalem position before Egypt would resume negotiating.

Part of the reason for the freeze in negotiations on autonomy for the 1.2 million Palestinians living in the West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip has been Israel's insistence that it continue to control Arab East Jerusalem.

Bellotti supports insurance hike

BOSTON (AP) — Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti yesterday supported an increase of 9.3 percent in auto insurance rates next year — about one-third of the hike sought by the industry.

The companies have asked Insurance Commissioner Michael J. Sabbagh for a 24.4 percent increase, estimated to produce $196 million in 1981. The advisory filing by Bellotti's office called for an overall increase of about $75 million.

Bellotti's statement referred to a "sharp reduction" in the proposed rate change and added:

"While recognizing the inflationary pressures affecting the auto industry in Massachusetts as well as the citizens of the commonwealth, the attorney general's filing points to the recent adoption of anti-theft legislation as well as improvements in the driving public's conservation efforts to challenge the industry's request for an increase of almost $200 million."

Sabbagh has scheduled hearings later in the month on the new rates.

The industry has appealed to the state Supreme Court for a boost in the $40 million, 5.7 percent, increase Sabbagh granted for this year, when the companies sought $146 million, or 21.3 percent.

ROADWORK:
Redesigning in Amherst to be finished in November

By PATRICK HAFEY
Collegian Correspondent

For those who make frequent visits to the center of Amherst, the hassle of avoiding marker barrels, potholes, and construction equipment will be over by the end of November, according to James Cope, Amherst Town Planner.

Since early May, the construction firm of Manuel Peavo, from Rehobeth, Ma. has been working in the North Pleasant St. section of Amherst, redesigning seven intersections in order to alleviate the heavy flow of traffic in this area.

The project, Cope said, had been in the planning stages for 10 years, and is part of a federally-funded project known as TOPICS.

Another part of the work is the Amherst Community Accessibility Project. The construction, which begun in early May, consists of eliminating stairs and installing wheelchair ramps on sidewalks. The ACAP work is being done by Warner Bros. Construction Co. of Sunderland, Ma., Cope said, will allow handicapped people greater access to several downtown sections.

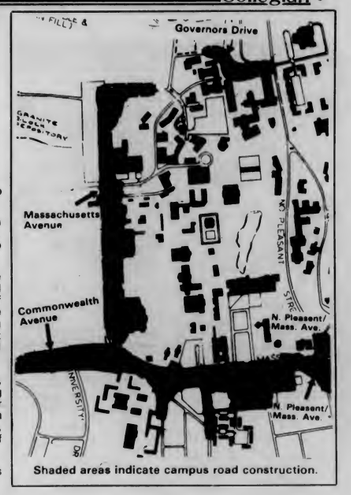
Another asset resulting from the TOPICS renovations will be an increase in parking spaces, which should translate into an increase in business, Cope said.

Because of the construction, however, there have been several accidents on North Pleasant Street in the last week. All of these have been minor accidents with no injuries to either motorists or pedestrians reported.

Within the next several years, more modifications will be made to accomodate an increase in bicycle travel. Cope said such modification could not be made this year because of contract limitations. Several narrow sports in the reconstruction have been criticized by local cyclists as being dangerous. Among the spots are two sections along East Pleasant Street in front of the Hampshire National Bank and one on North Pleasant Street by the turn-in.

The road work being done in downtown Amherst is, despite all appearances, separate from the road work being done on the University campus. Travelling from the lower section of University Drive, through the UMass campus, a motorist encounters an almost endless barrage of potholes, concrete pipes laying alongside the road and myriad of strange looking construction equipment.

The University road widening and handicapped access is not expected to be completed until early next year.



Shaded areas indicate campus road construction.

Potholes peeve pedestrians and drivers

Craig Hutchinson

By RUTH HAGBERG
Collegian Correspondent

The bumps and grinds of the road construction on campus and in Amherst have aggravated and confused bicyclists, motorists, and pedestrians as they navigate around police officers and large ruts.

The Collegian asked people what they thought of the roadwork. Officials do not expect it to be completed until early next year.

The general opinion was that the work causes inconveniences.

Abigail Randall, a University sophomore living in Mary Lyons said she was disgusted with the work in town. "I think they did a real nice job of screwing up traffic patterns," she said.

When questioned about the campus construction she mumbled something about the library and asked, "What else are they going to screw up?"

Craig Hutchinson, a business major from Brittany Manor, said "I think it's a waste of money. I've seen them do all these construction things here on campus and it doesn't do much good."

Campus Survey

Judy Rosenthal, stopped as she rode by the Student Union was among the irate bicyclists. Rosenthal, a graduate student in speech pathology from Puffton Village, said "It irritates me. It's dangerous, especially in town across from the bike shop."

Other bike riders had complaints about the lack of riding space, especially at the Newman Center intersection.

Another problem caused by the work was getting moved into Southwest. Amy Brooksbank, a sophomore from John Adams said "I wish they had done it over the summer. I don't like the fact that you can't cut down by Prince. It was a real drag moving in."

T.O. Wilkinson, dean of behavioral sciences, gave an Amherst resident's opinion.

"I find it hideously inconvenient," he said. "There simply is no good time to do it but I think they could have done it a little earlier than Sept. 1.

One can only hope that you wind up with something that works."

Some people haven't been bothered by the construction, however.

Bob Towa, a junior from Gorman said "It's necessary, I haven't found it inconvenient."

Ken Herd, a senior mechanical engineering student from Brittany Manor reasoned: "It's hard to appreciate it before it's finished, it may be worthwhile when it's done."

Josh Meyer, who transferred from the University of Vermont and now lives in John F. Kennedy in Southwest also believed it was necessary. "Things have to get worse before they get better," he said. But Meyer added that it wasn't very pleasant when he had gone running in all the dirt.

In a car, "It stinks. It's terrible, unbearable in some points" Cathy Nowaki from Puffton Village said.

Liz Barone, a junior art student, also from Puffton, said "I'm a UMass bus driver and I think it stinks. I know there will be accidents because of it."

University seeks student activities director

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

The search for a person to fill one of the hottest adminstrative seats in the University may be over soon, if the parties involved can agree on how things should be done.

The position of Student Activities Director, vacated since Paul Hamill left the job at the end of the 1979 school year, may be filled by the end of the semester, according to Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson.

The director's position, which pays about $20,000 per year, has been the subject of much controversy in recent years. The head of the Recognized Student Organization office, the director, is responsible for setting procedure and controlling the expenditure of millions of dollars spent by the more than 400 student groups.

Student leaders, who say they should have more control over the operations of the RSO system have assailed the directors in recent years, charging them with being unresponsive to student needs. The former acting director, Dr. O.C. Bobby Daniels, received much criticism last year for his policies and the way he ran the office.

Daniels, whose term as acting director ended in August, has returned to his position as associate dean of students, after spending the summer studying at Harvard University. The former assistant director, David Bousquet, is serving as acting director until a new one is named.

The search for a new director, Madson said, is currently underway and the position may be filled by the end of this semester. But, as in the past, students and administrators cannot agree on how to conduct the search.

Al Wallace, Student Government Association treasurer and a member of the search committee, said the students and Madson differed on several issues, including who should chair the committee, whether students or administrators should be in the majority, and what the job description of the director would entail.

The request for a student committee chair was denied when Ellen Wolf, director of internships, was appointed to the position. The committee was then formed of four students and four administrators, in addition to Wolf, who does not have a vote.

But as for the job description, Wallace said, the two sides seem to be far apart. Both students and the administration drew up job descriptions, in the hope of reaching a compromise, but the two are very different.

"One looks like black, one looks like white," Wallace said. "They're two different job descriptions."

But Madson said yesterday that one job description has been completed and the final draft is expected to be delivered to student leaders sometime today. Certain student demands were included, mainly the provision that student evaluations be included in the yearly evaluation of the director's job performance.

Wallace said the evaluations by students are especially critical because the director's salary is paid from the Student Activities Trust Fund, collected each year from students and distributed by the Undergraduate Student Senate to the various student groups.

"We pay the salary but we don't have supervision, we want the supervision," he said.

Advertisements for the position are already being circulated in newspapers and magazines throughout the country and initial screening of all applicants is expected to begin shortly after the application deadline at the end of this month, Madson said. Final candidates would hopefully be identified within six to eight weeks and interviews would begin shortly after that, he said.

Madson also said the four administrative members of the committee should be named within a few days. The student members in addition to Wallace are SGA co-President Rich LaVoice, student senator Freeman Woodson and Nancy Serephin, administrative coordinator of the Union Program Council.

'Help phones' installed to safeguard students

By JOSHUA FRANK
Collegian Correspondent

Those bright yellow "Help Phones" on campus are a network of five emergency telephones installed by the University of Massachusetts Department of Public Safety to provide a direct line to the UMass Police.

The phones along with improved on-campus lighting, are a response to widespread demand for a safer campus, said UMass Director of Public Safety Gerald O'Neil.

The phones have been placed at five high crime areas of the campus: Lot 21 across from Southwest, the east side of Kennedy Tower, by Memorial Hall, Thatcher Drive behind Worcester Commons, and Lot 44 behing Sylvan.

O'Neil said the phones are an attempt to create "an environment conducive to studying."

"We don't want people walking around in fear of being attacked," he said.

In addition to the emergency phones, the University Police keep three lines open 24 hours. The rape emergency line is 5-2677, or K-COPS. The emergency number is 5-3111 and the main number is 5-2121. O'Neil said the rape line is answered by officers trained to handle "sensitive crimes."

The police also provide two pamphlets to students explaining theft and personal attack prevention, and the help phone system, O'Neil said.

'The phones, along with improved on-campus lighting are in response to widespread demand for a safer campus.'

O'Neil said the number of help phones may be increased if they are not abused.

"My main concern is vandalism. If it seems to be working it will be expanded although it's too early to say. We want to keep them working," he said.

The $2,100 purchase and installation costs were funded by the office of the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs. Yearly maintenance will cost $1,500.

Lando Calrissian (Billy Dee Williams) escorts Princess Lela (Carrie Fisher), Chewbacca (Peter Mayhew), and Han Solo (Harrison Ford) through the corridors of Cloud City, in a scene from 20th Century Fox's The Empire Strikes Back.

Empire Strikes Back A Continuing Saga

By ROBERT B. CARGILL
Collegian Staff

They say it could go on forever.

the original Star Wars, created by writer-director-producer George Lucas, has grossed over $400 million and is easily the largest-grossing film of all time.

Now we have the empire Strikes Back: same formula with the same stars along with newcomer to ghe saga, billy dee Williams. In fact, Empire has already established its credibility as the nearest box-office rival to its predecessor. The bottom line is—these guys got one "helluva" good thing going!

directed by Irvin Kershner and starring Williams, Mark Hamill, Carrie Fisher and Harrison Ford, the empire Strikes Back is family fun and entertainment; a continuing saga, yet another glimpse into an infinitely-ambiguous and magical universe where the forces of good and evil are locked in a never-ending battle in search of truth and justice.

You have Princess leia (sweet, yet sardonic), Han solo (bold and dashingly handsome), Luke Skywalker (the true boy-hero, curiously brave), and Lando Calrissian (a con artist-type charmer), not to forget the pair of droids, R2D2 and C-3PO, and Chewbacca, a beast-like principle.

this cast is essentially caught up in a non-stop battle, the action being built upon all the lore thus far ingrained in the imaginations of millions of fans. We are dealing with a monumental enterprise, an unfolding drama which is devastating in its success.

but is it all worth the price of admission? empire's special effects alone are enough visual amusement to keep most anyone awake but the plot is not without its lulls. the imposing presence of the evil Darth Vader is used strikingly and most effectively as the foil for Luke skywalker, enhancing the young man's moral dilemmas and constant trepidation. but there is too much reliance on a faithful audience, that is, Kershner and executive producer Lucas are assuming that all of Empire's audience has seen Star Wars, that we will blindly accept whatever story they present us with, as long as they throw in enough laser fights, turtle tanks, and land battles with grotesque space monsters.

empire is fairly exciting throughout, but the excitement is not that of an intense nature—it is as harmless and coy as R2d2 himself.

Were it not for Star Wars, Empire would be a failure. Unfortunately, we'll probably be able to say that for another seven episodes, ast least, for that is how many more of these sci-fi yarns they plan to hit us with. the "Force" seems not to be with us, the moviegoers, but they, the producers.

At least this time.

Frustrated staff may take job action

By STEPHEN MORAN
Collegian Correspondent

Union negotiators representing the 65 non-professional staff members of the Amherst Nursing Home have announced plans for a press conference today where it is expected that future job actions will be discussed.

Claiming that the contract negotiations have made "very little progress", Linda Edwards, union spokeswomen and member of the negotiating committee, would not rule out the possibility of a strike. "If this goes to strike, we need the students to know what is going on here and not scab," she said.

Staff members have worked without a contract for five months since their last contract expired May 8. The new contract will be in effect for two years.

Negotiators met for six hours Tuesday in an attempt to resolve the dispute. In the wake of this meeting, frustrated union members made plans for two hours of informational picketing to begin Sunday at 2 p.m. in front of the Home, 150 University Drive.

Disagreement remains over wages, retractive pay, seniority clause terminology, and a controversial security provision clause.

Edwards stated that a number of UMass students are employed at the Home. She claims that although many students apply for employment, few remain for an extended period of time. She blames the high turnover rate on poor wages and unrewarding job duties, and claims that it "ultimately affects the health care of the patients."

Jay Presser, chief management negotiator and attorney in the Springfield law firm of Skoller, Abbott and Hayes, proposed what he termed "a substantial wage offer" at Tuesday's meeting.

Although the offer was neither accepted nor rejected by the union bargainers, Edwards described the wage offer as "really sad". She explained that the management proposal would increase wages 65 cents over the next two years. "This would barely keep pace with the minimum wage, and, in effect, would be no increase at all," she said.

Presser said that a major snag in negotiations has been the union's demand to retain a union security provision in the contract. A security provision requires that all employees be dues-paying members of the union.

This provision was first instituted in the last contract. Since then, Presser claims, the union membership voted to delete the clause in the new contract. This would give employees the option of whether or not to become union members.

But Edwards took issue with his claim, stating that "at no time did the union membership vote to curtail union representation." She said a vote was taken on whether to stop paying union dues to the Massachusetts District union organization. Later, when the staff members became represented by the New England District union organization, dues-paying was resumed because the union members felt they were getting better representation.

Campus Center board regains space for students

By CATHERINE CLABBY
Collegian Correspondent

The Campus Center Board of Governors regained student meeting space this summer in the Campus Center Complex and the Student Union Building after all the rooms were reserved for two conferences to be held this fall.

University Conference Services last spring booked all meeting rooms in the two buildings for a week in October and November leaving no space available for student organizations. Originally the conferences were not to be open to UMass students.

"We knew that students pay off the bond on the buildings with their student activities fee and students have the legal rights to use them," says Michael Jingozian, the Board's summer chairperson.

Through negotiations with Conference Services the Board managed to find locations on campus for the conferences that would not occupy space needed for student organizations. Jingozian said most of the conference workshops will now be open to UMass students. In the future the Board will review incoming conference plans and will attempt to keep space open for student organizations, he said.

In other summer action, the Board negotiated an exchange with the University administration for office space for the Lesbian Union. The union now has its office in Campus Center room 102, leaving its previous office on the ninth floor of the Campus Center open for Conference Services office expansion.

Jingozian said in early July the Campus Center Hotel provided the student rate of $13.50 nightly for students enrolled in summer school only and charged full-time fall and spring semester students the full rate of $20. At the request of the Board the policy was changed and all students were charged the discount rate.

Also this summer the Board refined its plans for a closedait cable television network which should be completed by the beginning of October. The network will consist of four outlets located in the Student Union Lobby, the Hatch Lobby, the Cape Cod Lounge and the Student Union Ballroom. Video equipment and video workshops will be available for students.

Board projects in the works include: a Consumer Survey listing the locations of various stores and a price comparison of popular goods, a Used Book board to be installed across from the ride board in the Student Union Building where students can list b o o k s or anything else they have to sell; and exhibits featuring "photographic exposes" of the University's building defects such as the Student Union roof and the Campus Center garage, Jingozian said.

The Board meets every Thursday night at 6:30 p.m. on the eighth floor of the Campus Centrer. The meetings are open to all University students.

Aching feet, long, long lines, but no courses

By ANDREA GRUNE
Collegian Correspondent

They stood and sat and waited, but in many cases it was all in vain.

About 500 students yesterday waited in long lines in the lower level of the Campus Center to add or change economics courses, some waiting more than three hours.

Prof. Donald Katzner, who heads the economics department, said the waiting was due to the large number of students trying to get into economics courses and a lack of staff and funds to accomodate those needs.

Katzner said his department is unable to hire more teaching assistants and open new sections because it is not affordable.

"There are just not enough classes," Katzner said. He said seniors were given priority for classes to insure they will be able to graduate.

The lack of personnel handling the registration added to the problem, as two staff persons added, dropped and switched courses for hundreds of students all day.

Marie DeLuca said in campus center room 162 beginning at 9 a.m. yesterday registering students. She said the staff is just as frustrated as the students about the lack of funding and classes.

In addition to economics majors, there are business majors, Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Adminstration majors, food and natural resource majors and many more who are required to take economics courses.

John Handwerger, a freshmen, said he was told to stand in line to the right of room 162, and after waiting there a half hour was told to move to another line. He spent over three hours waiting for a course which he said he needs to transfer into the business school.

"Continuing Education offers economics courses at night, and a lot of these people could take it then. There are no ing people that, though," she said.

Editorial/Opinion

For the past several years, Oliphant, Auth, MacNelly and other syndicated cartoonists have appeared in this editorial section. Interspersed with these cartoonists have been a number of student artists including Guidera, Maceda, Wallace and Yaskell. This semester new cartoonists are needed. Interested students are invited to submit art samples to Eric Janszen at the Collegian office, 113 Campus Center (under the concourse). Talent, enthusiasm and casual dress required.

Terror in Bolivia: Democratic republic to military

To the Editor:

On July 17, 1980 Bolivian military units under General Garcia Meza seized power in a coup d'etat, characterized by violence unprecedented in Bolivian history. Meza and his junta claim to be countering Communist subversion; clearly they seek to prevent the institution of Hernan Siles Zuazo as president. Siles would have been the first popularly elected president since the military intervened in 1964, with the sole exception of the caretaker government of Lidia Gueiler. The patent falsity of these charges of Communist subversion in Bolivia are demonstrated by the failure of Che Guevara to muster popular support a decade ago, the absence of civil violence in the intervening years, and the inability of the small, official Communist party to field a candidate in the June 80 elections.

Further considerations of the Meza junta may be the disclosure of links, if not the active participation, in production of and trafficking in cocaine. Bolivia is the primary source of cocaine sold in the United States. Prompted by evidence provided by the U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency, Senator DeConcini, Democrat of Anzona, has requested an investigation by the Foreign Operations sub-committee of the Senate Appropriations Committee, of the allegations that increasing scrutiny of international narcotics traffic may have prompted the Bolivian generals to, 'cover their tracks.'

The actions of the Meza junta are reminiscent of General Pinochet's overthrow of the Allende government in Chile and General Videla's policies of officially sanctioned terror in Argentina. Both Videla and Pinochet have been outspoken in their praise and support of the Meza junta. Videla publically expressed his pleasure that Bolivia had joined the growing phalanx of totalitarian states in the 'Southern Cone,' of South America (New York Times 8/7/80). There is substantial evidence that Argentine intelligence agents played a major role in preparing and executing the coup, principally locating opposition figures prior to the coup and assisting in their apprehension during it (New York Times 8/1, 6, 10/80).

The Bolivian military are rounding up and imprisoning or murdering all opponents of the new order. All labor unions and political parties have been systematically destroyed. The leaders of the Socialist party and the principal labor unions, Marcelo Quiroga and Juan Lechin respectively, have disappeared and are assumed dead. All supporters of the Siles candidacy have been dismissed from their jobs. Clergy, both Protestant and Catholic, have been presecuted. A request for the whereabouts of 13 priests by the Vatican has gone unanswered. Five parishes and two convents have been invaded and ransacked. At least twenty Bolivian reporters as well as correspondents for CBS, Newsweek, and ABC have been detained, arrested, threatened, or expelled from the country. Mary Helen Spooner, a reporter for the prestigious London journals, The Economist and The Financial Times, was detained for a week and threatened with mutilation to compel her to reveal her sources. General Meza has consistently accused President Carter of being a communist sympathizer if not an outright communist.

While professionals have suffered under the new regime, their numbers are dwarfed by the suffering and death of campesinos and miners—the loci of opposition and armed resistance to the military. Most mining centers and other communities as well, are under seige by military forces, including Santa Ana, San Jose, Huanani, Siglo Veinta, Catavi, and the poorer sections of La Paz (the capitol), and Caracoles. Amnesty International reports (New York Times 8/22/80) that army units raided the town of Caracoles killing or abducting 900 of its inhabitants. The report noted that soldiers raped women and girls and beheaded many of the male captives. Warren Hoge, the New York Times reporter until recently in Bolivia, reported that the Meza regime is engaging in these acts as a policy of terrorizing the population into submission (New York Times 8/10/80).

The U.S. policy of commitment to democracy in the Western Hemisphere is being actively thwarted again by another totalitarian regime in Latin America. Americans should be actively concerned with this tragedy both for the junta policy of murder and terror and for the destruction of another democratic republic. Further, all should be wary of rabid anti-communist rhetoric and its propounders both at home and abroad, for they are responsible for a disproportionate share of terror and repression, be it in North, Central or South America. We urge concerned citizens to express their outrage and revulsion at the actions of the Meza regime by writing letters of protest to the Bolivian mission to the United Nations, or to the Bolivian Embassy to the U.S., or letters of support for the United States policy of "strong disapproval" to Secretary of State Muskie.

Reagan's run calculated

There's Ronald Reagan on the news in his cowboy gear about to mount his bold stallion for a morning gallop across the prairie. There he is at the press conference looking natty with his raven hair, pink cheeks, and Zuma Beach tan. My Goodness, that man can't be a day over 50!

They can't fool me. Grecian Formula 16 and Coppertone Insta-tan do not a young man make. My friend Arthur disagrees.

Bob Conte

"Ron is in terrific shape. I stood three feet away from him at the convention and I swear, he really looked great."

"I can't believe you actually went to that thing. Four days in Detroit. That's something you get sentenced to," I said.

"Hey, it didn't cost me a cent. The party paid for a bunch of us hip young Republicans to come in jeans and T-shirts and hang aroung the T.V. cameras so it wouldn't look like everybody wore grey suits and was old and wealthy-looking. That's the unfair stereotype that the party has had to endure since Ron became our superstar."

"Unfair? Come on, your party is loaded and you know it. And you are just a tad conservative, don't you think? Anti-ERA, anti-abortion, pro-nuke, you want to increase military expenditures drastically,..."

"What do you mean conservative? Didn't you see Marie Osmond at the convention in that skin-tight satin outfit? And Susan Anton with her chest hanging out of her dress? Gimme a break, buddy! The convention really helped broaden our appeal."

"Pun intended, I assume."

"Huh?"

"Nothing. You're right. It was foolish of me to label an entire party just on account of something as insignificant as its platform."

"Damn right! And you shouldn't make fun of Ron all the time. There's a lot more to him than you think. He's worked hard for a long time to get to where he is today."

Yeh, I suppose 96 years is a longtime..."

"That's 69!"

"What's the difference? I'm sorry, Arthur, I just cannot take the guy seriously. 69-year-old men are not supposed to look like game show hosts! I know there's got to be a face underneath all that make-up and wrinkle cream. I'd like to see it some time."

"No, that's really him. He's a very bubbly 69, you know. His kids have kept him young in a lot of ways."

"How?"

"Well, you know how Patty used to live with one of the Eagles? Ron and Nancy used to crash their parties all the time. In fact, for quite a while he was a regular around the California rock and roll scene. He said it reminded him of his maverick days as a young Hollywood actor."

"How do you know this?"

"It's common party knowledge. Of course, it was kept out of the papers. It would have been political suicide. Some of his escapades are unbelievable!"

"Like what?"

"Let's just say that Jerry Brown isn't the first California governor to fool around with Linda Ronstadt. Of course, she wasn't really too famous then, just two years out of high school..."

"Get out of here!"

"I'm not kidding. The musicians loved him. He'd throw these huge bashes at the governor's mansion and hire armed security guards to keep the press away. Best protected dope parties I ever heard of."

"Did Ron get high?"

"Of course. Sometimes they'd all mellow out and write songs together. "Hotel California" is actually just a metaphor for the governor's mansion. Ron thought it up himself. It's all in the song. Mirrors on the ceiling. Pink champagne on ice..."

"So how come he's such a political conservative?"

"He's not really. He knew long ago that the country would eventually slide back to the right—wimp out is his expression—so he just rode with the trend. He knows that 1980 is his last shot so he's really playing it to the hilt. Pretty darn convincing, isn't he? Old actors never die you know."

"Wow, that puts the man in a whole different light! Hey, maybe we'll see Linda Ronstadt in the White House after all!"

"Never can tell...."

Bloodline sends out call for student donors

By STEVE DENSMORE
Collegian Correspondent

The campus chapter of the Red Cross Blood Bank Program is staging a drive to counter an end-of-the-summer shortage of whole blood reserves.

"Western Massachusetts was almost out of type 'O' blood and low on everything else," said Ted Saulnier, head administrator of the Western Massachusetts Blood Bank.

Saulnier attributed the shortage to summer recess at area colleges. "Thirty percent of western Massachusetts blood comes from college and high school students," he said.

Ruth Bean, head nurse of the Western Massachusetts Blood Bank said holidays and summer vacations always present a problem for the blood bank. Even though the need for blood is sometimes greater during a holiday or vacation, donors tend to come in less frequently at those times, she said.

"Most people don't think about blood until they really need it, then they're glad it's there," Bean said.

Saulnier said the western Massachusetts blood bank needs 1,000 units of blood each week to maintain its quota. he said the program has a goal of 48,000 units this year.

Anyone in good health, 110 pounds or over, and between the ages of 18 and 65, or 17 with parental consent, is eligible to give blood. A donor may give every eight weeks, Bean said.

The UMass Bloodline will be operating three days a week for the rest of the school year. Anyone wishing to donate can find the Bloodline in Campus Center room 165 every Tuesday from 12 noon until 5 p.m. The Bloodline will also be set up at various dormitories throughout the semester.

Legislature may have to return soon

BOSTON (AP)—gov. Edward J. King, according to sources in his office, is ready to recall the Legislature the week of sept. 22 to act on constitutional amendments left dangling at adjournment in July.

King told reporters at an informal news conference wednesday that he anticipated any special session would be limited to the constitutional issues.

However, there was speculation that the Legislature might want to re-appropriate funds for a country employees' pay raise. King vetoed a smiliar bill which, he said, was flawed but favored the raises.

while King made no commitment, it was reported that his legal counsel, Neil L. Lynch, has advised him the constitution requires his intervention.

Gov. Christian A. herter twice called the Legislature into joint sessions on constitutional twice in 1956 without achieving final actions. the state Supreme Court, in an advisory ruling, held that the governor made a reasonable effort to comply with his constitutional responsibilities.

"We do not believe it was intended that an unseemly controversy should be carried on between the governor and the general court to the limits of futility, ' the court said. King said he had not yet met with the senate leaders on the issue, but promised an announcement promptly. an aide said the recall date was still tentative, although present sentiment favored the week after the Sept. 16 primary election.

Rep. William g. robinson of Melrose, the House republican leader, has contended for weeks that the Legislature is required to take final action on pending constitutional amendments. in past years, no protest was raised about incomplete action on constitutional amendments.

On the constitutional convention calendar when the Legislature quit for the year was the Proposition 2¼ initiative petition. it requires 50 affirmative votes, 25 percent, to qualify it for a second test before the next Legislature and possible ratification by the electorate in 1982.

What makes Tech Hifi the best place to buy stereo?

Appliance stores and department stores are not the best places to buy quality stereo. You'll do much better at a stereo store.

The problem is, which stereo store? You're about to read why over 2 million music lovers have decided to buy from Tech Hifi.

It's OK to pick our brains. (We know our stereo).

The salespeople at Tech Hifi know what they're talking about. They work at Tech because they love stereo, not because they love selling.

Our people keep up with all the latest equipment, and can tell you the differences among the leading brands.

You get to play at Tech Hifi, not just look.

Some stereo stores have signs all over that tell you "Don't Touch The Merchandise".

At Tech Hifi our signs say "Come Play." We encourage you to spin knobs, push buttons, toss switches, and try out any of the components in our soundroom.

If you take enough time to play in a Tech Hifi soundroom, you'll get a good idea of which equipment sounds best in your price range.

The buying power of the 65 Tech Hifi stores.

The reason why no store has better prices than Tech Hifi is no dealer buys quality components in such a huge volume as the 65 Tech Hifi stores.

You'll find our prices are as good as anybody's, and often better on some brands.

You might expect to pay extra at Tech for all the extra things we offer. But you won't.

At Tech Hifi we back what you buy.

When you make any big investment like quality hifi, make sure you're getting sound guarantees.

Tech Hifi gives you guarantees most stores don't. And we'll give them to you in writing, right on your sales slip.

Our guarantees include a 7-day moneyback guarantee (no questions asked), 30-day price guarantee, 60-day defective exchange, 3-month full-credit swap (for any reason), and a 1-year loudspeaker trial.

Our guarantees are backed by the Tech Hifi Service Centers. If the equipment you buy from us ever needs service, we have trained professionals who will make things right. Fast.

Our back-to-school sale

This is a good time to buy at Tech Hifi, because we're having our annual back-to-school sale.

You'll find complete systems on sale right now for as little as $189, and lots of name-brand turntables, receivers, loudspeakers, and cassette decks are on sale as individual components.

Come in this week and listen to what your money can buy at Tech Hifi.

The best place to buy stereo.

This $189 system delivers good sound at a low price. The receiver is a TDC 1500 with T-Lock tuning that eliminates FM drift. The loudspeakers are compact, wide-range Studio Design 16's and the turntable is a multiple-play Collaro 1251 with a Philips cartridge.

Parents may be forced to sell children

By AMPORN TANTUVANICH
Associated Press Writer

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Almost every morning at 4:15, dozens of children get off a train at Bangkok's darkened railroad station, clutching the hands of their parents who have brought them here to sell them into slavery.

The parents, frightened like their children, come from poor farming areas in northeastern Thailand where the $100 they will receive for the children is a fortune. They have been told, and they tell their children, that their Bangkok employers will give them ice cream and take them to the zoo on Sundays.

Instead, the children find themselves working long hours month after month, without pay, under the absolute control of their employers. Abuse by employers is common. Wounds are treated with soap, herbal ointment, fishsauce and toothpaste. A day off on Sunday means a short stroll under the watchful eyes of owners.

Police said a 12-year-old girl who ran away from her employer told how the thread factory owners would kick or beat her and 13 other girls with sticks if they thought the girls were not working hard enough. "We did not have enough to eat and we had to sleep on the hard floor in a crowded room," police quoted her as saying.

This girl said she and the other girls worked in a hot, dark room, standing up 10 hours a day, six days a week, police reported. They said she told them she had never been allowed beyond the end of the alley behind the factory where she worked.

The U.N. Working Group on Slavery was told by a British social worker last month that thousands of Thai children are sold each year to the professionally operated market that supplies factories, brothels and massage parlors in Thailand with slave children.

The social worker's report claimed that as many as 500 children are sold each week in Bangkok's Hua Lampong railroad station between November and April, the dry season when the children are not needed on the farms.

Thai officials have denied some aspects of the report, but in discussing the child slavery problem they admitted, in effect, that there is little they can do about it.

They said the root cause of the problem — rural poverty — runs too deep to be controlled by rules and regulations. Often, they said, prosecution of sweatshop owners is defeated when the children insisted they must work because the family needed the money.

Under Thai law, children under 12 are not allowed to work. Those between 12 and 15 must receive permission from the Labor Department and can only be employed in "suitable" jobs. Those between 15 and 18 are allowed to work without permission but cannot be employed at night or at entertainment places.

Campus Center Renovation Program

A comprehensive Master Plan has been developed during the past year by a committee to renovate the food services and retail services in the Campus Center and Student Union Building. Ruth, Shives and Williams, Inc. a local architectural firm with extensive food service and retail service experience was employed to create designs for the various areas which would be unique, functional and meeting the objectives of the Master Plan.

As classes resume, we find ourselves still in the construction phase for several projects. We apologize for any inconvenience relocating our services may cause you but we are sure you will be pleased with the new designs.

If you would be interested in viewing a model of the Top of the Campus Project or sample boards of the design plans for the other areas, we invite you to an exhibit which will be located on the Campus Center Concourse from 11:00 AM-1:00 PM Wednesday September 3 through Wednesday, September 5, 1980. (Excluding weekends)

Sports roundup

Fidryich wins, 11-2

DETROIT (AP) — The crowd chanted, rose to its feet and called pitcher Mark "The Bird" Fidrych back from the dugout Tuesday night. In response, the Detroit Tigers' right-hander tipped his hat and grinned broadly.

Fidrych was back—returning from two years of injuries and struggling in the minor leagues.

"It now seems like it never happened, like it went fast," Fidrych said after his 11-2 victory over the Chicago White Sox Tuesday night. "But, when it was happening, it seemed slow."

The victory came in the first game of a twi-night double-header. The Tigers also won the nightcap 6-1.

Fidrych, 1-2, allowed seven hits, struck out one and walked one while hurling his first complete game of the season. It was his first major league triumph since April 12, 1978, when he went the distance in beating the Texas Rangers 3-2 on a six-hitter at Arlington.

Martin makes peace with Steinbrenner

NEW YORK (AP) — Billy Martin said Wednesday that he had made his peace with George Steinbrenner and even had agreed to deletion of certain sections in his newly published autobiography termed offensive to the New York Yankee owner.

He denied that Steinbrenner had threatened a lawsuit of the so-called damaging matter.

"George is the greatest person in the world so long as you don't work for him," said the feisty rookie manager of the Oakland A's whose off-the-field pyrotechnics caused him twice to lose his job with the Yankees after blowing managerial posts at Minnesota, Detroit and Texas.

"There were some things I said about George in the book which I later found, upon reckening, that were not true. So I agreed to have them taken out of the book in the next edition."

The book, entitled "No. 1" and ghosted by Peter Golenbock, has already hit bestseller lists although it is a month away from the publication date. Orders in Oakland alone, according to the publisher, has reached the tens of thousands.

"This is a book dedicated to truth," Martin said at a news conference in New York, where the A's complete a three-game series Wednesday night. "Society needs a little bit of truth, but the truth hurts."

Among the so-called truths that Billy listed in the book were charges that Steinbrenner, during Martin's turbulent four-year tenure as Yankee manager, monitored phone calls and kept a file of his indiscretions as a possible weapon to use with the commissioner's office.

Borg defeats Tanner in 5 sets, advances to semifinals

NEW YORK (AP) — Bjorn Borg of Sweden kept his Grand Slam dreams alive and foiled Roscoe Tanner's bid for a repeat of last year's stunning upset by rallying in the final two sets and posting a 6-4, 3-6, 4-6, 7-5, 6-3 victory Wednesday in the quarterfinals of the U.S. Open tennis championships.

Borg, the No. 1 seed, trailed two sets to one and was down a service break in the fourth set before mounting his dramatic comeback and earning a berth in the semifinals against the winner of Wednesday night's match between Wojtek Fibak of Poland and Johan Kriek of South Africa.

In women's action, defending champion Tracy Austin advanced to the semifinals with a convincing 6-2, 6-3 victory over teen-age rival Pam Shriver, seeded 13th.

Austin, 17 and seeded first, dominated the match with her precise passing shots and delicate lobs. The 18-year-old Shriver, a finalist here two years ago and now on the comeback trail following a shoulder injury, tried to play serve and volley but did not do it well enough to threaten the steady Austin.

Angels end Sox streak, 7-2

BOSTON — Rod Carew drove in three runs with a home run and a single, and Jason Thompson added a solo shot to back the four-hit pitching of Fred Martinez as the California Angels stopped the streaking Boston Red Sox 7-2 Wednesday night.

The victory snapped the Angels' three-game losing streak and halted the Red Sox winning streak at nine.

California took a 2-0 lead in the first inning off Mike Torrez, 8-13, on Carew's third homer of the season. Rick Miller led off the game with a single and went to second on Carney Lansford's single. Miller was picked off by catcher Carlton Fisk before Carew homered to right field.

Martinez, 5-6, held Boston hitless for four innings.California gave him three more runs in the fifth on a single by Bobby Grich, a double by Larry Harlow and run-scoring singles by Lansford and Carew.

The Red Sox finally reached Martinez for two runs in the fifth on a single by Tony Perez and Dave Rader's second homer of the year. But the Angels got one run back when Thompson led off the sixth with his 17th homer.

Brian Downing scored the Angels' final run with a single in the eighth.

Meanwhile in the rest of the American League both the Orioles and the Yankees kept pace with one another as both posted victories.

Eddie Murray and Rich Dauer cracked RBI-singles and Steve Stone stopped Seattle on four hits Wednesday night as Baltimore defeated the Mariners 5-1.

Stone, 22-5, the winningest pitcher in the major leagues this season, beat Seattle for the third time this year and fifth in the last two. The crafty righthander recorded his 100th career victory and his 33rd in two years with the Orioles.

Tommy John scattered five hits to record his 19th victory of the season and Bucky Dent knocked in five runs with a double and a triple Wednesday night to lead the New York Yankees to an 8-3 victory over the Oakland A's.

John, 19-7, surrendered a home run to Mitchell Page in the second inning and gave up another run in the third on Rickey Henderson's sacrifice fly. Oakland tallied its final run in the sixth on Tony Armas' RBI single.

Campusbury Tales

Maureen Sullivan

Good morrow, salutations and a pleasant morning to ye congregation of this variable campus. Gather round thine wisps of steam from ye caffiene of Hatch, especially ye unknowing frosh, and I, with the help of mine companions of sport, shall regale, inform and entertain one and all with the tales of our journeys, humbly called:

THE CAMPUSBURY TALES

Sweet, steamy September, and on our way
To the shrine of St. Boyden one good day,
We venturers told each other a tale
As the mists of dawn began to unveil.
First to speak unto our wandering pack
Was the slender Man of Minutes QUARTERBACK.
Number ten he wore, and his name was Font;
He prayed his arm be better than his pont,
Though neither were bad, he needed care
So not to pace the lines before meeting Delaware.
Next spake a woman, dressed in kilt, who
HOCKEYED a ball and FIELDED it, too.
To St. Boyden she called for all to hear,
"Fourth place not again this coming year,
And also, blest Saint, pray that we rate
A golden chance to destroy Penn State."
Followed her was a confident lass
Who VOLLEYED well and could bump a pass
Just so, to her mates at the net,
For a crunching spike after a perfect set.
She boasted her team could be at least "Become the best in the entire East."
Then spake Lord and Lady of the TRACK,
Ready for the Field of Cinder to attack.
Laying thine spikes beside the road, they said,
"We prayeth the road is smooth ahead,
St. Boyden, holy shrine who giveth us smile,
Could not ye help us break the four-minute mile?"
The Lord and Lady of the LINKS then came
And asked St. Boyden to improve their game.
The Lady then queried her startled friend,
"If he is to coach, shall I be a Lea-man?"
Whatho and Gadzooks! The next friends of sport
Were the Lord and Lady of the TENNIS court.
All they told to us they prayed not to throw
A fit of fury like Master J. McEnroe.
Next upon the procession appeared
The two of SOCCER, muddied and teared.
"Good are we both," said they, "and if thou do
"Playeth in rain, ye wouldst look like this too."
They asked the good saint to dust the home
As not to look shabby from whence they roam.
The JAYVEES then formed a line about
Two miles and then set out
To the shrine of St. Boyden to see
About certain ways to make ye varsity.
Lastly came a tired and lone wench
Who looked like she ventured from a trench.
She cursed St. Boyden, shook her fist and then
The SPORTSWRITER followed the procession again.
Away, away, for the season has begun;
Time for work and a little fun.
And when ye playeth on INTRAMURALS, look out for Ye green and white Pinto with the broken front door.

UMass runs dry

About 600 University students and staff remained in dormitories today following yesterday's mass evacuation of students from campus.

Students began leaving campus at noon yesterday after a water shortage forced Chancellor Henry Koffler to cancel classes through the weekend and shut down dormitories.

The remaining students represent, for the most part, exchange and foreign students who could not arrange to leave the campus after pipes ran dry in the severe water shortage.

Students who remain on campus will be provided water from tanks set up by the Army-National Guard in three on-campus locations.

In addition to National Guard support, Gov. Edward J. King yesterday announced six state agencies would assist. The crisis began Wednesday when Amherst selectmen declared a townwide water shortage emergency.

University officials last night could not provide exact figures on how many students had left the Amherst area, but Dennis L. Madson, vice chancellor of student affairs last night said 579 students were left in dormitories.

Public Affairs Director Daniel Melley last night said University administrators received phone calls from as far away as Enfield, Conn., offering to house students for the weekend. He said his office was compiling a list of homes.

While students were hastily leaving campus yesterday by thumb, bus, foot and car—campus officials were meeting to find a solution.

One of the chief concerns of Provost Loren Baritz at a meeting of faculty and staff yesterday morning was the safety of students remaining on campus. The lack of water represented a fire hazard, he said.

Yesterday afternoon, the pressure of water hydrants in the northeast section of campus (including the Sylvan and Northeast residential areas) was so low it would have been impossible to fight a fire in that area. Amherst Fire Chief John T. Doherty said yesterday the pressure in the system had dropped by half. Two 1,000 gallon water tankers were put on stand-by in case of an emergency in that area, Doherty said.

To discourage looting Associate Director of Public Safety Philip J. Cavanaugh said increased numbers of University police would patrol the campus, along with state police.

"We're going to have extremely high visibility with both foot and car patrols," he said. "Let's face it, kids left with only one bag in hand. We're going to have an extremely high visibility to discourage outsiders from ripping off the rooms."

On the lighter side, Chancellor Koffler last night said he opened his home—next to the infirmary—to students fleeing the dorms. He said he had no takers because he, too, had run out of water.

"We're beginning to get a little bit back now," Koffler said, "but we have been out since last night."

Koffler said he was notified on Aug. 7 of an impending shortage by town officials. He was advised to take conservation measures, but had not been told it would be this serious, he said.

University officials were first notified of the reason for the water shortage this morning.

Town Manager A. Louis Hayward notified Provost Baritz at 6:30 yesterday morning that the cause of dry-ups in dormitories in all residential areas but Southwest was caused by a town problem.

Hayward said the University takes about half of the town's water supply during academic periods.

Town explains crisis

By CATHERINE CLABBY
Collegian Correspondent

Amherst town officials were hoping a new well and conservation efforts would prevent a repeat of 1978's water shortage, Town Manager Louis Hayward said.

But a water shortage is here.

The well is not finished yet and July and August were abnormally dry months and water consumption is up.

"We are building a well that is almost complete," Hayward said. "We were hoping to bridge the time between now and its completion."

Amherst Town Planner James Cope is not sure that the well, which should be completed by Oct. 1, can prevent further shortages this fall.

"Usually new facilities have to be tested, and testing takes time," he said.

Caught with a demand for water that exceeds supply, Hayward's only defense for the shortage was a claim that it could not have been forseen. Increased consumption at UMass, he said, decreased the water supply leaving an insufficient pressure level.

Approximately 17 million gallons of water was used on campus between Monday and Thursday, said Chancellor Henry Koffler.

"We would have been able to deal with the supply situation," Hayward said. "But the pressure problem forced the issue."

Hayward said his office had planned to declare a "water supply emergency" Monday Sept. 8 if there was no rainfall this weekend. But instead he declared the emergency Wednesday and recommended to University officials that the school close.

Superintendent of Public Works Stanley Ziomek said there was no way for his department to prevent the shortage even though the town's reservoir is not empty.

"Residents and students on campus were using water in great quantities and we were unable to fill our storage tanks fast enough," he said. "You can only push so much water into the system at one time."

He said the town has no plans to build additional storage tanks and his department is waiting also for completion of the town's new well to avoid further shortages.

Voluntary conservation was encouraged by town government as early as July, Hayward said. Now, with the declaration of an "emergency water supply", conservation is mandatory. There is a ban on water use for such things as irrigation and car washing.

UMass evacuates 12,000 in four hours

By KELLEY DOOLAN and JANE DEVIRGILIO
Collegian Staff

The emergency water shortage that gave UMass students their first long weekend of the semester also gave 12,000 students living on campus the task of getting home.

While some hitchhiked, drove their own cars, or rode with others, many students had to rely on buses.

Joe Bercier, the night dispatcher for Peter Pan Bus Lines, said approximately 50-55 buses in total had been dispatched to the campus. The last emergency buses left between 5 and 6 p.m. Bercier said approximately 2,500 students were evacuated by the emergency buses.

University Director of Security, Gerald T. O'Neil, said the remainder of students left campus, stayed at friends houses, or "bummed rides" home.

Dan Melley, University director of public information, said students were asked to put signs stating their destination in their car windows for other students needing rides.

"The cooperation was fantastic", O'Neil said, "students were helping students going out."

A ticket to Boston cost students $8 and a ticket to Worcester was $5. People who could not pay for buses gave their student numbers and were told they would be billed later.

According to Peter Pan President Peter Picknelly, the company will "analyze the number of students that were transported to Worcester and Boston and we will provide that many buses necessary on Sunday to return them all to campus.

The 55 buses were dispatched to four locations on campus, including the horseshoe in Southwest, behind Van Meter, Sylvan, and at the Campus Center Circle. Tables, staffed by University Transit workers, were set up at Southwest, Van Meter, and Sylvan to sell bus tickets in addition to the ticket office in the Campus Center.

'It was a mad house. They were pushing and shoving.'

"When we pulled up with the buses at 1:30 there were mobs of people waiting", said Vincent Vullo an emergency ticket taker upon arriving in Southwest.

"It was a mad house. They were pushing and shoving."

"I have no idea what I'm going to do", said David Rosen, a freshman Geology major from Dickenson Dorm when faced with the dilemma of purchasing a ticket. "This doesn't give me a very good impression of the school. I don't want to pay for a bus to go back to New Jersey. I guess I'll try to go to the Grateful Dead concert in Providence tonight."

Amherst police said altough eight or nine extra traffic controllers were dispatched to handle the increased traffic, there were no accidents reported.

When asked about the possibility of a reimbursement for the bus tickets, Marabeth Clapp, Director of Administrative Services, replied: "If we were to consider reimbursements, we would have to include all students going everywhere, not only by bus, and that is not possible."

Members of Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy, Student Senate, and Legal Services were distributing leaflets to outgoing students that urged them to "please save all travel reciepts. It may turn out that you can be reimbursed for this expense."

Mass evacuation, 'creepy'

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

Many UMass students were distressed, elated or confused by the forced evacuation of the campus yesterday but most students, as usual, took the situation in stride.

Many students interviewed in the Southwest area during the height of the evacuation said they were looking forward to the extra day and a half off. Some freshmen, however, said they were disappointed at not being able to spend their first weekend in the dorms.

But for the veterans of various UMass woes, the "crisis" was just like any other problem at the University. Most off-campus students are staying in the area, and some said they will house their displaced friends and "party all weekend."

Confusion seemed to reign in the early hours of afternoon when many students were first informed of the situation. When this reporter began to approach students for their reaction at about 1 p.m. many didn't know what was going on.

"Really, you're kidding?" one freshman woman said, nearly dropping her books. Informed the situation was real, she rushed off, saying something about having to pack up most of what she owned.

Perhaps the most striking example of how quickly people responded to the evacuation order was observed in the Campus Center. By 2:30 p.m., when the place is usually packed full with people, the pinball arcade near the Hatch was nearly deserted, with only a few diehards left.

In the residential areas, students rushing from the dorms wit their belongings resembled an evacuation from a genuine disaster.

As one UMass bus driver told Collegian reporter Kelley Doolan, the whole scene was "creepy."

"It makes you think what it would be like in an evacuation if one of the nuclear power plants blew up," bus driver Debby Lyons observed.

Panic was avoided generally, except when a few students realized the buses to Boston and Worcester cost money.

"What the hell am I going to do?" asked one student from Boston. "I got no money. Where am I going to go?"

Happily, however, it was reported that students without money were allowed to board the buses.

Student Government Association Treasurer Al Wallace reported another tense situation when he was attacked by an irate student after Wallace had helped deliver the evacuation notices to one Southwest dorm. Luckily Wallace wasn't hurt, and the student was soon convinced to comply with the request to leave.

But most of all, UMass students, typically, were making the best of the situation.

"It's going to add a party atmosphere to this whole weekend," said Michael Snyder, 21, of Sharon. "I expect 10 to 15 people will be staying in my apartment and we'll be partying all weekend."

Minute by minute

The water shortage spread through the University of Massachusetts system like an underground fire, appearing first in Sylvan Residential Area and spreading through Orchard Hill, Central and Northeast Residential area dormitories.

By early Thursday morning, nearly every dormitory and some campus buildings were without running water.

Amherst town officials, finding the water levels in their reservoirs far below operating capacity, declared a water emergency Wednesday night, banning all non-essential usage.

The situation was not quite as surprising to town officials as it might have been; they feared the worst each fall when UMass students swarmed into the area.

Town Moderator William Field said, "We've always been afraid of this happening." Field is also the Umass Dean of Students.

UMass Chancellor Henry Koffler met with University administrators Thursday morning and all gave the same dire pronouncement, "...A state of emergency exists at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst."

Their official announcement, released about 11:30 Thursday morning stated, "In the interest of public health and safety the Chancellor has cancelled all classes as of noon Thursday..."

Hadley water helps out

By MARK L. CURELOP
Collegian Staff

To alleviate the current water crisis, the town of Hadley will sell Amherst 200,000 gallons of water a day.

Water will be pumped into the Amherst water distribution system from Hadley via pipe connected to two fire hydrants on Roosevelt Street, one each on the Amherst and Hadley town lines, said Superintendent of Public Works Stanley Ziomek.

As well, wells on Bay State Road in South Amherst have been connected through overland pipes. Pipes were provided by the Civil Defense Corps free, said Amherst Board of Selectmen Chairman Atkins.

"We only pay for the labor and the moving," he said.

"The pipe should be laid Friday or at the latest Saturday," Atkins said.

An expected 300,000 to 500,000 gallons a day from wells on Bay State Road in South Amherst will be pumped into the water system.

The current amount of water in the Amherst reservoir is 4.54 million gallons.

"The additional water should raise us about 5 million gallons," Ziomek said.

The town of Amherst notified Hadley of the impending crisis two to three weeks ago, said Atkins.

As for the request, Hadley Board of Selectman Chairman Joseph Wanczyk said, "We granted Amherst's request in 12 hours. Hadley is more than happy to help Amherst," he said.

When asked if that would effect the Hadley farmers Ziomek responded, "If we affect the Hadley farmer, we'll shut the water off."

"The water system should be back to normal this weekend," he said because of the closing of the university and the reduction in local water consumption.

When the Lawrence Swamp is converted into another reservoir, an additional 1.6 million gallons a day will be available by October 1, Ziomek said.

LSO lawyers consider suit

By JANE DEVIRGILIO
Collegian Staff

In response to the emergency evacuation of dormitories, the Student Legal Services Office has begun investigation of several possibilities for legal action pertaining to the University Residence Hall Contract, according to managing attorney Chuck DiMare.

"After thorough investigation," said DiMare "the University may possibly be held liable for a breach of contract or because of negligence. The question here is whether the University feels they are responsible for the shortage."

UMass Chancellor Henry Koffler first learned of the seriousness of the water shortage Wednesday night, but Amherst Town Manager A. Louis Hayward had sent University officials a letter two weeks earlier, warning that a lack of rain and hot weather could produce water shorgages.

DiMare explained that the University may be found negligent if it is determined the administration "knew about a possible shortage" prior to the opening of school.

Under the clause of "Obligations of the University", the residence hall contract reads: The University will furnish utilities to each residence hall...The University shall also provide prompt maintenance service in the event of mechanical difficulties or interruptions to any utility service which is under control and/or ownership of the University; and promptly seek such service in the event such difficulties or interruptions arise in facilities or equipment serving the University but not under University control. There will be no adjustment of housing fees because of the University's inability to restore service for a reasonable period of time. The University shall, within a reasonable time, exercise reasonable care to correct unsafe conditions in the residence halls.

"However," DiMare said, "there are possible loopholes in the contract that may not result in liability for the university." One such loophole is the phrase stating there will be prompt maintenance service "to any utility service which is under control and/or ownership of the University:."

"The water is not completely under University control or is it owned by the University," DiMare said.

DiMare also said that a possibility for some restitution for students may exist since there is a clause in the contract entitled "Rent Rebates and Refunds" that states: The student may apply for a rent rebate or termination of contract as a result of hardship in living condition and/or for a rent refund due to damage or loss of personal property caused by University negligence or wrongdoing."

"There certainly has been hardship, in our opinion," said DiMare.

Yippie Hoffman surrenders ends seven-year chase

NEW YORK (AP) — Abbie Hoffman ended six years as a fugitive yesterday, eluding waiting reporters and photographers to surrender to the state narcotics prosecutor on a charge of selling cocaine. He was released without bail within a few hours.

Hoffman, a leader of the anti-war protest movement in the 1960s, had gotten maximum publicity out of the prelude to his surrender.

But shortly before 9 a.m., the graying, 43-year-old founder of the Yippies turned himself in at the state office building, entering through a side entrance. He was accompanied by his new wife, Johanna Lawrenson.

At the bail hearing, Criminal Court Judge William Milton told Hoffman that he had decided to release him without bail.

There was a scattering of applause. Hoffman turned to his friends and relatives among the 100 spectators, grinned and flashed a V-sign. He was then led out a side door, again evading reporters.

In requesting that no bail be set, Hoffman's lawyer, Gerald Lefcourt, noted that Hoffman had turned himself in voluntarily and said "the court cannot look lightly on such an act."

The prosecutor had asked Milton to set bail at $100,000 secured bond or $10,000 cash for Hoffman.

As a bail-jumper on a 1973 charge of peddling cocaine to undercover cops, Hoffman was run through the routine of being printed, mugged and booked before being taken before the judge. He had been free on $50,000 bail when he skipped out early in 1974 rather than face trial and possible life imprisonment if convicted.

Authorities maintained no special deal had been made in advance, but sources have said Hoffman would be allowed to plead to a reduced charge at a subsequent hearing. Hoffman did not enter a plea at Thursday's bail hearing.

Hoffman had gotten cold feet twice before in discusslons about surrendering and he was "a little nervous" about it yesterday too, said his brother, Jack, who met with reporters at the state building.

He hated his life on the run and longed to return to stir up campus activism again, Hoffman said in a forthcoming magazine article.

Hoffman lived most of his fugitive years as a free-lance writer and ecology activist in Fineview, N.Y., a tiny community in the Thousand Islands of the St. Lawrence River.

After laying low, the itch for the spotlight returned and he lead a protest movement under one of his assumed names, Barry Freed, testifying at a Senate hearing and granting newspaper and television interviews.

Draft registration betters Vietnam era signup figure

WASHINGTON (AP) — Compliance with the government's new draft registration program is sharply improved over the Vietnam-era sign-up, the head of the Selective Service system said yesterday.

Director Bernard Rostker said about 93 percent of eligible youths had registered by three weeks after the initial July signup period. Comparable figures for 1973, he said, showed an 83 percent compliance.

The figures were immediately challenged by the Rev. Barry Lynn, chairman of the Committee Against Registration and the Draft. He called for an independent audit of the registration forms.

Rostker had said earlier that he would agree to such ah audit, and Lynn and Deputy Selective Service Director Brayton Harris indicated that Congress' General Accounting Office would be an appropriate agency for the job.

Whether such an audit will be held, though, remains a decision for Congress.

Lynn suggested that release of the figures may have been aimed at influencing congressional consideration of appropriations for Selective Service, which got underway Thursday.

The initial two-week registration program was held in July for people born in 1960 and 1961.

With an estimated 3,880,000 young men eligible to sign up, Rostker said 3,593,187 cards had been turned in by August 22.

He conceded that some will have to be weeded out to eliminate false names, women and over-age people, but said a spot check had shown an error rate of only about 1 percent so far.

Rostker declined to characterize the success of the program to date, but did comment that he is "not unhappy" with it.

"Basically 19 and 20-year-olds are patriotic, law-abiding citizens who heeded the call of the President and Congress. The very great majority registered as required," said Rostker.

Registration of men born in 1962 will be held in January and after that youths will be expected to sign up within 30 days of their 18th birthday.

Failure to register is a felony punishable by up to five years in prison and a $10,000 fine, but Rostker emphasized that he is "in the registration business, not the prosecution business."

Registrants should begin receiving confirmation forms in about two weeks, he said, and it will be at least 90 days before any prosecutions can be recommended to the Justice Department.

A one-in-700 sample of the cards returned indicated that 1.8 percent wrote "conscientious objector" or "registered under protest" on the cards, Rostker said.

RESPONSE:

High, dry and homeless, 'Where do we go?'

By PATRICK HAFEY
Collegian Correspondent

It appeared to be the end of the semester. Or possibly the first day of spring vacation.

Students sitting with suitcases and backpacks by the roadside and in front of dorms, were waiting anxiously for friends or relatives to arrive. But yesterday was neither the last day of the semester nor the first day of spring vacation. It should have been the second day of classes but, by 3 p.m. the campus appeared as it does on a mid-summer's day -- quiet, and empty.

UMass is without water, and the students have been forced to go home until the problem is resolved.

"I'm really disappointed. I've just gotten all excited about being here and now I've got to turn around and go all the way back home again," said junior Nancy Kastle.

"I think it might be kind of fun to go home, spend a couple of days on the beach," said freshman Elsa McCann, from Marshfield.

The water problem, which began affecting the UMass dormitories Wednesday night, has been recurring in Amherst for several years. Many students said that because the situation has occured in recent years the administration, or town officials, should have been aware of the potential crisis.

"I feel this situation is just another example of the lack of coordination and planning between the powers that control the water supply in the Quabbin and elsewhere, and this University, with it's thousands of students," said Prof. Benjamin Ricci, instructor of physiology and exercise at UMass.

To the students and faculty suffering from yesterday's sudden loss of water, explanations of the water shortage was not nearly as important as the question of where those affected would stay. There was much confusion about this. With the only official word being that all dorms would be closed until Monday, many students were uncertain where they would spend the next four nights.

"I live in Andover, Mass. and I have no choice but to go home. I don't have any place to stay around here," said sophomore Hillary Park. Park was fortunate, he had a place to go. But there were hundreds left stranded, and at 4 p.m. there was still no word concerning their fate. A major concern voiced by many students with the option of jumping a bus for home was the plight of the students left temporarily homeless -- the foreign student, transfer student and students living too far away.

"What are they going to do with the students who can't make it home? We got one student from London here. What are they going to do with him?" asked sophomore Brad Scofield, of Thatcher Dormitory.

As in any crisis, the rumors were flying and one rumor was no more reliable than the next. "We heard they were going to stick all the students who couldn't get home in one dorm," siad Scofield.

The number of students waiting in line to buy tickets at the bus ticket office in the Campus Center have led one to believe that there wouldn't be enough students left to fill a dormitory. Several hundred students, standing with baggage in hand, were waiting patiently for their turn at the ticket window.

As the line moved slowly through the doors into and around the perimeter of the lobby, small packs and suitcases were being constantly adjusted to serve as temporary seats. It was obvious, by the amount of baggage each person was carrying, that no one expected to be gone for long.

"If it's all over by Monday I'll be back," said Diana Dunn, a sophomore from New Jersey. Several of her friends waiting in line with her agreed. They were anxious for the crisis to be resolved so they can return.

Despite the heat and being forced off campus for several days, the general mood of the students interviewed was remarkably high. People complained about having little guidance from the administration and being forced to pay transportation costs that they could not afford, and about other inconveniences which the students shared. A few were outraged at the UMass administration for failing to warn them. But most were hesitant to place the blame on any one person.

SGA leaders plan to push for compensation

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

While thousands of UMass students were struggling to leave campus yesterday afternoon, officials of the Student Government Association were advising those students to save their bus ticket receipts in the hope the University may offer refunds.

Al Wallace, SGA treasurer, said student leaders would be meeting soon with University and town officials to help determine what can be done for students who were put out of their dormitories. The University has a contract with the town to provide water, Wallace said, and apparently the town has violated the contract.

"Before we do anything, we've got to get the facts," Wallace said. "It's important that everyone has the facts and knows what is going on. The administration is taking the time to let students know what is going on."

SGA co-President Rich LaVoice said he was working on attempting to secure some type of refunds for housing and missed meals.

"If you're on the 19 meal plan, you're going to miss 9 meals," LaVoice said. "The housing contract may also have some provision to allow students to receive money back."

LaVoice also said he was suggesting to the administration that the add-drop period, the withdrawal period and the refund period by extended. He also said he was concerned about health codes, safety of student's belongings and checks of water purity.

SGA co-President Rich Moran said he was concerned about making students aware that there is a safety hazard as the result of the crisis.

"We are trying to get the word out that there is a fire and safety hazard. It's in the best interest of the students to vacate the University," Moran said.

Moran said the issue of compensation to students would probably not be discussed until next week, after the dangers have passed.

A leaflet, distributed by the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy to all students boarding buses for home, also urged students to save their receipts for possible refunds.

The release also asked students to attend next Wednesday night's Undergraduate Student Senate meeting to discuss possible rent rebates. The statement claimed the University may have violated students' housing contracts.

Amherst Nursing Home workers to vote on possible job action

By STEPHEN MORAN
Collegian Correspondent

The 60 non-professional staff workers of the Amherst Nursing Home will vote Sunday whether or not to strike for the right to retain union representation.

Richard Sanders, representative for the New England Health Care Employees Union and chief union negotiator in the five month old contract dispute, accused the nursing home negotiators of "trying to bust the union."

Betty Kravitz, owner of the home, would not comment.

"Their main objective in the negotiations is to get the union out of here," he said. He claims that management has refused to consider a union security provision in the new contract. This provison, which was in the last contract, makes union membership mandatory. By making the nursing home on "open shop," employees could decide on an individual basis whether or not to join the union.

If an open shop clause was written into the new contract, Sanders said, then equal wages and benefits would be paid to both union and non-union members.

"The only difference would be that union members would have to pay dues, while non-union members would not. This would encourage new employees to opt for non-union status, and the union would be busted," he said.

Although short term monetary gains may result for the employees, he claimed that in the long run employees would suffer without the sophisticated bargaining methods of union negotiators.

Informational picketing is planned for this Sunday at 2 p.m. in the nursing home parking lot on University Drive. Sanders appealed for student support: "The more people we have out here on the picket line in support of us, the less willing management will be to go through with a strike."

If management observes abundant support for union members' claims, then the adverse publicity of a strike, with its consequent interruption of health care services, would, he said, "be bad for business. When people think the Amherst Nursing Home is less stable, they will be less willing to send patients there."

"Management will find it easy to break the strike if students are willing to scab."

The strike vote seems imminent, Sanders said, claiming that 95 percent of the staff workers have voiced a willingness to strike.

But Sanders voiced a note of concern over possible consequences of a strike.

"Management will find it easy to break the strike if students are willing to scab," he said. "Many students need employment, and if they seek employment at the nursing home while we are striking then there will be no pressure for management to settle the contract dispute."

Federal mediators were needed to resume talks when they broke down on June 19. Although negotiations resumed on Aug. 20, Sanders said the "stall tactics" employed by management negotiators may have been employed to force a strike, thus making the picketers' jobs vulnerable to scabs.

In addition to the right to retain union representation, Sanders said that wage demands have contributed to the need for a strike vote. He said that management has "flatly refused" to negotiate a retroactive pay clause. The last two-year contract expired May 8. He is asking that the new contract pay increases be made retroactive to that date.

Also at issue is the wage itself. To date, management has offered union members a 26 percent increase over two years. But Sanders claims that "26 percent is the wrong way of looking at it.

"We got 80 cents over two years in our last contract," he said. "So far, management has offered 85 cents over two years on the new contract. That gives us only 5 cents for inflation."

The union is seeking $1.45 over two years.

King recalls reps

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Edward J. King announced yesterday he was recalling the Massachusetts Legislature to act on a proposed property tax limit called Proposition 2 1/2, which he does not favor, and other constitutional issues.

It was the first time a Massachusetts governor moved to bring legislators back into a joint constitutional convention.

King said he would limit the session to unfinished constitutional questions, dashing hopes of county employees that he would back a re-appropriation of funds to give them raises.

King said he will ask the Executive Council to approve the recall Wednesday. Although some items on the pending constitutional agenda deal with abolishing the council, King said he was confident that his request would be honored.

The selected date is two days after the primary election, a few days earlier than King's aides had expected the recall. Three pending items on the agenda have been approved by one Legislature and if re-approved could qualify for ratification votes in November.

These include adding a House seat for Nantucket and Dukes counties; changing legislative procedure for making new laws effective earlier; and a measure related to highway beautification.

Because of ballot printing problems, it was not certain that any of these three, if they clear their hurdles, would make the ballot.

His prepared statement acknowledged a constitutional provision that requires the governor to call joint sessions of the Legislature when there has not been final action on a constitutional amendment.

The Legislature adjourned in early July without completing action on several pending constitutional amendments, including the Proposition 2 1/2.

"A great deal of the public is interested in controlling taxes," King said. "I am, too."

Proposition 2 1/2 already is on the November ballot in the form of a proposed state law arising from an initiative petition.

Hanger hired as new assistant hoop coach

By JONATHAN HAMILTON
Collegian Staff

The UMass basketball program after its 2-24 nightmare season last year has taken a positive step over the summer by hiring Samuel Hanger as assistant basketball coach. Hanger, a 1974 graduate of the State University of New York-Binghamton looks forward to the challenge of the coming season.

"The most important thing for us now is to get the student body behind us. In my coaching experience I have also come across seasons like that of last year. During those you realize how much heart you have."

Judging from his past coaching though, his won-lost records are quite impressive. Hanger got interested in coaching when after graduating from college he went back to his alma mater, Thomas Jefferson High School. "I was tired of watching them lose all the time so I asked their coach if I could volunteer as an assistant." While an assistant coach Hanger helped guide the team to a 80-27 record and back to back Brooklyn Championships in 1978-79. Probably though his proudest moment came this past summer when, as head coach, he led an AAU high school team to an undefeated season and national championship.

During last year Hanger was an intern (a non-paying job that involves mostly scouting) at St. John's University. The Redmen were nationally ranked last season, participated in the NCAA's and finished with a 22-5 record. Hanger expects to do some recruiting here at UMass but as he says, "Right now I'm going to help Ray (Head Coach Ray Wilson) in any way I can. I expect later that he will ease me into that role."

Hanger has been so busy lately in his office at Boyden that he has not had a chance to really meet all the players or even take a look at the Cage. He hopes to stress fundamentals in practice daily and wants to "pressure" the other team. Hanger spoke highly of Wilson's recruiting job. "There are some good candidates including one 6'10" John Moser. Next year though I hope to bring some kids I know personally."

Hanger is looking forward to living in the Amherst area. He is married and has two children.

Connors, Mandlikoua in semis

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK — Jimmy Connors advanced to the semi-finals of the U.S. Open tennis championships today with a hard-earned 6-1, 3-6, 6-3, 6-0 victory over 21-year-old Eliot Teltscher.

Connors, who won this event in 1974, 1976 and 1978 and is seeded third, got quite a workout from the unseeded Teltscher, who had upset 13th-seeded Brian Gottfried in the fourth round.

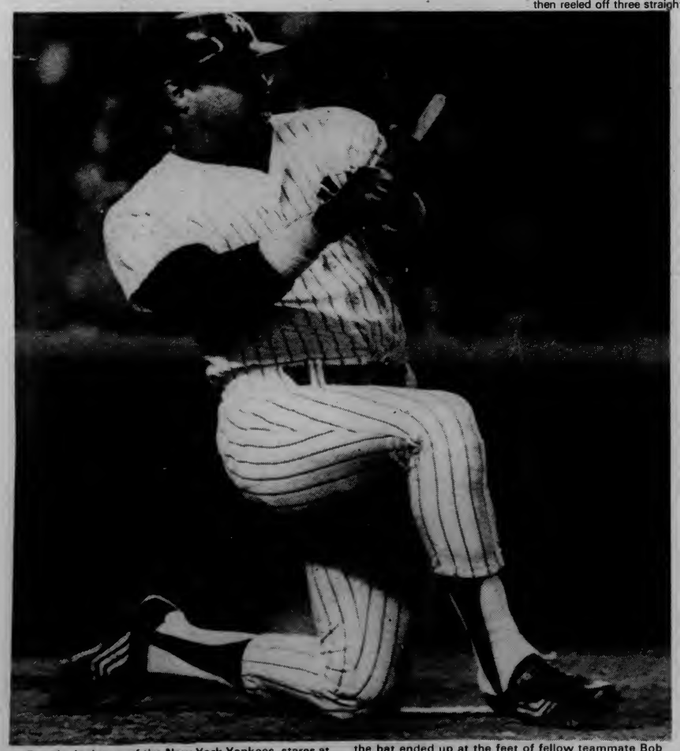
After a shaky start, Teltscher broke Connors' serve three times in the second set, scoring effectively with passing shots. But Connors, volleying well and also hitting hid groundstrokes with authority, regained control in the third set and played superbly in the fourth, when he did not lose a game.

Connors will meet the winner of Thursday night's quarter-final between defending champion John McEnroe and Johan Kriek of South Africa.

Earlier, 18-year-old Hana Mandlikova of Czechoslovakia, the No. 9 seed, moved into the semifinals with an easy 6-2, 6-2 victory over Barbara Hallquist in a match that lasted just 50 minutes.

The 18-year-old Mandlikova, who earlier in the tournament eliminated second-seeded Martina Navratilova, was too smooth and steady for Hallquist, 23, a collegiate star at Southern Cal who has had only limited success on the pro tour.

Mandlikova dominated the match with her smooth groundstrokes, fine serve and clean passing shots. Mandlikova won four games in a row to close out the first set and then reeled off three straight to take a 4-1 lead in the second, making things easy.



Reggie Jackson, of the New York Yankees, stares at the remnants of his bat which broke on a foul tip in last night's game with the California Angels. The rest of the bat ended up at the feet of fellow teammate Bob Watson, who was on first at the time. (AP Laserphoto)

Rollie Roars

By NORM CLARKE
AP Sports Writer

Charlie Finley's stormy era has ended, with the recent sale of the Oakland A's, but the malady lingers on.

"This place is a zoo, a nuthouse," growled relief ace Rollie Fingers.

This year could have been 1973, and the location might have been any American League clubhouse occupied by Finley's rebellious A's.

But the date is September 1980. And Finger's disdain is being directed at the San Diego Padre's management.

"It's worse here than it was in Oakland," judged Fingers, disgruntled over the Padre's skid into last place in the National League West. "At least Finley knew a lot about the game and hired a good scouting system. We don't have any baseball people here."

Veteran catcher Gene Tenace, another refugee from Finley's dismantled title teams, joined the mutiny.

Their prime target: Jerry Coleman, the Padre's long time play-by-play broadcaster who, without previous managerial experience, replaced Roger Craig.

At a press conference announcing Coleman's promotion last fall, club president Ballard Smith explained, "Why should we hire somebody else's reject?"

But Coleman's move to the dugout hasn't set well with the players.

A recent poll indicated that half the team categorized Coleman as a "bad" manager, with only one rating him "good."

"The players all like Jerry Coleman, the announcer, but they don't respect Jerry Coleman, the manager," said Tenace. "There's a generation gap between Jerry and the players. Nowadays, players with big, long-term contracts need to be motivated."

Fingers, who called the team "a joke" and demanded to be traded, is standing fast.

"I don't regret what I said. All I'm trying to do is get through the storm and get them to trade me. That's my only hope," said Fingers, 34, baseball's all-time leader in saves. With one year remaining on a five-year contract, and a 2.70 earned run average this year, he plans to seek free agency in 1981.

Fingers contends that Coleman has been guilty of such questionable strategy as calling for two-strike bunts and accidentally flashing signs to Danny Ozark, third base coach of the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Coleman has reacted to the furor in typical low-key manner.

"I don't hold any grudges. You've got to remember I'm in my 40th year of baseball. I've seen Casey Stengel scrap with players and writers. I'm not going to trade Rollie. He can stay mad and pitch well. In fact he's pitching the best ball of his career right now.

"This isn't a Boy Scout troop or kindergarten," he added. "You've got to be tough. I can stand the heat."

Coleman, the 55-year-old former infielder of the New York Yankees, said he has no plans to toss in the towel. "I would quit only if they the front office want me to. We're rebuilding and if they want me to oversee that, fine. If not..."

Water level up, arrivals slow

By KATHERINE HOWLEY AND RICHARD NAGLE
Collegian Staff

The flood of students that left the University last Thursday has trickled back to their dormitory rooms.

Housing administrators said about 75 percent of the nearly 12,000 students who left Thursday had returned to the dormitories by 6:30 p.m. yesterday.

Peter Pan Bus Dispatcher Gary Munley said the Springfield bus terminal yesterday with returning students.

He said 50-55 buses were used to transport about 2500 students from Boston back to Amherst.

Amherst Superintendent of Public Works Stanley Ziomek said yesterday that the town's storage tanks were near capacity and that about 800,000 gallons of water a day is being pumped from emergency connections in Hadley and Amherst.

University Director of Public Affairs Daniel Melley said conservation measures are in effect in dormitories and air conditioning has been shut off in most campus buildings.

Melley said air will be circulated in buildings where windows cannot be opened but, "it will be very uncomfortable and very stale."

Melley also said students are asked to take breif showers, flush the toilet only when necessary, and report dripping faucets.

Town Manager A. Louis Hayward said although the town has more water than it did last week, there is still a danger of the level in the town's two reservoirs dropping.

"We are still in a critical period," he said. Because of continued hot and dry weather. Hayward said town residents will receive mailings at the beginning of the week instructing them about water conservation.

At a meeting Saturday, University and town officials, made the final decision to re-open the school after an hour-long discussion.

But Amherst Board of Selectman Chairman William Atkins disagreed with the decision.

Atkins suggested that the re-opening be delayed two days to allow town engineers the opportunity to shut down one well in South Amherst to check the pump and water level.

University officials said the add/drop deadline will be extended two days to September 18 and the two missed days of classes will be made up.

"I just have that gut feeling that we should wait a couple of days to avoid a catastrophe," Atkins said after the meeting.

"It would be a mistake to re-open and then send students back," he said.

And while students were flocking out of Amherst Thursday, Legal Services Attorney Charles DiMare was investigating the possibility of legal action on behalf of students against the University and the town.

"After thorough investigation the University may possibly be held liable for a breach of (the housing) contract or because of negligence. The question here is whether the

The unexpected vacation caused by the water shortage brought mixed reactions from both the students forced to leave and those that remained at the ghost-like University of Massachusetts campus.

"I was just getting used to it here," said Beth Mendelsohn, a first semester freshman living in Coolidge. Karen Martino a freshman from Burlington, Mass. said, "The closing of school was a bummer but it beats not taking a shower."

"You would think that after all these years of problems that they would be prepared for something like this," said Sue Wiggin, a junior and Van Meter resident. A water shortage occured in the fall of 1978 but the University was not shut down.

Liz O'Neall, a student living in Swiss Village Apartments was worried about what this will do to the school's image. Problems with the University library and campus-wide vandalism have been publicized in the past.

Though the closing of school presented hardships for some, most students interviewed said they didn't mind. Some students left for Cape Cod, some for the Grateful Dead concert in Maine, but twenty five hundred students left by bus Thursday, according to Joe Bercier, director of Peter Pan Bus Lines.

"It was no big deal," said junior Clyde Bennett from Deerfield, a resident of George Washington. Hamlin Resident Assistant Wayne Kruithoff said, "The weekend was so quiet I didn't know why I had to stay."

Most of the staff said the student body as a whole should be commended for their behavior. Resident Assistant Peter McKearny from Baker said "the University acted as superbly as possible in this type of situation."

"There are no complaints and nothing but praise for the students and staff who kept the dormitories secure during the weekend," said Robert C. White, associate area director of Southwest Residential College. Patterson Head of Residence John Coull said, "Instead of kicking ourselves in the ass I think we should be patting ourselves on the back." Coull said he thought the problem was caused by poor communication and everyone learned from the experience.

Anne Davoren, a Coolidge resident said, "It would've been better if it had happened at midterms or finals." The 20-year old Malden resident stayed in Amherst at a friend's apartment.

"I study better," said Fikret Aksoy, 25, a graduate student in chemical engineering from Bartin, Turkey. A 21-year old junior and resident of Delta Chi fraternity Kevin Fowler said, "All I'm interested in is a longer drought."

Paul Dinerstein of Prince, the only dorm allowed to remain open, said "It's never too quiet around here," but it was a pleasant respite for all who remained in Prince."

Laura Campanis, 19, from Dover, and a sophmore transfer in communications and English from the University of Miami now living in Brett house said, "This place wasn't meant to be quiet."

Knowlton Opens

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

After being closed for renovations for three semesters, Knowlton dormitory, an all women's living quarters in the Northeast area, has reopened.

The four-story building opened its doors to about 150 women yesterday, many of whom had left the building when it closed down for repairs in the spring of 1979.

The opening, originally scheduled for Saturday, was delayed one day because of the closing of the University due to the water shortage.

Head of Residence Marjorie Harrison said the opening of Knowlton should help, at least in part, alleviate the housing crunch on campus. Many of the women scheduled to live in Knowlton have been staying in other dorms which will become available when these women move into Knowlton, she said.

Additional spaces may also be available in Knowlton once staff members have an accurate count of how many women have chosen to return to the dorm. Harrison said all women living in Knowlton in the spring of 1979 were given the option of returning to the building once it reopened, but that she would not know how many will be returning until sometime today. When that number is known, spaces will be available for other students in Knowlton, she said.

Harrison said the dorm has been completely remodeled and made accessable to hadicapped students. A little work remains to be done on the dorm, mostly in lounge areas, but it should be completed within a few days, she said.

"All the student rooms are done," Harrison said. "I expect things will be completed within the next day or two. It's happening day by day. The dorm is ready for occupancy now."

The building's lounges, kitchenettes, the head of residence's apartment, and the main entrance are all accessible to handicapped students. In addition, several rooms designed specifically for handicapped students are available, Harrison said. An elevator has been installed to aid the handicapped.

"Hopefully, it will encourage handicapped women to come to UMass. I find that very exciting," Harrison said.

While no handicapped students are currently scheduled to live in Knowlton, Harrison said space would be made available for handicapped women who wanted to reside there in the future.

"There are a small number of handicapped students on campus this fall and most are already settled into other dorms," she said.

Harrison said the new Knowlton is a "beautiful place," well lit, and that it has "very warm colors."

"The whole impression is a lot of warmth," Harrison said. "The old Knowltonites tell me it's very different, very beautiful."

Police quell 'riot' in Brockton

BROCKTON (AP)—Riot-equipped policemen swept through a three-block downtown area early yesterday to break up a crowd of some 800 to 1,500 rowdy youths who blocked traffic and threw rocks and bottles after a scheduled hot-rod show was called off.

Mayor David Crosby declared a "full state of emergency" in this city 30 miles south of Boston after police told him downtown was in a "riot situation," according to Police Capt. Edward A. Galante.

Nearly 175 officers, most from surrounding communities, moved in with police dogs and tear gas. Streets were calm at about 2 a.m., but glass from broken beer bottles and smashed car windows littered nearly every street corner.

"Tear gas was used," Galante said. "We tried to disperse it (the crowd) first with riot formations. But there was the usual reluctance of a crowd to move and obey police...They were throwing beer bottles and banging on cars."

Iranian cabinet to be ratified

(AP)—Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr yesterday formally accepted 14 members of the revolutionary government's first proposed Cabinet yesterday and presented them to Parliament for approval, Tehran Radio said.

The legislative body agreed to consider the matter on Tuesday. Ratification of the new government is expected to clear the way for debate in Parliament on the fate of the 52 American hostages, who spent their 309th day Sunday in the custody of Iranian militants.

Revolutionary leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini gave the Parliament, or Majlis, final authority over the hostages' fate. The Majlis' Foreign Relations Commission held preliminary discussions on the issue Saturday. No date was set for the open debate by the full Parliament, however, and Iranian leaders are not known to have indicated whether the question will be high on the legislative agenda.

U.S. Secretary of State Edmund S. Muskie, appearing on CBS-TV's Face the Nation, said there were "signs that there are (Iranians) beginning to think of actually debating the hostage issue."

Port fire ignites fuel tanks

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — A raging fire in a fuel storage area in the Port of Albany set off explosions in at least two gasoline tanks yesterday, forcing the evacuation of residents near the downtown area and disrupting river traffic, an official said.

A section of Interstate 787 near the scene was closed.

No injuries were reported.

At least two tanks at the Mobil facility, holding about 1.5 million gallons of gasoline, were believed to have exploded several hours after the fire was discovered about 10 a.m.

It was not known what caused the fire.

Mobile spokesman Bob Wiener said the fire started in a line transferring gasoline from one tank to another. The fire spread to the tank being emptied and at least one other storage tank, he said.

Ray Hull, a resident of nearby Rensselaer just across the river from Albany, said he saw an explosion about 2 p.m. from the Dunn Memorial Bridge in downtown Albany.

Corruption probe begins final stage

BOSTON (AP) — The state building corruption commission, dormant through the summer after a spectacular spring, will soon be back in the news with its grand finale.

Staff effort is proceeding on schedule and on four fronts, chief counsel Nick Littlefield said. Though no decision has been made, it is possible that developments in ongoing investigations might result in additional public hearings, he reported.

"This is wrapping-down time," Littlefield said. It is also a building-block operation, he explained, as the reduced staff attempts to put together the pieces from a two-year probe of abuses and failings in public construction.

While he did not go into particulars, it is no secret that the commission's findings — due by Dec. 31 — spell trouble for some individuals. Its public hearings from March 19 to June 27 produced a series of political shock waves — involving allegations of payoffs — that are still reverberating.

"This is wrapping-down time."

The seven-member commmission is privately considering referrals for prosecution or further investigation. These are going to U.S. Attorney Edward F. Harrington, a review board created by Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti or to the state Ethics Commission, Littlefield said.

"The commission is taking this responsibility very seriously and reviewing every staff recommendation carefully before deciding," Littlefield said. "What happens after a referral is made is out of our hands."

The main focus for some staffers is the preparation of the final report. "This is a fairly ambitious project," Littlefield said in pointed understatement.

The commission's public hearings yielded 40,000 pages of transcript. In addition, the drafters of what is expected to be a memorable report can draw recommendations or conclusions from the many unpublicized private hearings.

Other staffers are involved in legislative recommendations, including revisions in the commission's most controversial products which were enacted in the closing hours of the legislative session.

One of these creates a powerful office of inspector general, still unfilled, and the other restructures the method by which public construction is undertaken.

The commission is expected to renew its bid for more public funding of political campaigns as a way to eliminate one alleged source of public corruption — incessant demands by politicians for contributions.

Nursing home picketed

By STEPHEN MORAN
Collegian Staff

The non-professional staff members of the Amherst Nursing Home picketed yesterday in an effort to gain public support for their contract demands. Meanwhile area and campus organizations rallied to show their support.

During the course of the two hour event, members of District 1199 of the New England Health Care Employees Union conducted a vote to determine whether or not to authorize a strike. Although the final outcome of the vote will not be known until tomorrow, Rick Graham, union spokesman and negotiating committee member, stated that preliminary indications are that members were "overwhelmingly favorable to a strike vote."

The informational picketing was initiated to muster support for union members' frustration over the slow pace of the five month old contract negotiations.

Betty Kravits, nursing home owner and operator, refused to comment on the parking lot activities. She said patient care has not been affected by the picketing. "The union is not on strike, and as such, the staff members continue to work on their normal shifts."

Passing motorists blared their horns in response to signs which read: "Honk if you support us." Meanwhile Richard Sanders, union organizer, claimed wide community backing at the picket line. "The UMass Faculty Union and the University Staff Association have written letters of support and have come out today to show their support."

He claimed additional support from the Amherst Fire Fighters, Colonial Village Tenants Association, the Amherst-Pelham Teachers Association, the four unions that represent UMass workers and Everywoman's Center.

Stating that he will recruit additional moral support from area religious and community leaders, Sanders said he wil not accede to management's present demands.

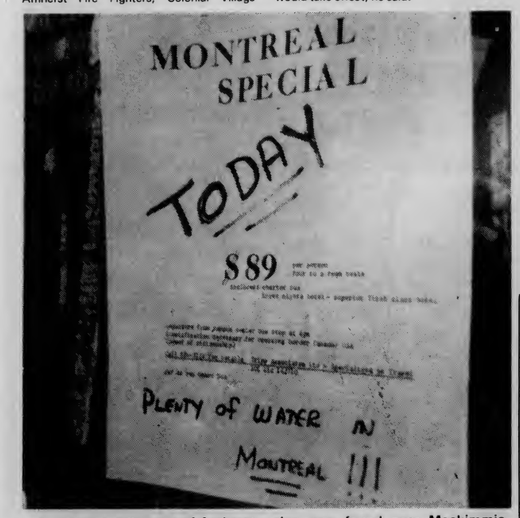
Mary Wentworth, Everywoman's Center member, claimed in the event of a strike, Center members will "go to various dorms and take a collection. Also, we will urge people not to take jobs at the nursing home."

Ellen Edwards, member of the union negotiating committee, claimed that she had received pledges of "substantial amounts of money from three Amherst citizens" in the event of a strike. In addition, union members have been advised to secure temporary, part-time jobs to support themselves if a strike is called.

Not all members are sympathetic to the possibility of a strike. Maryanne Musanti, a staff member of the nursing home for six years, stated that she "didn't want a union. They only show up when there's a contract negotiation. We never see them during the year." Although she agrees that a wage raise is long overdue, she said this was not her greatest concern. "I enjoy being with the patients, and as long as I can afford to survive, I'll make a go at it."

A majority vote does not necessarily signal the start of a strike, according to Sanders. It would simply mean that union members had given the negotiating committee the authority to call a strike. If the committee were to call a strike, a ten day notice must be given to management before the strike would take effect, he said.

Billy Whitney Jr. volunteered the sign outside his gas station in Springfield over the weekend sympathizing with the plight of waterless UMass.



Students heading out of Amherst on the water-shortage-weekend had more than a few options open. This sign was found near Mackimmie dormitory in the Southwest Residential Area.

Rains that officials hope will replenish the town's depleted water supply are not expected before Wednesday.

The Associated Press extended weather forecast indicates there is a chance of showers Wednesday with clearing and fair skies for Thursday and Friday.

Engineering drive booms; $1.1 million netted so far

By J. ADAM BAILEY
Collegian Correspondent

The $5.5 million fund raising drive for the University of Massachusetts begun last January has received about $1.1 million in cash and new equipment, according to Dean of Engineering School Russel C. Jones.

"We can expect to double that in the next month," Jones said.

Most of the new equipment and money has come from Digital Equipment Corporation and Analog Stystems, remainder from the Engineering Alumni according to Director of Development and Alumni Affairs, Dallas L. Darland.

The equipment that has arrived is the Vox Comp, Digital's newest and most expensive computer, which sells for about $440 on the open market, said Darland. There is also a piece of computer graphics equipment from Analog that is supposed to arrive soon, he said.

This drive is the first one of its kind at UMass, Darland said. "If it's successful, then we hope to expand it to other schools at the University," he added.

The engineering school is currently talking to about 50 different companies and some likely prospects are in the works, according to Jones.

Jones said the money will probably be used to upgrade the video instruction program changing it from black and white to color, and to buy equipment for the undergraduate electrical engineering lab and personal size computers which, Jones said, will give students more freedom in computer use.

'Dressed To Kill' — fascinating showcase of sex and violence

By ROBERT CARGILL
Collegian Staff

"Dressed To Kill" isn't the "first great American movie of the eighties," (as one well-known critic has hailed it), but it certainly is the most fascinating depiction of sex and violence to hit the screen since Stanley Kubrick's "A Clockwork Orange."

In fact Director Brian DePalma's latest proves that sexual fantasy combined with the proper amount of violence can be, cinematically speaking, extremely poetic, beautifully lurid, and unbelievably effective as a theme.

Angie Dickinson is Kate Miller, the sexually frustrated surburban housewife who looks for trouble and finds it. She happens to be seeing a psychiatrist (Michael Caine) whose worse client is himself. His weirdness is destroying the women who cause him to be sexually aroused, and he commits these vicious murders as another person, a ratty blonde woman in sunglasses.

Caine, as Dr. Elliott the transvestite, is pursued by Peter, Kate's son and the unsung hero of the film, played by the young Keith Godon. Peter ultimately solves his own mother's murder mystery. Confusing indeed, but it's the intricate and spine-tingling plot that makes "Dressed To Kill" the "squirmer" it's claimed to be.

There's also the stunning Nancy Allen, the wife of Brian DePalma in real life, who plays a gorgeous and expensive young prostitute who spends her earnings on the stock market. It is she who witnesses the initial murder and thus is eventually sought by the ruthless killer. Allen's mere presence is erotic and the emphasis on her character throughout the latter half of the film is most appropriate. A psychotic doctor, who aches to be a woman, stalking a voluptuous young call girl—very little is left to the viewer's imagination. This flick is pure fantasy, delightful in its consistent level of perversity.

"Dressed To Kill" does not extend itself much beyond its own surface, but what is at that surface is impeccable in design. First, DePalma's style of directing leaves nothing to be desired. Though he's often been accused of plagiarizing the techniques of the late Alfred Hitchcock, his style is a personal interpretation of Hitchcock's manner of direction. "Dressed To Kill" is no doubt Hitchcockian, but DePalma is a director of the eighties: flamboyant, excessive, and brutal.

Hitchcock displayed a plausibleness in his films which DePalma rarely concerns himself with—look at "Carrie" or the lesser-known "Sisters." DePalma stops short at nothing to shock an audience, usually moving beyond our level of reality into total fantasy. Hitchcock's films were believable, very easily incorporated into an audience's daily patterns.

The camera work in "Dressed To Kill" deserves acclaim as it demonstrates some of the most creative camera use this writer has seen since DePalma's "Carrie" of 1976.

The employment of a "split-screen" is beginning to seem a trademark of DePalma films as is the tantalizing, creeping camera "eye" which appears to circle and linger about the action at just the right pace, adding yet another dimension to an already multi-sensational flick. Photographer Ralf Bode allows us to become voyeurs of what's happening and we are easily captivated by this DePalma film showcase of sex and violence.

"Dressed To Kill" is a true work of art brought about by a directorial genius.

"Letters Home," a play based on the tragic life of Smith alumna, Sylvia Plath, will open the Smith College theatre department's fall season on Sept. 13 at 8 p.m. in the Smith Center for the Performing Arts.

'Lagoon' lacks depth

By ROBERT CARGILL
Collegian Staff

Two young and beautifully tanned bodies frolicking about a tropical island—in clear, blue water, on white, sandy beaches, through dark, dense forests. This is what The Blue Lagoon is all about. And that is it.

Slightly reminiscent of 1971's Walkabout, Lagoon lacks the same depth and integrity that made the former such a classic and moving picture.

Walkabout was a depiction of two modern school children (a high school girl and her younger brother) who, stranded in the Australian desert because of a plane crash, came across an Aborigine youth and together, fought for their survival.

The Blue Lagoon offers us two virtually naked youths (14-year old Brooke Shields and 18-year old Christoper Atkins) who, stranded on a tropical isle because of a shipwreck, easily manage a lifestyle of "sun and fun."

Whereas Walkabout was both sweet and innocent, The Blue Lagoon is merely sweet.

And its sugary substance level is exclusively marked by the deliciously golden physiques of Shields and Atlins, who collectively look like "Mr. and Miss Malibu Beach." This nubile pair are radiant in appearance alone, but their respective talents have certainly been miscast. They just don't exude the authenticity so necessary in creating a sense of realism. I can believe the part about youth discovering "love the way nature intended it to be," but for not one moment I do believe these two are "stranded." "Stranded" implies a dangerous or difficult situation—Shields and Atkins act like they've just stepped off the "Love Boat" onto "Fantasy Island."

It still is missing a foundation. It gradually intensifies the theme of newly discovered love until we can take no more—we want to be there—but we can't get "there because Lagoon has not proved its credibility.

Sure, Brooke Shields, the actress, and Chris Atkins, the actor, are real, live Hollywood talent, but should they be so "alive" in The Blue Lagoon?

Emmy award night sparsely attended

Actors organize boycott as ceremonies televised

Associated Press—"Taxi" was the surprise winner for outstanding comedy series of the 1979-80 television season last night at the 32nd Emmy Awards, a strangely glamourless affair because of a performer boycott prompted by the actors' strike.

The Emmy show got off to a subdued beginning with explanations by last-minute emcees Dick Clark and Steve Allen that the show would be lacking star presenters and nominees because of sympathy for the 50-day old strike against film studios and TV networks.

"We have a star-studded audience tonight," cracked Allen, "three stars and 14 studs."

Allen and Clark in fact were substituting for four dropout emcees. Both the substitutes explained they occupied duel positions as actors and producers. Allen announced he was donating his "substantial fee" to the Screen Actors Guild emergency strike fund and that Clark was making a similar gesture.

The Pasadena Civic Auditorium, site of the telecast for the past five years, was filled with people in tuxedos and evening gowns, but scarcely a recognizable face. Three hundred fans lined the street outside the auditorium but found nothing to cheer about.

The stellar list of presenters had been decimated as the strike continued in the past weeks. The presenters for the show turned out to be Smothers Brothers, Peggy Flemming, Marjoe Gortner, Jayne Kennedy, Barbie Benton, Jim Stafford, Kelly Lange and several producers and directors.

More than 80 nominees and personalities scheduled to attend the awards program staged a loosely organized, unofficial boycott. They insisted there was no "arm-twisting."

But Gortner, co-host of TV's "Speak Up America," decided to show up at the ceremony to present the technical and special awards, saying he did not support the strike. "They are asking for too much. They should start small, get a foot in the door, wait two years and go in and get a little bit more," he told a reporter backstage.

Comedian Tommy Smothers, who with his brother Dick presented several awards, said, "I support the strike, but I'm here tonight because I was asked to be a presenter severn weeks ago. And that was before the boycott. We made a c ommitment to this show. I don't agree with the boycott.'

Ed Asner, star of "Lou Grant" and a nominee, decided to skip the gala, along with other regulars on the show, Mason Adams, Robert Walden, Nancy Marchand and Linda Kelsey.

The Screen Actors Guild and the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists walked out on July 21 in a dispute over money for pay television and sales of videocassettes.

SAG spokeswoman Kim Fellner said Sunday the union was not responsible for the Emmy boy-cott, which she called a "grassroots movement."

"Lou Grant" led the nominations, scoring 15, followed by "Moviola," 13; "M-A-S-H," 11; "The Muppet Show," eight, and "All Quiet on the Western Front" and the canceled "Skag" with seven apiece.

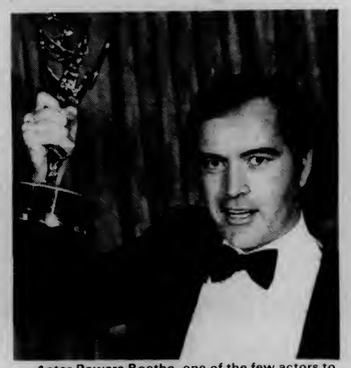
The program had lost all three of its original hosts before it scheduled on-air time. Lee Remick was first to drop-out, expressing support for memebers of SAG and AFTRA. On Friday, Bob Newhart joined Ms. Remick, saying he was dropping out "in support of the strike."

Then, also on the same day, Michael Landon, star of "Little House on the Prairie," said he would not participate unless the situation changed — but not because he supports the boycott. "I'm not going to host it because I don't think it's going to be worth hosting," he said.

Landon then went on to criticize the actors participating in the boycott, saying they were selfish to stay away.

Despite claims of no organized campaign, Ken Ehrlich, producer of the Emmycast, had declined to release names of emcees and presenters prior to the ceremony. "I don't want them to be pressured not to appear," he said in an interview Friday.

Ed Asner, star of the television series "Lou Grant," was one of the striking actors who boycotted last night's televised Emmy Awards Presentations.



Actor Powers Boothe, one of the few actors to attend last night's Emmy presentations, shows the award he received for his outstanding performance as Jim Jones in "Guyana Tragedy: The Story of Jim Jones. (AP Laserphoto) University feels they are responsible for the shortage," DiMare said.

DiMare said he is also investigating the possibility that the town might be liable because of negligence.

Student Government Association co-President Richard Moran said he will immediately ask UMass officials to form an ad hoc committee of students, faculty and administrators to investigate circumstances surrounding the water emergency and evacuation.

Moran said he was not only seeking some form of reimbursement for students' board, food, and travel costs, but also the costs of stalled academic and cultural programs, and contract workers while the University was shut down.

"We're concerned with all the costs associated with the crisis," he said.

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson said in a letter to students Friday that they will be reimbursed $14.09 room and board for a 10-meal plan, $17.32 for a 14-meal plan, and $17.96 for a 19-meal plan. Students not on the meal plan will receive $8.80 for two day's rent.

He said the money will be applied towards the spring semester bills. Specific information concerning payment of students who are not returning to the University next semester will be available shortly, he said.

There was no mention in the letter of reimbursing travel costs.

University officials said the add/drop deadline will be extended two days to Sept 18 and that the two missed days of class will be made up.

Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance George Beatty said yesterday there are no plans to cover student travel costs because of difficulties in documenting expenses.

Beatty said University costs during the crisis are going to be "expensive" but he did not know exactly what they would be.

Editorial/Opinion

The crisis shouldn't have come

The closing of the University on Thursday appears to be the result of poor communication between the town and the school, lack of action by both parties, and an overall sense of complacency about the shortage of water in the area.

The town has long been aware of the problem. Yet, the only apparent communication between the town and the school came on Aug. 7, when Town Manager A. Louis Hayward advised the University of the problem and suggested several conservation measures.

Hayward advised the University to take conservation measures to avoid "possible shortages" but failed to press the urgency of the situation. If he had done so, and if the University had immediately acted on his request, the entire crisis would have been avoided.

It is inexcusable that the University did not immediately call for strict conservation measures. Students would have responded to the requests.

And students are the ones forced to pay for the mistake. Aside from missed classes and a further degradation of student pride in the university, students were also forced to pay their own way home. The University has offered students refunds on room and board plans, but has said it cannot reimburse for travel expenses, since it would be difficult to reimburse students who have no receipts.

It is fair that the University should require proof of expenses but it logically follows that if documentation can be provided by way of bus ticket or gas receipts, reimbursement should be made.

The University administration has decided to re-open school today. They did so based on assurances from the town that the crisis is over. If they're right, we can resume the process of education. If they're wrong, it will serve to further degrade the University. If students are sent home again, it would be a severe slap in the face to them, to the University, and to education itself.

Cuban thorn pricks U.S. ego

Editor's note: The following is the first of a four-part series of commentaries about Cuba based on the expriences fo the writer, a UMass student, who visited there this summer. Today's section deals with the history of Cuban-American relations, tomorrow's will look at the causes behind the recent exodus of 120,000 Cubans into the United States, the third section will focus on the problems in Cuba facing women and homosexuals and the final part will deal with the writer's impressions of the people and country.

Joe Gannon

It seemed appropriate that we had to fly from Montreal. the distance covered and the five-hour flight corresponded more with my uncertainty of what lie ahead than would have been justified by the thirty-minute "hop" from Miami.

The feeling of uncertainty, however, added to my sense of excitement as we finally left the ground destined for Havana. CUBA! It is a country so shrouded in the myths and misconceptions fostered by American propaganda (via the nuns in my Catholic elementary school) I couldn't shake the feeling that I was doing something naughty. As we circled Havana I began to understand how Eve must have felt when she bit into the forbidden fruit.

If there has ever been a thorn in the ass of American capitalism it must be Fidel Castro and the Cuban revolution. Before 1959 Cuba was a de facto colony of the United States. Most of Cuba's arable land was owned by American corporations that grew sugar, tobacco, and fruit for export. The rest of Cuba was expropriated by other corporations and the mafia for servicing rich American and European tourists, who used Cuba as their private tropical paradise. What was left for the masses of Cuban people was poverty, illiteracy, and despair. This was, of course, until January 1959 when Fidel Castro and his guerillas of the July 26 Movement rode into Havana having effectively given the proverbial boot to the Cuban puppet government of Batista, and with him the corporations, the mob, and all those tourists browning in the sun.

The United States, of course, did not take kindly to losing an asset as valuable as Cuba, especially to a bearded, gun-toting revolutionary and a few hundred peasant guerillas, so an effort was begun to launch a counter-revolution. This effort ended in the ill-fated Bay of Pigs Invasion which was directed by the CIA under the Kennedy Administration. Although the invasion failed to topple the Cuban revolution it did manage to instill an almost paranoid fear in Cubans that at any time their shores may be susceptible to yet another invasion.

After the failure of the Bay of Pigs to directly destroy the revolution the American government adopted a more indirect, yet nonetheless injurious, tactic – isolation. Isolate Cuba from the rest of Latin America, the Carribean, and Western Europe, keep it from normalizing relationships with these countries and effectively block Cuba's entrance into Western trade agreements and therefore its eligibility for economic aid. Make Cuba pay for its insolance.

To do this the United States imposed an economic blockade against Cuba. No trade could exist between U.S. business and Cuba. No products made, even in part, with material from Cuba (such as tin) could be purchased by American corporations. Cuban currency would not be accepted as legal tender by the U.S. Using its power and influence the U.S. was able to extend participation in the sanctions against Cuba to its allies in western Europe and its satellites in Central and South America.

The net result of the blockade (within the realities of a bipolar world) was to force Cuba into the cordial arms of the deceptively benign Soviet Union. With no other markets for its goods and no monetary aid available from any Western sources, and with the pressing need to begin reconstruction Cuba was left with no option but to go to the Soviet Union. (And being forced into this position Cuba lost its ability to play the super-powers off of one another so it could charter a non-aligned course.)

Twenty years later Cuba is unhealthily dependent on the Soviet Union for its survival. The Cuban peso is supported entirely by the USSR and its Eastern European bloc. The Soviet Union purchases all of Cuba's exported sugar harvest at above world market prices. Yet the people of Cuba refer to the Soviet Union as "the brothers." One young man I talked to explained the support the Soviets give to Cuba as being in the interests of "international proletarianism." But the Soviet Union, like the U.S., does nothing for nothing and so in the final analysis we must come to grips with the fact that Cuba has become a satellite of the USSR. (The U.S., of course, then turns hypocritically around and does a "Chicken Little" routine about "the red tide" and uses it to gain support for its campaign to destabilize the Cuban government.)

Koffler commends response

To the Editor,

Although I have now been on this campus for more than a year, I never cease to rejoice over the hidden strengths of the institution and the many fine individuals in our community. We are now engaged in the process of beginning the semester anew after a period of challenge and some frustration, and I take this opportunity to comment on the remarkable unity of purpose shared by the community during the course of the water supply emergency.

Suspending classes was the result of painful and careful thought on the part of many persons. I made the decision after it became clear that the health and safety of the community could not be preserved in any other way. Once the decision had been made, however, I was deeply impressed with the speed and sense of cooperation with which the campus responded. I have heard from all quarters the highest praise for the manner in which the University's students complied with our request for assistance. The success of the evacuation of the campus exceeded even our most optimistic predictions, and was a source of continuing strength for those who remained on duty.

I have a deep sense of personal gratitude for the many sacrifices made by the students as well as by members of the University staff during the emergency and continuing even at this time. They responded with extraordinary dedication to a difficult situation. They worked long hours in response to this crisis, which followed hard on the heels of the special demands associated with the opening of the campus.

While it is impossible to identify all those who contributed to the effort, I want to specifically recognize the employees in the Physical Plant Department, the offices of Residential Life and Housing Administration, the University Health Services, Environmental Health and Safety Administrative Services, the Department of Public Safety, the Dean of Students Office, the Information Data Bank, and the Office of Public Affairs. I also want to acknowledge the contributions of the leadership of the Student Government Association, the Town of Amherst, and the various state agencies which responded in our moment of need.

Adversity sometimes serves to remind us that we are stronger than we believe. I now enter the new year with the firm belief that the campus is equal to any challenge which may lie before us.

Henry Koffler
Chancellor

Serious questions linger

To the Editors –

I would like to thank the students and all members of the University community for their patience and cooperation throughout the water crisis. The realization by the entire University community that a serious health and safety threat was posed by the lack of water, allowed for an orderly and immediate response. But now that the period of emergency has passed, serious questions must be addressed.

I am requesting that Chancellor Koffler establish a University wide committee representing all segments of the campus to investigate both the causes and consequences of the closing down of the campus, and to further make recommendations for alleviating future reoccurences. In addition to room and board credits, issues such as class rescheduling, the town's culpability, student transportation costs, and University's position during the next few weeks need to be resolved. I feel that such a committee should be the forum where these questions are answered.

I commend the administration for their handling of the many facets of the emergency. The immediate attention to the safety needs of people leaving and the protection of their property in the rooms, the supplying of water for students and staff remaining on campus, and the continuous monitoring of the situation all combined to show the strength of our University. But I have serious problems with the town officials for failing to anticipate and warn the University of the water situation. The towns' responsibility to the students and the entire University must be investigated.

The Student Government Association and the Legal Services Office are currently investigating the crisis to ensure students' rights are guaranteed. A letter from Vice-Chancellor Madson to all students explains the University policy on room and board credits. Charles DiMare of the L.S.O. office is currently exploring possible legal action against the town on behalf of the students. With the help of the proposed University committee, students and the administration should be able to work together to ensure a quick response to the students' concerns.

I would ask that students attend the Senate meeting this Wednesday night to discuss our concerns and position in the upcoming weeks as the shortage problem continues. The President's Council on Sunday the 14th will provide an additional forum for discussion.

While we were all inconvenienced, it was encouraging that the University community as a whole could pull together as it did last Thursday. Our positive response could only enhance our image as a truly great institution of higher education in the state. As we go through these next few weeks, I hope that the spirit of cooperation continues.

Woods Hole, oldest aquarium, may close

WOODS HOLE, (AP) — The nation's oldest aquarium, operated for 95 years by the National Marine Fisheries Division here, closed its doors to the public yesterday. But if the Falmouth Chamber of Commerce has its way, the aquarium will be reopened.

The chamber has launched a petition drive for the federal agency to reopen the aquarium while other plans for it are devised.

Started in 1885, the aquarium has been a tourist attraction open to the public free of charge from mid-June through early September. This season, it attracted more than 175,000 visitors.

But National Marine Fisheries officials say they need the space for other purposes.

"We don't have enough experimental facilities. We also don't have a good educational conference center and our scientists need more space in the main building," said Richard Hennemuth, director of the Woods Hole Laboratories.

The chamber has collected more than 9,000 signatures in the last two weeks from people outside Massachusetts and also plans a local petition drive, said Charles Fenrick, its executive director.

"We are trying to postpone the closing of the aquarium for at least two years or until we can work out some other community-based solution," Fenrick said.

He said alternatives include a foundation to raise money for an oceanic museum, including a new aquarium.

"In all fairness to the National Marine Fisheries, they do desperately need more space and by 1983, they must have 50 new office spaces. We intend to do our best to help them, but we've got to make sure they keep open the aquarium until we develop an alternative," he said.

Rep. Gerry Studds, D-Mass., announced last week that a bill is working its way through Congress to provide money to keep the facility open for another year.

The aquarium houses exhibits of live regional fish and shellfish in a one-story, 2,500-squarefoot building. It also contains exhibits showing the research being conducted by the National Marine Fisheries, a federal agency.

Reagan refutes Carter charges

While President Carter and his running mate took the day off, Republican challenger Ronald Reagan promised a "strong and reliable" Social Security system yesterday and his vice presidential nominee, George Bush, portrayed Reagan as "the peace candidate" of the 1980 campaign.

Both assertions, were intended to counter Democratic attacks based, at least in one instance, on a statement by the GOP presidential candidate.

The assertions served to illustrate Reagan's recent difficulty in shifting from self-defense to an offensive against Carter's handling of the economy, which Reagan's advisers see as the critical issue of the campaign.

Meanwhile, Carter spent most of the day at Camp David, Md., before he returned to the White House, and Vice President Walter F. Mondale relaxed at his Washington home before going back to the campaign trail Tuesday with an appearance in Chicago. The president is to visit a New Jersey steel plant Tuesday.

Tuesday also is the date of 13 gubernatorial and congressional primaries across the country, highlighted by a four-way Democratic contest for the nomination to unseat Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., who is seeking a fifth Senate term.

Independent candidate John B. Anderson, interviewed on television, predicted he will debate Carter and that his campaign will then take off.

Reagan was beginning a four-day campaign tour in Philadelphia, where he pledged to "build a growing commitment" to the needs of the elderly.

Speaking at a senior citizens' rally from the steps of the Philadelphia Museum of Art, Reagan sought to offset a charge Carter made last week that Reagan had once suggested making Social Security voluntary.

Reagan has denied the allegation repeatedly. He promised yesterday to "defend the integrity of the Social Security system" and said that it would be "strong and reliable and protected under a Reagan administration."

Reagan, speaking on Social Security in October 1964 in behalf of GOP presidential candidate Barry M. Goldwater, had asked rhetorically whether it would be possible to "introduce voluntary features that would permit a citizen to do better on his own ..."

Reagan said that in Philadelphia, one of the several major industrial states of the Northeast and Middle West he will visit this week, Carter made a "Declaration of Indifference" to the needs of homeowners, workers, young people and the elderly.

And Bush, in a national broadcast interview, defended Reagan's Aug. 18 assertion that U.S. involvement in the Vietnam War was a "noble cause." Said Bush: "Governor Reagan is going to be the peace candidate because he is going to keep this country strong enough to deter aggression."

He said Reagan, former two-term governor of California, was "big enough to apologize" for his erroneous remark that Carter had chosen to open his re-election campaign at the birthplace of the Ku Klux Klan, Tuscumbia, Ala.

Alabama and Notre Dame use two unknowns

(AP)—Alabama and Notre Dame, two of college football's most familiar and glamorous names, used a couple of unknowns to help them get off to flying starts in the 1980 season.

Second-ranked Alabama, bidding for an unprecedented third consecutive national championship, unveiled world-class sprinter James Mallard. He caught a 39-yard touchdown pass as the Crimson Tide defeated Georgia Tech 26-3 and extended the nation's longest winning streak to 22 games.

Notre Dame, ranked 11th, pulled a surprise by starting Mike Courey at quarterback. The unheralded senior passed 9 yards to Tony Hunter for one touchdown and ran 14 yards for another TD as the Fighting Irish pulled away from a 17-10 halftime lead and whipped ninth-ranked Purdue 31-10.

Only five other members of The Associated Press Top Twenty were in action Saturday. Florida State, ranked No. 13, blanked Lousiana State 16-0, spoiling Jerry Stovall's head coaching debut. No. 14 North Carolina trounced Furman 35-13. No. 15 Stanford trimmed Oregon 35-25 in Paul Wiggin's inaugural as a college coach. No. 16 Georgia nipped Tennessee 16-15, and No. 18 Penn State clobbered Colgate 54-10.

Last Monday night, No. 10 Texas downed sixth-ranked Arkansas 23-17.

Billy Jackson ran 13 and 5 yards for touchdowns on his first two carries of the season—the first coming one play after Georgia Tech punter Jeff Pierce fumbled a snap at his 15—giving Alabama a 13-0 lead.

Mallard, one of the world's fastest 200-meter sprinters and a senior playing in his first organized football game, snagged a 39-yard toss from Don Jacobs only 32 seconds before halftime.

"That was the first time he had lined up at wingback in a game and he'd only lined up there twice in practice," Alabama's Bear Bryant said after recording his 297th coaching triumph. "That was his first game of football, but it won't be his last."

Bryant wasn't quite that pleased with the rest of his offense, although the Crimson Tide rolled up 308 yards on the ground as the temperature soared into the 90s.

"I'm proud of the defense for not letting them score a touchdown and I'm proud of the offense for scoring a couple," he said. "But we never did look like an Alabama team is supposed to on offense.

"I'm tickled to get out with a win. Now we have a chance to get our injured people back and to improve. I hope today will give our offensive line some confidence. I'm looking forward to having the week. Maybe it will rain and we'll get some cooler weather."

Georgia Tech's Bill Curry, another newcomer to the head coaching ranks, called Alabama "a great team, the best I've ever seen in college. They're particularly great on defense. I've never seen linebackers and linemen like that."

Meanwhile, Notre Dame's Courey completed 10 of 13 passes for 151 yards and carried nine times for 59 yards.

With the Irish clinging to a seven-point lead, Courey opened the second half with a 57-yard pass to Hunter and hit him with a touchdown pass seven plays later.

"Nobody knew my capabilities," said Courey, who wasn't announced as the starter until the pregame warmup.

Phil Carter, whose 1-yard run in the second period gave the Irish a 17-0 lead, carried 29 times for 142 yards.

Purdue played without record-setting quarterback Mark Herrmann. He suffered a sprained thumb in practice during the week.

"I couldn't throw, I couldn't squeeze the ball," Herrmann said. "I took one snap and it hurt. I've been waiting all year for this. Playing Notre Dame is a little bit extra. I thought we were good enough to beat them. When I first said I wasn't going to play it was the toughest thing I've gone through."

Florida State turned three LSU fumbles and an interception into three field goals by Bill Lapece and Sam Platt's 3-yard touchdown run to beat the Tigers.

Tailbacks Amos Lawrence and Kelvin Bryant combined for more than 200 yards rushing—Lawrence got 119 on 16 carries and scored a pair of first-quarter touchdowns—leading North Carolina past Furman.

Sophomore quarterback John Elway scored Stanford's first touchdown on a 1-yard run and threw scoring passes of 41 yards to Ken Margerum and 11 yards to Andre Tyler in Stanford's victory over Oregon. The Cardinals are one of five Pac-10 teams eligible for the Rose Bowl.

Herschel Walker, one of the country's most celebrated recruits, debuted with 84 yards on 24 carries, including touchdown runs of 16 and 9 yards in the second half, as Georgia edged Tennessee in a Southeastern Conference duel at Knoxville, Tenn., before 95,288, the largest crowd ever to watch a game in the South.

"I knew I had to do something because I wanted to play," said Walker, who didn't enter the game until the second quarter. "I still need to learn some of the plays. Sometimes I ran through the wrong holes and had to get it on my own."

IT'S SAID THAT "REST NEVER SLEEPS" IS PLAYING SOMEWHERE TONIGHT. WANT TO GO AND SEE IT?
SURE DICK, BUT I HAVE TO DO THIS ASSIGNMENT IN ECONOMICS FIRST.
WHAT'S THE ASSIGNMENT?
I HAVE TO FIND SOLUTIONS FOR THE COUNTRY'S INFLATION AND UNEMPLOYMENT PROBLEMS. IT'S DUE TOMORROW.
SOUNDS NASTY! HOW LONG WILL IT TAKE YOU?
ABOUT AN HOUR, BUT IF I USE WAGE AND PRICE CONTROLS, WE JUST MIGHT MAKE THE 7:30 SHOW.

Hi folks. I'm Bean Polanski, and this is Rodney Reynolds.
Yes, yes, of course.
We were here last semester, and here we are again in the Collegian Comics
Why, I don't know. Sure wasn't my idea.
Rodney and I had lots of fun last semester, and we know we will this semester too!
God! He thinks it's fun playing straight-man to an idiot!

All women interested in playing ice hockey this coming season, please call Alan at 256-0506. Intercollegiate schedule is planned.

Intramural football and tennis entries are due in the IM office by Sept. 10. Competition starts Sept. 18.

Women's ultimate frisbee is now forming. Interested women should go to practice at the Southwest horse shoe weekdays at 3:30.

The ultimate frisbee meeting has been postponed until Tuesday at 7:30 in 6 west Dickinson dormitory.

Pittsburg opens well; Rams trounced by Lions

The Associated Press

The defending champion Pittsburgh Steelers won their early—season crucial game with the Houston Oilers 31—17 yesterday but the losers in last year' super bowl, the Los Angeles Rams, were beaten 41—20 by the Detroit Lions, led by rookie Billy Sims' three touch down runs.

On the opening weekend of the national Football League season, Sims showed why he was the first player selected in this year's draft and the Steelers proved why they've owned the Super Bowl the last two seasons and four times in the last six years.

Sims, the Oklahoma running back who won the Heisman Trophy as a junior in 1978, raced for touchdowns of 10,1 and 41 yards. In all, he carried 22 times for 153 yards and caught two passes for another 64 yards against a Los Angeles defense that carried the Rams to Super Bowl XIV.

The Lions were able to pick Sims by virtue of finishing with the league's worst record, 2—14, in 1979. The Steelers were the best team in football last season and they met a big challenge right away by beating Houston, the team expected to pose Pittsburgh's biggest obstacle in the AFC Central Division.

And they did it with their usual cast of champion characters. Quaterback Terry Bradshaw was instrumental in a pair of second—half touchdowns that short—circuited a Houston comeback. He plunged 1 yard for the score that broke a 17—17 tie, then threw a 50—yard TD pass to John Stallworth.

The Steelers had built a 17—0 lead in the first quarter onBradshaw's 29—yard pass to Sidney Thornton and a 1—yard run by Franco Harris, who became the NFL's third leading all-time rusher. And the famed Steel Curtain defense rose up to intercept five passes from quarterback Ken Stabler, making his regular season debut for the Oilers after a glorious career with the Oakland Raiders.

A glory team from another era the 1960s also rose sunday to win its season opener—in a bizarre way. The Green Bay Packers and Coach Bart Starr, under heavy pressure after a winless preseason, downed the Chicago Bears 12-6 when placekicker Chester Marcol scooped us his own blocked field goal try and rambled 25 yards for the winning TD with six minutes gone in overtime.

Minutewomen well rehearsed

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

There is no uncertainty on the UMass women's volleyball team. A lot of sweat, perhaps, but no uncertainty.

For with each practice played over the past two weeks, this year's squad gains more confidence and more optimism about the season ahead.

When the season ended last year, UMass was denied a spot in the Easterns despite a 22-7 record, because of a lack of tournament exposure. Beginning September 13, however, this year's Minutewomen will try to remedy that situation.

On that date, UMass will travel to Durham, New Hampshire for the UNH Tournament; that will start a ten-tourney swing that will see UMass host two tournaments (on the weekend of Sept. 19-20 and on the weekend of Oct. 3-4), and travel to the prestigious University of Maryland Invitational on the weekend of October 24-25.

Just as important as these tourneys are the teams that will participate in them. Among these teams are Divisions One members Rutgers University, Temple University, University of Pennsylvania, Maryland, Georgetown University, George Washington University, Princeton University, University of Rhode Island, University of Connecticut and Springfield College.

"There's no doubt about it," UMass head coach Elaine Marasco said, "this schedule is 150 percent harder than last year's."

In preparing the team for this upgraded schedule, Marasco has had the squad on double sessions, with a particular emphasis on defensive skills.

"I see in training a difference between last year and this," said Marasco, "there's a willingness to go to the ground and hustle for the ball. And that's what we'll need against teams like these, or we'll be blown off the court."

Overall, the team strategy remains the same. For here second year as UMass coach, Marasco will stay on a strategy that concentrates on the individual player's skills.

"There's no doubt about it, this schedule is 150 percent harder than last year's."—Head Coach Elaine Marasco.

"I'm already ahead on that," she said. "I know what these people can do. Some of them attended a camp we had here a few weeks ago, which was very successful, and some have returned from last year's team, among them seniors Peggy Barber and Brenda Simmons and junior Ellen Braun."

Though varsity and junior varsity teams have not formed yet, the players know what is expected of them from Marasco and assistant coach Al Morel. Also, they know what is ahead, and they said they are ready.

"We're going to have an excellent team this year," said Barber. "Last year, we were playing without much motivation or spirit. This year, everybody's up for it and working very hard."

sorry, more to come on this fascinating story.....

For this UMass team, this season will prove or disprove their abilities as a team within the tight and active circle of women's volleyball teams withing the East. The talent and energy is said to be there within the team, lying dormant and almost unused in years past. The Minutewomen shall get all the testing they can handle beginning this coming Saturday in Durham. For now, their attitude is positive and their health is fine overall. Whether or not this optimism will prevail unscathed only time and all those tourneys will tell.

Ellen Braun hits the ball over the net in last year's volleyball action. The women spikers open their regular season Saturday at UNH.

He picked Houston

Kevin Cullen

It was warm and sunny when the husband woke up.

"Do you want some breakfast?" the wife asked.

"No," he said.

He walked out, rubbing his eyes with clenched fists, and sat in his brown leather La-Z-Boy. He reached for the paper, thumbing through until he found the sports section. He spread it before him and bowed down, head between knees, and began to read.

"Are you going to start again?" the wife asked, standing at the doorway.

He did not answer, but instead continued reading, studying.

Injury report. The latest line. McDonough's column.

Okay. He's ready.

"I said, are you going to start all this again," the wife repeated.

He looked over once, glared actually, and then clicked on the set and sat back. The pre-game show, with predictions and early afternoon beer commercials was on and the husband double-checked his card. He picked Houston. Six and a half points. He shouldn't have picked Houston, he thought.

The wife, now resigned to what was happening, what always happens, went back to the kitchen and fetched a beer. Two beers.

She put the cans down on the table next to the La-Z-Boy and walked away.

The husband said nothing. He opened one can and sipped easily, his eyes never leaving the set. He scratched at the unshaven stubble on his neck.

He shouldn't have picked Houston, he thought.

The wife made a call.

"He's doing it again, Ma," the wife said into the phone. "He sat down today, and he won't get up until the Super Bowl."

"Leave the son of a bitch," the mother said.

The husband slapped his thigh lightly when Pittsburgh scored. They scored again and he slapped harder.

He whistled, ala Andy Capp, and the wife told the mother to hold on, she had to get two more cans.

"Leave the son of a bitch," the mother said.

The wife placed the cans down and walked back to the phone.

He shouldn't have picked Houston, he thought.

"Ma, I don't think I can stand another year," the wife said. "On Sundays he's just a madman. Monday nights are worse. And the kids. Oh, Ma, the kids can't understand. I have to send them next door on Sundays."

"Leave the son of a bitch," the mother said.

It was, of course, just the beginning. The advent of yet another year of unshaven stubble, countless cans, and zombie-like stares on Sunday afternoons.

Unkept gardens. Unpainted garages.

It was just the beginning.

"It's about time you put your foot down," the mother told her daughter. "Tell that son of a bitch it's either football or his family."

The wife hung up, inspired.

By now, it was over. There was no question about it. He shouldn't have picked Houston. He looked to his wife, who stood in the doorway boldly, her arms crossed defiantly across her chest.

"What's for dinner?" the husband asked.

"Shit," the wife said.

"Well, only cook half of it," the husband said. "I don't feel like eating."

The husband tore up the little white card and watched the pieces fall to the floor.

British soccer team falls to UMass booters

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN

As students slowly trickled back into the mainstream of campus life, the UMass men's soccer team played host to the Bristol University Association Football Club of England yesterday afternoon at Boyden field. After a tight battle between the midfields, the Minutemen pulled out a 2-1 victory in front of about 100 people.

Although an exhibition match, UMass and Bristol gave each other nothing more than a rough time; both offenses were offset by the other's defense, especially in intercepting passes and heading away potential scores.

UMass scored the first goal of the contest at 14:00 of the first half, when midfielder Tony M. Dias headed a pass by Clovis Ferreirz into the center of the goal past a leaping Bristol goalkeeper.

Defense and some penalties paced the remainder of the first half, as UMass and Bristol exchanged several chances to fire up their offenses by poor passing and constantly booting the ball out-of-bounds. UMass had a goal called back by an offsides call, while several handball penalties kept Bristol busy organizing and re-organizing their offense.

Not until 17:50 of the second half did a score occur. That happened when midfielder Doug White took a feed from Tony M. Dias and shot it past the goalie's right side.

The play continued tight throughout the second half. It was only after UMass coach Russ Kidd made some substitutions that Bristol found a chance to score. At 31:00, Bristol's Al Donaldson scored his team's only goal past UMass goalie Matt Esteves. Any further chance to score fizzled with the continuing exhibition of defense.

"It was a cliffhanger," said Coach Kidd, "I saw Bristol practice Sunday after they had come in from Boston the day before, and I thought they looked pretty tired, from jet lag. But today, they didn't play like that. They were tough."

"Right now, we're trying kids out in different positions. However, we have 25 guys to their 17. As a result, I substituted frequently. We probably would not have given up that goal if it weren't for that substitution.

UMass and Bristol University will play again this afternoon at Boyden field. Game time is 3:30.

Pro sports roundup

Pats win

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP)—Steve Grogan fired three touch-down passes and John Smith kicked two field goals as the New England Patriots shut down Cleveland's offense until late in the game and rolled to a 34-17 victory over the Browns in a National Football League season opener Sunday.

Both teams had suffered through pre-season defensive problems but the Patriots left them behind as they allowed the Browns to cross mid-field just twice.

New England bolted to 13-3 halftime lead and was unstoppable on its first three possessions of the second half, scoring on drives of 69, 51 and 88 yards.

A fumble recovery by cornerback Ray Clayborn at the Patriots' 31-yard line set up the first scoring drive of the second half. Three plays later, Grogan hit Stanley Morgan with a pass at the Cleveland 48, and the speedy receiver outran several defenders for a touchdown.

Sox lose

BOSTON (AP)—Larry Milbourne, Leon Roberts and Rodney Craig each collected three hits and two RBI as the Seattle Mariners beat the Boston Red Sox 12-6 Sunday.

The Mariners struck for eight runs in the second inning, putting the game out of reach and completing the four-game series with a 3-1 edge.

McEnroe wins Open

NEW YORK (AP)—Defending champion John McEnroe picked apart Bjorn Borg's game with slicing serves, hard returns and punching volleys and outlasted the brilliant Swede 7-6, 6-1, 6-7, 5-7, 6-4 Sunday to retain his U.S. Open tennis title.

Borg's serve, generally reliable if not overwhelming, deserted him early in the match. Six times in a row—from late in the first set through the end of the second—Borg was unable to hold his serve. That turned out to be too much of an edge to give to the 21-year old left-hander from nearby Douglaston, N.Y.

Borg was able to fight back and win the third and fourth sets, but in the fifth McEnroe got the break he needed in the seventh game to go up 4-3, then held his final two service games to win. It was the first time since 1976 that Borg has lost a five-set match, ending a string of 13 victories.

The four-hour, 10-minute victory was a sweet one for the fiesty McEnroe, coming less than 24 hours after his emotional and exhausting 4¼-hour semifinal triumph over American archrival Jimmy Connors and avenging in part his five-set loss at the hands of Borg in their classic Wimbledon final just two months ago.

WATER: T-Shirt designers mop up the bucks

By RICHARD NAGLE
Collegian Staff

One enterprising University student has turned a profit from the water crisis last week that forced the evacuation of nearly 11,400 dormitory residents.

Mark Farrell, 20, a Community Resource Assistant in Dickinson House in the Orchard Hill Residential Area, and ten other CRAs, printed up 168 T-shirts with the words "UMass Evacuation" emblazoned on the front.

The words are printed around a picture of a leaking water tap, with "Amherst DPW" on it and "80" on a sole drop of water from the faucet.

Farrell and the other residential staff were required to stay in the dorms over the weekend to maintain security.

"We were stranded. They wouldn't let us go home," he said.

When students returned to their dorms Sunday, Farrell and his impromptu business partners began selling the shirts around campus for $5 each.

"They were entirely sold out in two hours. You'd put them on and people were buying them left and right," Farrell said.

Students save water

By J. ADAM BAILEY
Collegian Correspondent

The residents of conservation-minded University of Massachusetts are saving water in a variety of ways, say the results of a random telephone interview conducted yesterday.

"I take fewer flushes," said freshman Mike Pangione, a College of Arts and Sciences major from John Adams Dormitory in Southwest Residential Area.

A freshman from Long Island, New York said she is "buying soda instead of making lemonade."

Karen Smith, an Animal Science student, said she visited friends in Boston last weekend instead of going home. A James Dormitory Southwest resident, Joe Vernucci, said, "I take shorter showers."

Butterfield Dormitory resident Sharon Bean, a freshman business major said, "We're not flushing toilets, we're letting the next person do it."

A Prince House resident who asked not to be identified suggested a "rural Maine shower—you step in and get good and wet in about 20 to 30 seconds, turn off the water, soap up and then you rinse off in another minute."

Freshman Kurt Eyster from Plymouth said he is drinking beer to solve the problem.

Most of the students interviewed shared the attitude of Crabtree House senior Kathy Meyers from New Bedford. "I'm cutting back on my showers," she said, "I don't have a lawn (to water)."

Water shortage examined

By SARAH ROLL
Collegian Correspondent

Although pumps broke down at an emergency well for about 16 hours Sunday night, water levels in Amherst's storage tanks were at satisfactory levels last night.

Amherst Superintendent of Public Works, Stanley Ziomek, said at a Selectmen's meeting last night that the pumps at the Bay Road emergency well broke down because of sand in the pump at 10:30 p.m. He also said by 1:30 p.m. Monday, the storage tank levels had dropped to 38.5 feet but were expected to stabilize at 51 feet by 7 p.m. that evening.

Selectman Donald Routh said there is still a crisis even though storage tanks are reaching a satisfactory level because wells and reservoirs are critically low.

Ziomek said the Lawrence Swamp Well, originally scheduled to be completed in October, will provide an extra 1.6 million gallons of water a day by the middle of next week.

The Brown Well and an emergency well in South Amherst are being used, but Ziomek said increased demand on the wells may make it necessary to draw salt-contaminated water.

The Amherst Fire Department has two pumps drawing water out of the incompleted Lawrence Swamp Well, Ziomek added.

Ironically, because consumption was down and pumps were working overtime, yesterday morning at 5:30 a.m. the high water alarm went off, necessitating the shut down of certain pumps.

Board of Selectmen Chairman, William Atkins, cited a report that predicted more shortages in the next decade due to population increases. The water flow will need to be increased by 2 to 3 million gallons a day, Atkins said.

Besides the Lawrence Swamp Well, there was talk of relining the Atkins Pipeline for an additional 300,000 gallons per day, and perhaps installing a second well in the Lawrence Swamp. Conservation measures were suggested, but practically they could make but a small dent in the problem of future shortages, said one town resident.

Richard LaVoice, Student Government Association Co-President, called on the Selectmen to make a public report as to the causes of the crisis. LaVoice said he wants to pinpoint responsibility, errors in communication and infringement upon student rights during the crisis. Selectmen did not set a date for this report but promised details at a later meeting.

In a report given out at the Selectmen's meeting, the Amherst Weather Station presented data on an unpredicted, summer-long dry spell which caught town officials by surprise.

The town has been plagued with water problems since the expansion of the University after World War II.

In 1978, Amherst received its first taste of critical water levels when a dry summer forced the town to ban all outside water usage. At that time, plans for the Lawrence Swamp Well project were approved at the Annual Town Meeting. University students were asked to take conservation measures similar to the ones now in effect.

Amherst labor disputes heat up, workers seek hikes and benefits

By STEPHEN MORAN and RICHARD NAGLE
Collegian Staff

Two Amherst labor disputes heated up Monday as 60 nursing home workers authorized their union to strike and about 200 University of Massachusetts staff workers picketed the administration building shouting "We want a contract now!"

Although a strike of nursing home workers has not been announced, it is expected soon, said Richard Sanders, union organizer for District 1199 of the New England Health Care Employees Union.

"If I were betting on it, I'd bet there would be a strike," he said.

Ninety percent of voting members at the 80-patient home favored strike authorization to help end the five-month-old negotiations that have been prodded by a federal mediator.

Penny Schwartz, a negotiator for the 1,260 member University Staff Association (USA) accused University negotiators of stalling the negotiations as staff members picketed in front of the Whitmore Administration Building for one hour yesterday.

Contract talks for the USA, which represents clerical, technical and administrative service workers are scheduled to resume Friday but Schwartz said the chance for progress "looks terrible."

Chief University negotiator, Brian Hayes, a partner in the Springfield law firm of Skoller, Abbott, and Hayes, said, "We are bargaining in good faith in hoping to resolve the situation quickly."

Both the UMass administration and the nursing home owner are represented by Hayes' firm, which specializes in union contract negotiations.

Charges have emerged from both union camps that the firm has prolonged talks unnecessarily. Jay Presser, chief management negotiator for the nursing home, claimed, "We much prefer not to negotiate a strike. We have made fair offers.

"Our proposals are not symptomatic of an employer trying to initiate a strike," he said.

USA negotiators are seeking a 25 percent cost of living wage increase, a uniform 37.5 hour week, an end to a dual pay system in which employees hired after June 1978 are on a lower wage scale, and free on-campus parking.

Amherst Nursing Home workers want a retroactive wage increase of $1.45 an hour, and the right to retain a union shop.

Landing safety in Tampa, Fla. after yesterday's hijacking, Barbara Urbano of Spring Hills, Fla. is happily reunited with her daughter Debbie Domenico. None of the 88 passengers on board were harmed.

Cuban hijacks plane to home

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — A Florida-bound Eastern Airlines jet with 88 people aboard was hijacked to Cuba on Monday by a man — apparently a homesick Cuban refugee — who carried a bottle of liquid and threatened to set fire to the plane, authorities said.

Cuban soldiers took the man into custody after the plane's arrival at Havana's Jose Marti Airport in the eighth hijack of a U.S. flights since Aut. 10, and the plane returned safely to the United States.

Most of the other hijackings have been blamed on disenchanted refugees seeking to return home. Armed sky marshals have begun riding some flights, but none was aboard the jet hijacked Monday.

"Right now it looks like a homesick Cuban refugee situation," said Eastern spokesman Jim Ashlock. Officials said the hijacker, clutching a cigarette lighter and a "bottle or sack of liquid," ordered the flight to Cuba and then ran into the plane's bathroom.

Begin faces US pressure

JERUSALEM (AP) — Under heavy American pressure, Prime Minister Menachem Begin apparently has postponed plans to move his office to the annexed Arab sector of Jerusalem, government sources said yesterday.

Begin's new office, with a view of the Mount of Olives, has been ready for two weeks. But the prime minister has not sought his Cabinet's approval for the move and sources close to him were unaware of intentions to raise the subject in the near future.

President Carter's special envoy to the Middle East, Sol Linowitz, warned Begin last week that moving his office would harm talks with Egypt on Palestinian autonomy in the occupied West Bank of Jordan and the Gaza Strip.

'Make It in Massachusetts'

BOSTON (AP) — Raising a flag and slapping bumper stickers on taxis, Gov. Edward J. King officially launched the state's "Make It in Massachusetts" promotional campaign yesterday.

Begin's new office, with a view of the Mount of Olives, has been ready for two weeks. But the prime minister has not sought his Cabinet's approval for the move and sources close to him were unaware of intentions to raise the subject in the near future.

President Carter's special envoy to the Middle East, Sol Linowitz, warned Begin last week that moving his office would harm talks with Egypt on Palestinian autonomy in the occupied West Bank of Jordan and the Gaza Strip.

The slogan, which King first unveiled last spring, already has begun appearing on T-shirts, buttons and pennants. Now, as the campaign gets into high gear, television spots will carry the message throughout the state and eventually beyond Massachusetts' borders.

Commerce Commissioner James F. Carlin said the promotion would run in spurts every few months, sometimes aimed at the tourist market and other times beamed at industrialists.

Abortion law reconsidered

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts Supreme Court was asked yesterday to decide whether two sections of the state constitution invalidate a tough new law forbidding government money for abortions.

As the high court began its fall term, the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts pressed its fight to overturn the state's so-called Doyle-Flynn abortion funding curb, enacted last year but delayed by court challenges.

The state law would prevent the use of Medicaid funds for low-income women to obtain "medically necessary" abortions — those that a doctor certifies are required for a mother's physical or emotional health.

Instead, it would allow funds only for abortions necessary to save a mother's life. Money would be denied for ending pregnancies resulting from rape or incest or those likely to produce infants with defects.

John Roberts, director of the Civil Liberties Union, said his organization contends the Doyle-Flynn law — named for the Boston representatives who sponsored it — violates the "equal protection clause" of the state constitution, since it restricts rights of poor women but not the well-to-do.

It also is being argued that the law violates the state's Equal Rights Amendment since it places a restriction on women that is not imposed on men.

A further argument is that it unfairly interferes with medical decisions by doctors, Roberts said.

There was no immediate ruling by the court but Roberts said he expected the case to be decided fairly quickly because of the "enormous interest" in the issue.

In Massachusetts, there are about 33,000 abortions per year, compared to 66,000 births, and about one out of every five abortions is government-financed, according to state statistics.

Kania assumes responsibilities

Poland to decentralize economy

Associated Press

WARSAW, Poland — A deputy premier unveiled plans yesterday for decentralizing Poland's economy, whose weakness was a cause of the recent nationwide strikes.

Strikes were reported continuing in at least five areas. In one strike, workers demand removal of the local party chief for allegedly trying to prevent them from setting up an independent union — a major point won by strikers. A member of the party Central Committee appealed to people to give the government time to make good on its promises.

Deputy Premier Henryk Kisiel told a news conference here that a 20-member commission had been set up to make changes in managing the economy. He said the panel would delegate greater authority to local officials in housing, road construction, internal trade and local service industries.

Kisiel also said plant managers "supported by self-governing workers" would be given greater flexibility and authority in operating their factories.

He said the role of the current planning commission — which had been blamed for many of the problems in Poland's ailing economy — would be changed from providing detailed direction to one "of a more general character."

Stanislaw Kania, chosen Saturday to replace ailing Edward Gierek as party first secretary, visited a shipyard and a naval station in Gdynia before going to Gdansk for a meeting with party activists, the official news agency PAP reported.

PAP said he thanked sailors at naval station for unloading cargo during the strike. The trip was his first outside Warsaw since he assumed the party leadership.

Well-placed sources said Kania would fly on Tuesday to Katowice, Gierek's former hometown in southern Poland that was the center of widespread coal miners' strikes which erupted two days before settlement of the Gdansk walkout. The turmoil created by the strikes eroded Gierek's power base in the party Central Committee and paved the way for his ouster.

Warsaw Radio said Monday medical specialists had determined through tests that Gierek suffered a heart attack Friday. The latest hospital report said Gierek, 67, was in satisfactory condition.

Tufts professor cites lack of leadership

By ANDREW D. WILSON
Collegian Correspondent

Citing "failures of leadership and missed opportunities," a Tufts University professor of political science in a lecture last night put the recent labor strikes in Poland into a historical perspective.

Dr. Sarah M. Terry, speaking in 104 Thompson Hall at the University of Massachusetts to a group of about 100 people said for workers "to seize the opportunity" to incorporate labor unions into the Communist government "will take great political courage."

> . . . the recent strikes were merely a culmination of past grievances . . .

Referring to similar Polish worker strikes in 1970 and 1976, Terry said the recent strikes were merely a culmination of past grievances, the settlements of which have yet to be translated into official government policy.

In light of this history, said Terry, she is skeptical of the most recent promises by the Polish government of independent labor unions and stable housing and meat prices which ended the strike last week.

Terry said a very vocal "loyal opposition" within the ruling Communist party set a precedent in Communist labor disputes. The party was reduced to a mediator between party and labor causes, she said.

This opposition indicates a need for "institutionalized avenues for interst articulation," said Terry. She noted a Polish National Academy of Sciences symposium which drew a similar conclusion.

Terry said the Polish leadership "cannot buy off the working class again without refueling consumer expectations that it cannot long sustain, and without postponing the essential restructuring of Poland's ailing economy."

Dr. Terry earned her B.A. from Cornell as well as M.A and Ph.D. from Harvard. All of her degrees specialize in comparative Eastern European politics. She has visited Poland several times since 1960 and most recently studies the 1976 strikes as an exchange scholar.

Massachusetts reinstates breathalyzer statute

By JOAN McKENZIE
Collegian Staff

Refusal of a breath analysis test will again result in an automatic 90 day suspension of one's license under a reinstated Commonwealth of Massachusetts drunk driving statute.

The "implied consent" or "breathalyzer" statute which has been enforced sporadically over the years was reinstated last month after a decision by a three-judge federal district court for the District of Massachusetts.

Following the decision, Registrar of Motor Vehicles Richard E. McLaughlin said, "The Massachusetts 'implied consent' or 'breathalyzer' statute is once again valid and in full force."

Under the statute, a person arrested for drunk driving will be offered a breath analysis test by a police officer. If the alcohol level in the bloodstream is less than .05 percent he will be released. If the driver refuses to take the test, he will be informed that his refusal will result automatically in a 90-day suspension of his license and an affidavit attesting to the driver's refusal will be forwarded to the Registry of Motor Vehicles.

The Registry must then inform the operator of the suspension of his license and his right to an immediate hearing to challenge the affidavit.

Supervisor at the Northampton Registry of Motor Vehicles, William Roberts, said the statute will be strictly enforced and thinks the 90-day suspension will cut down on drunk driving in the Valley.

"There has been no deterrent for three years. Now with the 90-day suspension rule people will think twice. When there is any type of deterrent it affects people," Roberts said.

Officer Eugene Sullivan of the Northampton Police Department disagreed. "I've been on the force for 10 years and I've seen a lot people refuse to take the test even when the statute was on the books," he said.

Sullivan said the Northampton District Honor Court System, a driver education program for arrested drivers, encourages drivers to refuse the test. In these cases, the driver is fined $200, his license is not suspended and the case is continued for a year.

"Quite a few individuals choose the program," Sullivan said.

Sullivan said that since the statue was reinstated, there have only been three cases of drunk driving.

Director of Public Safety at the University of Massachusetts, Gerald T. O'Neil, said the effect of the statute would probably be minimal.

"We do have some students that have been arrested so far," he said.

O'Neil added that as far as he knew not many students refused a breathalyzer test, but was unable to give an exact number.

"O'Neil said he didn't think the threat of a 90-day suspension would sway many students. "It's almost like telling people to give up smoking," he said.

Housing hassles clearing

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

Junior and senior men who have had administrative problems still await dorm placement, while all women, freshmen and sophomore men and people who paid their bills on time have been placed in dorms, a University official said yesterday.

While Gerald A. Quarles, housing assignment coordinator, would not comment because he did not have complete figures, Dean of Students William F. Field said late yesterday that it is believed most students without housing have been placed in dormitories.

"Every woman was taken care of, that we know about. We've taken care of every man who paid their bill on time. All freshmen and sophomores are straightened out. Now, we're working on the juniors and seniors," Field said after conferring with Quarles.

Field said the opening of Knowlton, an all women's dorm in the Northeast area, helped ease the housing crunch and about 150 spaces occupied by women who have moved to Knowlton are now available. Many of the rooms are being converted to male spaces to house displaced students.

"We think every single person we made an error on has been corrected," Field sai. "We did lose a lot of time this weekend with the water problem."

A representative of the housing offices said students began lining up for housing at about 5:30 a.m. yesterday, but she could not say how many people had approached the office or had been processed.

It was reported last week that about 250 students, mostly juniors and seniors, had been without housing since the beginning of the semester. Many of them were reported to have been staying with friends or living out of their cars or tents in the woods.

"This is really not a bad situation, unless you're one guy who got screwed up," Field said.

Field also said he put up one student in the Campus Center Hotel after the student came to him saying he had nowhere to stay.

The exact number of students who have still not been placed is expected to be available from the housing office sometime today, Field said.

Phones call for info

By JANE DeVIRGILIO
Collegian Staff

While the newly installed "Help Phones" on campus have received little use to date, the University of Massachusetts will continue its educational campaign with the publication of an instructional brochure on their use, according to Larry Holmes, Assistant Director of Campus Security.

Holmes said the new brochure will have a map locating the positions of the bright yellow phones and will especially stress "the students responsibility to maintain the phones." It will be distributed campus-wide, he said.

"Our biggest concern is that the phones are not vandalized," Holmes said. "We have tried to make them as vandal resistant as possible, and plan on replacing the standard cords with an 'armored cable' or metal coil-type cord.

The five phones, located in Lot 21 across from Southwest, the east side of Kennedy Tower, between Memorial Hall and Herter Hall, on Thatcher Drive behind Worcester Commons, and in Lot 44 behind Sylvan, connect directly with the UMass Police Department.

A single phone at the University Police Station receives "Help Phone" calls and offers a direct line to each Help Phone. A corresponding button immediately identifies where the caller is located.

"The caller then only has to explain their emergency and the campus police can respond in about three minutes," said Holmes.

Holmes said Kent State University and the University of Kentucky at Louisville have installed similar emergency phone systems with much success.

In deciding where to locate the phones, Holmes said the University Violence Task Force "assessed traffic flow on campus and put some phones in the most poorly lit areas to eventually coincide with areas scheduled for improved lighting."

Elli Bagli of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy's Women's Issues Team said, "Lights and phones are necessary but only a Band-Aid to the problem of violence on campus."

"We need to examine where student aggresion comes from and educate students about this," said Bagli. "The University still does not feel responsible for such education."

As a member of the Committee to Examine Violence Against Women, Bagli recommended student foot patrols, education on campus violence incorporated into freshman orientation and improved campus lighting as well as the emergency phones.

When asked for an early reaction to the phone's effectiveness, Bagli said, "I can tell you right now that five phones are not enough for a campus of 23,000 people.

Holmes said the University has no immediate plans to install more phones.

Save money: pm operators hang it up

By TED DRISCOLL
Collegian Correspondent

Late night University of Massachusetts telephone operator service will be discontinued in October to save money and cut unnecessary work, said Director of Administrative Services Mara Beth Clapp.

Clapp said the 11 p.m. to 7 a.m. shift which handled emergency calls was "chiefly a commodity" and that students could directly call the campus police or infirmary in an emergency.

One University operator, who wished to remain anonymous, said she thought her job was "on the line" because of the cut in service, but Clapp said no one will be laid off.

Clapp said the elimination of the late night service only means a rearrangement of day operators' schedules. She said the change will be made after students have time to "get settled in," and become familiar with emergency telephone numbers.

Clapp was hesitant to say if the cutback would save money.

She said students will be informed when the night service cancellation takes effect.

Cuban exodus spurred by U.S. policy

Editor's note: The following is the second of a four-part series of commentaries about Cuba based on the experiences of the writer, a UMass student, who visited there this summer.

A correlative effect of the United States economic blockade against Cuba has been a communication blockade.

It is as important to the ruling interests of the U.S. to distort and manipulate news of progress in Cuba, despite the blockade, as it is to try and destroy the revolution with the blockade.

A prime example of this manipulation and distortion is the recent exodus of 120,000 Cubans on the aggrandized

Joe Gannon

"Freedom Flotilla." (That is the American version of a Freedom Flotilla on which you ride for a thousand dollars a head.)

Cubans and the Cuban government do not hide or shrink from the fact that there were (and are) disgruntled and dissatisfied people in Cuba. Some of the people I spoke with said they believe that only half as many of those who wish to leave have done so.

The reason the Cuban government does not hide the fact that there are many who wish to leave, and, as became evident, were encouraging some to go, is their awarenes of something that, for the most part, has been left out of the reportage most Americans read. And that awareness is of the reality of life in Cuba.

Cuba is, as is most of the world, an underdeveloped country struggling to overcome its own backwardness. (A job, incidentally, it did not begin until 1959.) It is a difficult task for any country but one tremendously complicated in Cuba because of manipulation by the U.S. and the Soviet Union.

As a result this manipulation, growth in Cuba has been slow. There is much rationing in Cuba of commodity items like milk, meat, and tobacco. Leisure goods—radios, TVs, cars, even pens—are scarce and expensive. And Cubans are well aware of their rich neighbor to the north. I met a 17-year-old high school student named Reynaldo who carried a picture of the rock group KISS in his wallet, who told me I could sell my Levis almost anywhere, for a hundred and fifty pesos (about $170.00).

The constant barrage of consumerist propaganda into Cuba has, understandably, taken its toll on many Cubans as it has on Americans. More so in fact because the gap between reality and the promises of American advertising is even greater in Cuba than in the U.S. Adding to this material temptation has been the return of relatives from Miami for vacations and visits with estranged family. As many as a hundred thousand Cuban-Americans returned to Cuba for visits within a year's time, and with them they brought their radios, Timex watches, and Levis.

An even deeper cause for dissatisfaction came as an inevitable result of the revolution. After the "triumph of the revolution" almost all of Cuba's professional class; doctors, lawyers, managers—the bourgeoisie—(who identified with the Battista regime because it was responsible for their privileged status) left Cuba for the U.S. As a result of this emigration Cuba had to develop and train a whole new class of professionals. This has meant for years that aspiring doctors, for example, have had to study a field of medicine in which there was a shortage and not in the one which most interests them.

Since the early seventies when Congress cut off funds for the "Freedom Flight," between Miami and Havana the U.S. has slowed to a trickle the number of Cubans it would extend entry visas to, which under international law one must have before one can emigrate. This slowdown backed up the number of Cubans waiting to leave. Those too impatient to wait, however, and would come illegally to the U.S. by boat, were officially welcomed with open arms. What many Cubans saw as their only chance of getting to the U.S. any time soon was to create a crisis situation that would attract the attention of the U.S. and cut through the red tape which had thus far delayed their exit. Crashing the Peruvian Embassy (a country with hostile relations with Cuba since a rightest regime took office) was such an act.

And so after years of only allowing a trickle, president Carter opens the floodgates to those "freedom loving" Cubans fleeing "Castro's Communist paradise." What is unusual (some would say disgraceful) about Carter's humanitarianism is its well documented selectiveness favoring those whose point of departure is a socialist country. For while "Freedom Flotilla" was at its height, Haitian refugees landing in boats on Florida's coast were being sent back to the murderous regime of "Baby Doc Duvallier, whose lack of concern for his own people's human rights is well documented. The same human rights paradox exists with Mexican "illegal" aliens who come to the U.S. to escape a life of poverty without hope the likes of which simply does not exist in Cuba.

The motive for the contradictions of Carter's humanitarianism, however, was revealed at a rally he spoke at in July. During his speech members of the Communist Workers Party began heckling him with some of their endless rhetoric. After they were ejected, Carter looked at the audience and said, "I certainly haven't seen thousands of Americans screaming to go to Cuba!" So there it was; a hundred and twenty thousand Cubans packed in refugee camps (with several dozen rotting on the ocean floor) the media hype about the "Great Freedom Flotilla," it was all so Carter (and those like him) could stand before crowds and make what are basically simplistic and infantile remarks. All to reinforce the notion that all emigrants from socialist countries are always "fleeing communism," while emigrants from the rest of the world are just "looking for a better life."

Administration was negligent

To the Editor:

For twelve hours last Wednesday night, the Administration held twelve thousand lives in its hands and decided to risk them all. At about 11 p.m. many of us found out from news reporters that we would have no water for at least two days. From 11 on, we all expected to hear some word from the administration. Instead, we were told nothing. Rumors and confusion spread like wildfire as we were unaware of the full extent of the crisis.

We should have been told to evacuate our buildings as soon as possible because we had no fire protection. Instead, the Chancellor and those around him delayed the announcement for twelve crucial hours—twelve hours in which we were all just one spark away from a fiery disaster.

To think that the Administration held so little regard for our lives by letting us sleep in firetraps is nothing less than criminal negligence and totally inexcusable. It seems that the safety of their own public image was far more important than the safety of twelve thosand lives! As the Chancellor and the Town Fathers twiddled their thumbs, we were potential statistics on a fatality sheet.

The Chancellor and those around him should be held totally responsible for both their lack of foresight and their inept handling of the crisis. They risked our lives, but luckily there were no casualties.

I, for one, don't appreciate being treated like expendable furniture!!!!

Like so many times before, we turned to the Administration for help and found them "out to funch." We students have been taken for granted long enough. Have we forgotten who holds the financial power both on the campus and in the Town of Amherst? Our tuition and fees help pay the administrative salaries. Our dollars keep the Amherst merchants alive. We are the town's financial lifeblood, yet we are treated as a liability when it comes to water.

If nothing else, last week's re-enactment of Dunkirk will make some facts crystal clear:

WE are not to blame for a campus housing shortage.

WE are not to blame for corrupt state building contracts.

WE are not to blame for the political bickering that has failed to solve a ten year old water problem in the town.

WE would not have been to blame if a tragic fire took hundreds of lives last Wednesday night.

WE are not blame for the worst act of vandalism this campus has ever known—NO STUDENT EVER GAMBLED WITH 12,000 LIVES!!

Help conserve

To the Editor:

The Orchard Hill Area Government wishes to endorse all suggestion put forth by the University in response to the water shortage. In addition, as one of the areas most severely affected by the water crisis, OHAG wishes to emphasize the need for further conservation. OHAG also forewarns the student body of possible consequences if these guidelines are not followed.

In addition to the University's four steps, we wish to offer these further suggestions: 1. Wash only full loads of laundry, preferably in off-peak water usage hours; 2. inform R.A.'s of any flagrant violators of the University's water guidelines; 3. Report any faulty plumbing to your R.A.'s.

Orchard Hill Area Government would like to remind students that misuse of water could result in another evacuation and loss of valuable school time.

Sincerely,
Orchard Hill Area Government

Fight aid cut

To the Editor:

There is a financial aid crisis of severe proportions on this campus. Thousands of students have had their aid packages cut and are in fear of being unable to complete their education at the University.

The cutbacks in financial aid are happening at a time when the federal government's priorities have shifted away from the funding of much needed social programs such as public education to the increased funding of military programs and corporate investment. At the same time our own state government has virtually given up on its committment to high quality, low cost public education for the children of the state's working people. We can stop these trends, but only with organized pressure. We must bring this pressure to bear on our elected representatives. We must force them to respond to the needs of the majority of people in their constituencies not the small handful of politically and economically powerful individuals.

SUPE is launching a campaign to halt the cutbacks in financial aid. We will have an informational table in front of Whitmore on Wednesday and Thursday from 11 to 1 p.m. We will also have postcards for people to send to their Congressional representatives.

If next year is anyting like this year we are in big trouble. Let's send a message to our representatives: The People of the Nation Demand High Quality Low Cost Public Higher Education.

Sincerely,
Greg Tarpinian

Media distortion aids cold war stance

To the Editor:

I was somewhat impressed by your editorial policy statement in the Sept. 3 Collegian. Banning Nazi and KKK propoganda is a commendable step, as these extremely reactionary groups do nothing but limit peoples freedom to communicate.

But it was the statement about not printing materials "which the writer does not know to be true" that intrigued me the most. A noble idea, but, apparently, the Collegian discards it when dealing with groups of people. An Associated Press story about Soviets bribing Afghan tribesmen is a good example of this. Given the many examples of distortions, lies, and fabrications of fact produced by American journalists since Soviet troops entered Afghanistan, to print an article where nameless Afghan exiles [spelled CIA in many peoples' minds] are quoted is a mistake. How can one know bribing is occurring when no sources are named to verify the facts? Just because the mass media is out to start the second cold war doesn't mean the student press must follow suit.

So, if the bloodhounds of the Massachusetts news media are digging for problems at UMass, they should dig a little deeper because the real problem at this school is not one we hear about in inflated "Zoo Mass Horror Stores" [i.e. "barbaric students terrorize Hampshire County"]. No, the real problem at UMass lies with its incompetent, narrowminded, sheepish administration. Maybe it's time for the new Board of Regents to seriously consider a changing of the guard here at UMass. We already know it is long overdue.

Finally, the next time outsiders jab you about "Zoo Mass," just tell them the truth—"The UMass ship and her passengers are fine, it's the captain and crew I'm worried about—they're all blind."

Activities planned for Jewish holidays

By STEVE DENSMORE
Collegian Correspondent

Tomorrow's sunset marks the beginning of ten days of prayer and observance for Jews on campus and around the world, according to Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, advisor to Hillel, the University of Massachusetts' group for Jewish students.

Rosh Hashanah, the first day of the Jewish calendar year, begins the "High Holiday period" which ends ten days later with Yom Kippur, a day of atonement and fasting, Perlmutter said.

"We use the ten days to re-examine and chart new directions in our lives," Perlmutter said. It is a time of asking for forgiveness from God and from those individuals we may have wronged during the year, he said.

Of the 3,000 Jewish students on campus Perlmutter said he expects "several hundred" will attend Rosh Hashanah services offered by Hillel. He said he expects fewer than usual to attend Yom Kippur ceremonies because that holiday falls on a weekend this year. "Most students will probably go home for Yom Kippur," he said.

Hillel will sponsor three days of prayer service and activities associated with Rosh Hashanah. Services are scheduled for Wednesday, 7 p.m.; Thursday, 10 a.m. and 7 p.m.; and Friday, 10 a.m.; September 10–12, in the Student Union Ballroom.

The Chabad House, a Jewish center at 30 North Hadley Road across from the Whitmore Administration Building, will also be offering Rosh Hashanah activities, according to resident Yitzhak Santis. The Chabad House will conduct services on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday with free meals being served after services on Wednesday and Thursday.

> "We use the ten days to re-examine and chart new directions in our lives."

Yom Kippur begins at sunset, Friday the 19th and ends with sunset on Saturday, when the day-long fast will end.

Perlmutter said Hillel will serve a "break–the–fast" meal following services on Saturday at 7 p.m. in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union Building. He said anyone interested in the meal must sign–up at the Hillel office, room 302 in the Student Union, by Wednesday, September 17. Students are asked to bring meal tickets to the dinner.

The Chabad House will hold a free "break–the–fast", 7 p.m., Saturday, Santis said. Dancing and festivities will follow the meal, he said.

Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur activities sponsored by both Hillel and the Chabad House are open to all members of the Jewish community, according to Perlmutter and Santis.

Summer discs still spinning sparks

By ROB HUFFMAN
Collegian Staff

Now that you've got your stereo unpacked, and maybe have a few dollars saved up from hustling fried chicken this summer, you might be interested in some of these albums from the hot months of this year.

The Kinks "One for the Road" (Arista)–If you saw the Kinks at the Fine Arts Center last semester, you may have been told by the prson who took your ticket that they were recording an album. Well this is the record, and a video tape of the show (though not from UMass) is also available. Containing two discs worth of tunes spanning their years together, this could be the party record for Fall 1980.

Dexy's Midnight Runners "Searching for the Young Soul Rebels" (EMI)–Accessible yet controversial, the Runners are in the British top twenty. With a three piece horn section (including a trombone player as main soloist) these boys are the self-proclaimed vanguard of a "soul revival." Kevin Rowland's gargling lead vocals give this infectuous band an urgent, contemporary sound. Blood, Sweat, and Tears meet the longshoreman's union. Only available as in import, but may be released here soon.

The Elevators "Front Line" (Arista)–The Cars of western Massachusetts–or merely the valley's biggest consumers of fake leopard fur? Time and a second album will tell if the promise shown by "Stickball Kids" and "Lies" will be fulfilled.

Joan Armatrading "Me, Myself, I" (A & M)–Chris Spedding's guitar work propels this one right to the heart of wonderfully funky reggae-rock. Joan's songwriting and vocals are unmatched.

New Musik "Straight Lines" (Epic)–In England they have an album (From A to B). Here in the States, however, this new wave outfit has only graced us with a four song EP (a so-called Nu-Disk). It's just ten inches, but well worth looking for. While their current British hit "Sanctuary" isn't included, the songs presented here are witty, thought-provoking and catchy. Buy some funny sunglasses and turn this one up loud!

Martian Highway "Organic Hype" (QR Records)–Only kidding, these guys don't have a record. They do have a solid new drummer, though.

Yes "Drama" (Atlantic)–The presence of Roger Dean's cover art, and the lack of Jon Anderson's surrealist sci-fi lyrics is refreshing. Chris Squire is now the senior member of this constantly evolving quintet, therefore it's no coincidence that "Drama" sounds a lot like "Fish Out of Water," Squire's celebrated solo effort. Geoff Downes and Trevor Horn disbanded the Buggles (they were they only members) to fill the spots vacated by Anerson and Rick Wakeman. Trevor's got the pipes to do justice to their oldies, and the new stuff rocks with a rediscovered vigor. Quite enjoyable, actually.

The B-52's "Wild Planet" (Warner Bros.)—The listeners of Boston's WBCN voted "Rock Lobster" one of the most hated songs of 1979. If you didn't like the first one, well...

Jim Post "Magic In Concert" (Flying Fish)—With no more than an acoustic guitar and his versatile voice, Post manages to combine humor, love, social comment and pornography more effectively than any other singer-songwriter I know of. The Woody Guthrie of the 1990's.

Booters shut out in second scrimmage, 1-0

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Like Sunday's game, UMass and the Bristol University Association Football Club of England locked horns behind Boyden yesterday in a low–scoring, defensive battle. Unlike Sunday, in which UMass won 2–1, Bristol shut out the Minutemen, 1–0.

Both teams had early scoring drives stopped by both the goalies and tight penalty–line defenses. UMass failed to capitalize on four corner kicks and several close chances that either sailed over everything or managed to find its way into the Bristol goalie's arms. Bristol, plugged up by UMass defense, nearly had a "freebie" given to them when UMass goalie Brett Olsher missed a routine kickback. However, the ball bounced off the left post, preventing a costly mistake.

As UMass saw its chances kicked away, Bristol took advantage of a free kick. The kick lobbed over most of the defenders and bounced in front of the net. Midfielder Martin Richards then managed to slice it past Olsher (who gave up the lone Bristol goal in Sunday's game, not Matt Esteves as reported earlier) for the lone score with 2:34 left in the first half.

Both teams started tackling more often in the second half, as the ball exchanged possession about once every 30 seconds. Play was interrupted by throw–ins, goal kicks and penalties assessed to both teams, though UMass had a decisive advantage in being awarded the free shot or throw–in.

With about six minutes left in the game, the Minutemen came up with their best effort of the day. Three times they came within ten feet of the goal and three times the Bristol goalie batted the potential score away. When the clock ticked down, so did the Minutemen, despite their overall control of the game and their outshooting Bristol 16–11.

"We buried ourselves," said UMass coach Russ Kidd, "they played very well, but we were flat. I don't know why we were flat. We had the chance, but we passed very poorly and they got us. Bristol was a tough team."

UMass will begin its regular season at Keene State this weekend.

Former UM batmen playing farm club ball

By JANE WOLFSON
Collegian Staff

Two members of the 1980 UMass baseball team were drafted in the June phase of the major league baseball college draft.

Mark Brown, a junior righthander, was drafted in the seventh round by the Baltimore Orioles and team captain center-fielder Mike McEvilly was drafted in a later round by the Detroit Tigers.

Brown completed a 4-6 record for the Minutemen last season with an earned run average of 3.17. Despite Brown's record he was regarded highly and watched closely by scouts all last year.

McEvilly, who batted 296 in 34 games for UMass collected four homeruns and 290 runs batted in.

McEvilly was also outstanding defensively in the outfield, committing only four errors last season.

Immediately after the draft Brown started for the Orioles' rookie team in Bluefield, West Virginia and by the end of July was brought up to the team's A farm team in Miami, part of the Florida State League. McEvilly started out in Tigers rookie camp in Bristol, Tenn. In mid August McEvilly was also moved up to the Tigers A farm team in Macon, Georgia.

Other Minutemen to climb the ranks of the Major Leagues have been most notably pitcher Mike Flannagan class of '73. Flannagan, also of the Orioles, was the 1979 Cy Young award winner and is presently 13-9 this season.

Jeff Reardon, a 1977 UMass graduate, now makes his home with the New York Mets where he is 7-7 with five saves this season, and is used nearly every other day as their sort reliever.

Pitcher Doug Welenc ('79) is with the Houston Astros organization. This season he was 6-2 with Fort Lauderdale in the Florida State League and in mid August was called upto the team's AA farm in Columbus, Georgia, a member of the Southern League.

Jerry Mandalto and Lou Corlabello, '76 and '71 graduates respectively, are members of Italy's national team. In the recent world tournament Italy was the only team to defeat the USA on a ninth inning homer by Mandalto in Tokyo.

Last year's Most Valuable Player, rightfielder Doug Aylward, who hit an even 400 last season with 4 homeruns and 25 RBI's, spent the summer playing ball in Moncton, Canada.

Ultimate team hosts Hampshire College

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Thanks to lawyers at Whammo, the UMass ultimate team begins this fall with a new name. What used to be known as ultimate frisbee is now just "ultimate" since frisbee is a registered trademark. They're also known as ZooDisc according to Joel Zuckerman.

"No matter what we call ourselves other teams refer to us as the Zoo," he said.

Ultimate frisbee or just plain ultimate; it is still the same strenuous game. According to coach/captain Pete Holschuh, ultimate is extremely exhausting.

"I've played soccer and I've been a swimmer and this is the most exhausting game I've ever played. There's no stopping," he said.

An ultimate field is similar to a football field; it measure 60 by 40 yards with 20 by 40 yard end zones. Seven at a time play for each side, the game starts with a "kickoff." Side A throws the frisbee to side B whose goal is to get the disc into the end zone. A turnover occurs when the side with possession drops the frisbee or when it is intercepted.

Tournaments are most exciting according to Dave (Buzz)

Guzzi named to Higher Ed post

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts Board of Regents yesterday appointed Paul Guzzi, Gov. Edward J. King's chief secretary, as temporary head of the state's universities and colleges.

However, instead of giving him the title of interim chancellor, the board decided to designate him chief administrative officer. It specified that Guzzi would not be considered eligible for the post of permanent chancellor, an appointment expected sometime next year.

University Chancellor Henry Koffler said he thought Guzzi's appointment was "good."

"He is very knowledgeable with the state and his connections in government may help," he said.

Student body co-President Richard LaVoice reiterated Koffler's sentiments, saying, "Guzzi has the governor's ear. He has the potential to help higher education because of his intense political clout," LaVoice said.

Guzzi, 38, is a former state secretary and state representative. A Harvard graduate, he taught high school before entering politics. Recently, he has been serving as an informal adviser to the new regents board as it prepares to take control of the state's 30 campuses.

Guzzi will take a leave of absence from the governor's office to fill the $54,000-a-year post, a regents spokesman said.

Along with handling Guzzi's appointment, the board briefly discussed what role students should have in the reorganized governance structure.

Martin read a letter from King in which the governor promised to file legislation guaranteeing that students have at least one seat on each of the campus trustee boards. Those panels will continue to exist, but only in an advisory capacity.

King, in his letter, sidestepped the issue of whether students should have a seat on the Regents panel as well. Instead, he merely asked the regents to consider how best to give students and faculty members a voice.

Koffler said he endorsed Gov. King's promise to file legislation establishing student representation on the Boards of Trustees.

About the possibility of a student Regent, Koffler said, "I think that would be good."

LaVoice said King's letter to Regents Chairman James R. Martin was "an ecnouraging step."

LaVoice said he thought the letter indicated that officals had not ruled out that possibility.

The subject was laid aside until the Regents' next meeting, Sept. 30.

Chancellor delivers convocation speech

By LAURA M. KENNEY
Collegian Correspondent

UMass Chancellor Henry Koffler in his convocation speech yesterday stressed the importance of planning the University's future, saying, "If we fail on the Amherst campus to shape our own future through planning and decisions, others will plan for the future for us."

Koffler spoke from a prepared text in Bowker Auditorium to a crowd of about 250, largely faculty and staff members. He mentioned the water crisis, which postponed his speech last week, briefly as one of the problems he has encountered in his one year as chancellor.

The chancellor said he regrets the way in which the reorganization of higher education in the state was implemented over the summer, but said, "the new organizational format provides long-term opportunities for the University. For me, these opportunities outweigh the other considerations."

In the reorganization, the legislature voted to replace the five autonomous boards of trustees for public colleges and universities with 28 boards serving under a 'super board,' whose members have been appointed by the governor.

Koffler went on to outline ideas appearing in a paper he wrote and distributed last May entitled 'Planning for the Eighties.' He emphasized his belief in the excellence of the University and the need to develop alternative plans for enrollment to deal with expectedly smaller entering classes as a result of declining birth rates. However, Koffler did not cite specific proposals.

He said it's up to the University to draw more non-traditional students,

John Anderson to take part in first presidential debate

WASHINGTON (AP) — The League of Women Voters decided yesterday to invite independent candidate John B. Anderson to take part in the league's first televised debate between President Carter and Republican nominee Ronald Reagan.

The league said Anderson "has clearly demonstrated significant voter interest and support" to participate in the league's debates. The league's decision was a major boost to the Illinois Republican congressman's independent campaign for the presidency.

Anderson promptly accepted the league's invitation. In a statement issued in New York state, where he was campaigning, Anderson said:

"This year, I believe the debates afford a unique opportunity for the American people to judge the presidential candidates on the basis of substantive issues rather than parochial and narrow political interests and concerns.

"The debates can be the single most important vehicle by which the public will study the positions of each of the candidates and be able to determine who is best suited and qualified to lead this country into the next decade.

"I eagerly look forward to the opportunity to meet my two opponents face-to-face and discuss the major issues of the election before the American people," Anderson said.

It was not immediately known whether Carter would agree to take part in a three way debate with Reagan and Anderson. The president and his advisers have been adamant in their insistence that the first campaign include only Carter and Reagan, with Anderson allowed to join subsequent debates.

Frank Hatch shows support for Anderson

By STEPHEN MORAN
Collegian Staff

Charging that students are "fed up with candidates who are not able to deliver what they promise," Francis Hatch, 1978 republican state gubernatorial candidate, said the motive for Independant presidential hopeful John B. Anderson's candidacy could be summed up in three words: Carter and Reagan."

Hatch spoke in the Garden Room of the Lord Jeffery Inn before a group of 25 Anderson supporters. Originally, it had been planned that the talk would take place in the spacious gardens behind the building. But loudspeakers and a podium became unnecessary because of what Richard Evans, Amherst resident and party host, termed a "disappointing turnout." He said the fundraiser netted $600.

In his address, Hatch said that Anderson "is a breath of fresh air and not hot air."

He said that Anderson needs support from both Democrats and Republicans," and that he is confident that Anderson will carry Massachusetts because Carter and Reagon lack the ability to project a "national purpose."

Today's announcement in Washington–stating that if Anderson receives five percent of the vote in the November general election, he will receive a minimum of $3 million, and more if he gets a larger percentage–raised the hopes of Evans that Anderson's financial picture is beginning to improve.

"We have gone to the bankers to borrow off the projected income. Bankers have been receptive to the loan, and we feel that we can get $5 million in credit right now."

Hatch claimed that "In a campaign of this kind, television is the key media. If you want to get your thoughts accross, there is nothing like television." Evans said that the $5 million that seems earmarked for the Anderson campaign will be used to fund a major television drive.

Evans said that he was only one among many across the country that would have to hold such events in order to raise

Worcester resident pleads innocent in Superior Court to rape charge

By JANE M. DEVIRGILIO
Collegian Staff

A former UMass student pleaded innocent Monday in Hampshire Superior Court on three charges in connection with the Sept. 2 rape of a UMass woman that occurred in her sorority house, according to Amherst police.

William M. Henry, 25, of 30 Hacker St., Worcester was arrested the same day in a downtown Amherst business establishment eight hours after the rape was reported and charged by Amherst police with aggravated rape, breaking and entering with intent to commit a felony, and assault and battery.

The sorority president, who asked to remain unidentified, described the alleged rapist as a "loner" and said he was not an acquaintance of any member but "drifted in with a group of someone's friends."

"She (the victim) never saw him before," said the president.

The president explained since it was the beginning of the semester and members were moving in, "he had easier access to the house without being noticed."

The victim was in a first floor room when the rape occurred. About half the members of the sorority were in the house at the time of the rape, said the president.

Henry allegedly separated from the group of people once inside the sorority house and individually gained access to the room where the woman was located, said the president.

The victim and members of the sorority will testify against Henry in Hampshire Superior Court, according to the sorority president.

A pre-trial hearing is set for Sept. 18 in Hampshire Superior Court in Northampton according to Amherst police.

Women's center offers assistance to women with various needs

By HILLARY NOKE
Collegian Correspondent

If you became a victim of rape or assault on campus, who would you turn to? Is there anyone you could rely on for confidence and support in such a crisis?

The UMass Everywomen's Center is working to continue providing such a service to University women. At an introductory meeting Monday night, the Center began recruiting candidates for their Counselor/Advocate and Educator/Advocate programs which provide counseling 24 hours a day, seven days a week, as well as support groups for rape victims.

The program, serving Franklin and Hampshire counties, began in 1976 as a rape task force, said Counselor/Advocate Director Myra Hindus. It has since been broadened into two separate programs that treat victims of sexual harassment, wife battering, and incest.

Hindus said there were 110 cases of violence against women last year.

The candidates must complete a 40-hour training program where they learn counseling, legal skills, and issues of race and class.

Candidate Elizabeth Shapiro hopes working as a counselor will be good practical experience for her future as a feminist therapist.

Hindus said the counselors will accompany the victim in the process of reporting the rape, medical examination, and through the legal process if they choose to report the rape.

Lillian Sims, director of the Educator/Advocate program, will train her candidates in leading educational sessions on the problem of violence against women in dormitories, classrooms, and in the community.

The center is accepting applications from interested Counselor/Advocate candidates until 6 p.m. on September 10 and from Educator/Advocates until 5 p.m. on September 12. Credits are available for the work.

LIVE WIRE

It's official — Bob Marley and the Wailers are bringing their reggae on the road, and that includes a stop at Zoo Mass. The Jamaican artist, known for such songs as "I Shot the Sheriff," "Get up, Stand Up" and "Stir It Up" will be playing the Curry Hicks Cage (we call it The Cage, freshpersons) September 29, at 8 p.m. Marley is kinda the Top 40 of reggae, having overshadowed some of the lesser known, but important acts like Third World and Toots and the Maytels, but he's been an important influence nonetheless (just ask Eric Clapton and Peter Tosh) and you should check him out. The concert, billed "Bob Marley and the Wailers Present Tuff Gong Uprising," will feature The I-Threes as an opening act. Tickets go on sale Friday at Platterpus and Main Street record shops in Northampton, For the Record in downtown Amherst, and on campus at Tix and Union Records. Student tic prices are $7, with general pub. seats selling for $9. If you wait till the night of the show, you'll have to shelve out an extra buck, so buy now. Seh jah there!...And in case you haven't heard — the winners from WBCN's "Rock and Roll Rumble at the Rat" from the past two years will be here at The Hatch this weekend. The Neighborhoods (1979 winners) will play Friday night, and judging from last semester's knockout performance, you better get there early. Then on Saturday, Pastiche (this year's model) will be here to "pahty" with you. I saw 'em and nobody liked them as much as The Peytons or The Remakes, but they won the title as Boston's "best" band, so take that for what it's worth...And speaking of The Peytons—this bright, now "new" band, which does great, inconceivable covers of 60's stuff, in addition to their originals, just may be dropping by before too long. Their lead singer, Walter, used to go to school here, so hopefully...Rumours Dept. — The Rolling Stones will be playing Boston, probably in November. A call placed to their midtown Manhattan offices produced the following response: No tour has been finalized. There have been several proposals on file here submitted by promoters. You'd be best to call back in two months to see when the tour has been set." Since that call was made in August, the scenario would seem to go like this: an announcement over the local rock stations in Boston (judging from past tours) sometime in October, a mad rush to the Garden where tickets will be sold out in two or so hours, and a performance by Mick & Co. sometime in November. So far, stories have been circulating to the effect of "three nights at the Orpheum, two shows at the Garden, five nights at the Paradise," but a friend tells me that you'd be safest to stick with the middling. More on this story as it develops...Don't forget to see the B-52's at the Stage West in Hartford next Friday, Septmeber 19. Gee, maybe "Give Me Back My Man" will be played every five minutes on WAAF...Lastly, in the "Hasn't Rigormortis Set In Yet?" Department, Peter (Herman's Hermits) Noone isn't Herman any more and if you haven't bought his new album yet, then you're missing something really surprising. Twice Nightly (To Be Reviewed) should prove, as it did to this writer, that comebacks needn't be embarassing or sickeningly nostalgic. It's a decent LP and Noone should be doing stuff from it when he plays the Paradise September 21. But let's hope he does some of the Hermits old tunes...Later!

Iran may be ready to discuss U.S. hostages

Associated Press

Iran's new prime minister says he may be ready to discuss the 52 American hostages if Iran is assured the United States has "repented."

In the United Arab Emirates, a newspaper in the United Arab Emirates claimed Iran plans to try the American hostages as spies and then expel them without further punishment if the United States frees $8 billion in Iranian assets.

The British government closed its embassy in Tehran and withdrew most of its consular staff yesterday to prevent retaliation against British diplomats for alleged ill treatment of Iranian demonstrators in London.

Prime Minister Mohammed Ali Rajai's remarks on the hostages were made in a Tehran speech Monday in response to a message from U.S. Secretary of State Edmund S. Muskie asking for the American's early release. A partial English translation of the speech was received Tuesday in Washington where State Department officials had no immediate comment.

"If we were sure that you had repented, we would talk," Rajai said. He added that if six stages of repentance were observed "under these circumstances, we will be prepared to hold discussions with you." The six stages included a confession of American wrongdoing — which President Carter has ruled out — and a decision "not to repeat your sins."

Rajai's response to Muskie, part of which was garbled in translation, was not entirely clear. But he seemed to be suggesting a willingness to discuss the hostages if Iranian conditions are met.

The Americans have been held since November 4. Muskie's message, delivered last week through the Swiss embassy in Tehran, was the first direct, high-level contact between the United States and Iran, since the failed American rescue attempt in April.

The British Foreign Office stressed diplomatic relations were not being broken with Iran, and the Iranian embassy in London said it would remain open. One British consular official is to remain in Tehran.

British diplomats beg returning from Tehran just as Britain expelled two of the demonstrators. The Iranian students association in Tehran issued a statement calling the expulsions a "disgraceful act by the criminal British government," and urged Iranians to receive the two deportees with a hero's welcome, Tehran Radio reported.

The newspaper al-Khaleej in Sarjah, United Arab Emirates, quoting "well-informed sources," said Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr outlined the scenario for release of the hostages last month in a telephone conversation with Algerian President Benjedid Chadli, whom President Carter persuaded to mediate the hostage issue.

Buddy Support

By Kimberly Green

Concerned Third World Heads of Residence have established the Residential Life Third World Professional Network in an effort to insure growth, unity and develope a positive image for new Third World students.

Founded in December of 1979 this organization offers support via two branches.

At its first meeting held Wednesday, Sept. 3 in the Melville Women's Dorm, the members presented to an audience of 50, a program aimed at furnishing a stronger source of support for incoming students. The proposed program is called the Third World Buddy System.

Under this system upperclassmen are assigned to guide freshpersons both academically and socially through the bureaucratic tendencies of the university. Unfortunately, due to circumstances beyond their control, i.e. the water shortage, this system has not yet been able to progress as rapidly as they had anticipated.

Rally for Seta

Two years ago, on September 13, 1978, Seta Rampersad, a young Black woman who was a student at UMass, was found dead in a hotel room in South Deerfield. After an inquest, in which two contradictory coroner's reports were given, the court ruled that Seta died of 'natural causes'. The circumstances surrounding her death make it clear that Seta was murdered and that many people in the community may be implicated in both her murder and cover-up. Yet the case was quickly closed.

No one has been indicted, and no investigation was ever conducted. Seta's death is part of a history of violence and repression against Third World people in this area. The rally demands justice for Seta, and an end to these racist attacks.

There will be a rally and a vigil on Sept. 11 for the death of Seta Rampersad at 12 noon, Northampton Courthouse. The vigil will take place at 7 p.m. at the Captain's Table, 48 Damon Road, Northampton. The rally and the vigil are sponsored by the Third Women's Task Force.

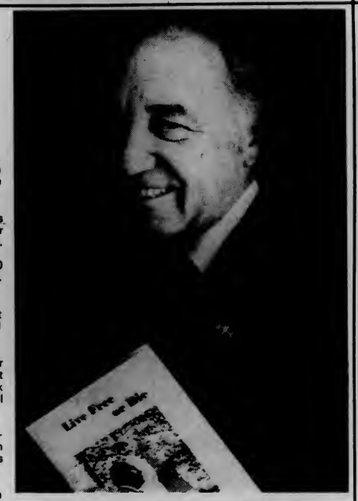
Meldrim Thompson clears first hurdle in race to recapture N.H. statehouse



Former New Hampshire Governor Meldrim Thompson Jr. was nominated last night by his party for a fourth term as chief executive of the Granite State.

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — Controversial former Gov. Meldrim Thomson easily cleared the first hurdle yesterday in his attempt to recapture the New Hampshire Statehouse he ran for six stormy years.

Thomson, 68, seeking an unprecedented fourth term as governor, coasted to an easy Republican rimary victory over Executive Councilor Louis D'Allesandro, 42, of Manchester.

Thomson had 58 percent of the vote to D'Allesandro's 40 percent with nearly half the state's 299 precincts counted. Thomson had 21,357 votes, D'Allesandro 14,562.

Thomson ran strongly across the state and beat D'Allesandro in his home city of Manchester by a 2-1 margin.

In the 11-man Republican U.S. Senate contest, former state Attorney General Warren Rudman opened his largest lead with 7,444 votes. Lufts professor John Sununu retook second place with 5,922 and former Gov. Wesley Powell dropped to third with 5,763.

In the 2nd Congressional District Republican contest, Executive Councilor Judd Gregg opened his largest margin over state Sen. Susan McLane, 6,196 to 4,773. Charles Bass was third among nine entered with 4,447.

In the 1st Congressional District race among seven Republicans, former Manchester Mayor John Mongan surged ahead with 4,607 votes with former House Speaker Marshall Cobleigh next with 4,122.

James Buckley victorious over Bozzuto in Conn. Republican Senate Primary

HARTFORD (AP) — James Buckley won Connecticut's Republican U.S. Senate nomination yesterday with a primary victory over Richard Bozzuto, giving voters a choice in November between the former New York senator and Democrat Christopher Dodd, the son of a former senator.

Buckley defeated Bozzuto, the state Senate minority leader, 66,429 to 50,783 with only one precinct outstanding in the state's 169 towns. About 25 percent of the state's 1 430,000 Republicans voted in the primary, a fairly light turnout.

There were upsets in the state's two Democratic congressional primaries. In the 2nd District in the eastern part of the state, challenger Samuel Gejdenson, a former state representative, defeated former State Democratic Chairman John Dempsey Jr., son of the former governor.

In the 4th District in Fairfield County, challenger John Aristotle Phillips defeated the endorsed candidate, Wayne Koninkek of Stamford. Phillips gained national attention as a student at Princeton when he designed an atomic bomb from publicly available documents. At 25, Phillips is just old enough to run for Congress.

Democrats do well in Rhode Island where balloting attracts weak interest

(AP) — Two Rhode Island congressmen and the lieutenant governor turned back challengers in three Democratic races yesterday in primary balloting that attracted weak voter interest.

U.S. Rep. Edward P. Beard, in a 2nd District race that attracted most of the scant attention paid the primary, was leading state Sen. Stephen J. Fortunato of Providence 19,903 to 14,243 with 95 percent of the districts reporting.

A third candidate, Geoffrey A. Schoos, an insurance man and a political newcomer, had only 1,533 votes.

"As the price of gold went up silence became golden," said Beard, referring to his silent campaign. "It's a good old script and it's been working, so why should I change it."

In the 1st District Democratic runoff, 10-term Rep. Fernand J. St. Germain had a huge plurality over Alfred F. Rocha of Tiverton with 96 percent of the districts recorded.

St. Germain had 21,680 votes to Rocha's 5,728.

The Republican race in the 1st District saw the endorsed William P. Montgomery trouncing perennial candidate Louis D. Gingras-O'Hara, a consulting engineering from Providence, 1,420-308 with 97 percent of the vote tallied.

Lt. Gov. Thomas R. DiLuglio, seeking his third term in the largely ceremonial post, held a 41,304-12,111 lead over Joseph L. Adams with 95 percent of the precincts reporting.

DIGEST

The Associated Press

Pentagon admits Army Combat divisions not prepared to fight

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon conceded that six of 10 Army combat divisions stationed in the United States are not fully ready to flight, but insisted that is common in peacetime.

Assistant Secretary of Defense for Public Affairs Thomas B. Ross said an evaluation of the Army's 16 combat divisions had found all six based overseas to be comat-ready but six of 10 based at home to be deficient in personnel, equipment or training.

Results of the Army's evaluation usually are confidential, but conclusions of the most recent report were published yesterday in the New York Times.

"It's a common practice amongst all armed forces to man units in peacetime at lower levels than would be required in wartime," said Ross.

Jet baggage compartment explodes in Sacramento

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — An explosion occurred in a baggage compartment of a jet that had just landed at Sacramento Metropolitan Airport with 44 passengers yesterday and authorities said two workers unloading luggage were injured.

Bill Miller, spokesman for the Sacramento County sheriff's department, said the nature of the explosion aboard the United Airlines Boeing 727 jet was not immediately known.

He said no bomb threat had been received.

Kansas board of education blames teachers for skills drop

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — The Wichita Board of Education, after deciding teachers may be par ly to blame for drops in math and grammar skills among students, plans to test prospective teachers in basic skills.

Beginning with the 1981-1982 school year, Wichita officials will test teaching candidates to see if they've mastered ninth grade level minimum skills in English and 10th grade skills in math.

The Kansas City times reported that Wichita, the largest school district in Kansas with 2,900 teachers, would be the first school system in Kansas or Missouri to use such test.

Consumer product commission warns of garage door danger

WASHINGTON (AP) — Children and garage doors can be a deadly combination, warns the Consumer Product Safety Commission.

The latest craze, the commission reports, is a game in which youngsters activate the door's closing mechanism and then try and get through the door before it closes.

Four deaths have been reported from playing this game in the first five months of 1980, the commission says.

Between 1972 and 1979, the commission said, it looked into 37 accidents involving automatic garage doors and children trying to beat the door was one of the most common types of mishaps.

The commission received reports of 14 fatalities and 750 injuries serious enough to require hospital treatment between 1970 and 1978 involving these doors.

Immigration officials must bar homosexuals from country

WASHINGTON (AP) — The justice Department said yesterday that any person who admits being a homosexual to an immigration official must be barred from entering the country.

The Justice Department is seeking legislation which would eliminate homosexuality as a ground for exclusion.

But acting Immigration Commissioner David Crosland said the department is bound by law to enforce the present policy. However, he said no one would be excluded without a voluntary admission that he or she is a homosexual.

Air Force must reinstate homosexual serviceman

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal judge, ruling the military had confusing standards for dealing with gay servicemen, yesterday ordered the Air Force to reinstate Leonard Matlovich five years after he was kicked out of the service for admitting his homosexuality.

U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell, who had upheld the Air Force's ouster of Matlovich four years ago, reversed himself and directed the service to readmit the 37-year-old man. Matlovich also won back pay for five years.

Editorial/Opinion

A day care center on a state farm outside Santiago, part of Cuba's extensive day care center system where child care is provided for free.

State programs attack race and sex biases

Editor's note: The following is the third of a four-part series of commentaries about Cuba based on the experiences of its writer, a UMass student, who visited there this summer.

From Cuba, however, came those who, in a sense, did feel they were fleeing something. The large numbers of homosexuals who left Cuba were not fleeing communism, but rather, a society that is largely very heterosexist. Cuba, like most Latin cultures, teems with machismo and as a result there are many social taboos against being homosexual. There are even some official restrictions on homosexuals, such as being barred from membership in the Communist Party. (A vanguard organization to which only 3 percent of the population belongs.) The official position of the government, however, is not one of oppression, as the government is making an effort to educate the people on homosexuality. I spoke with one gay man, a writer and member of the Union of Artists and Writers, who said being a known homosexual did not hinder his career. Also, a recently published book designed as a teacher's aid on sex education and sexuality, deals with homosexuality in a chapter separate from the one on sexual deviations, and attempts to dispel the common myths of homosexuality as sickness. The book also assures its readers that homosexual love can be as rewarding as heterosexual love.

Eradicating homophobia in Cuba, however, is a process that will take time. It is still difficult for homosexuals to come out of the closet in Cuba, and in the interim many homosexuals may feel, and rightly so, that it would be better to come to the United States in the hopes of finding a more supportive and tolerant society, of which they are aware exists in some parts of the U.S.

Much of the cultural and historic bias responsible for heterosexism in Cuba fosters strong sexist attitudes as well. For instance, most night clubs in Cuba will not allow unescorted women in—couples and single men only. The dynamics between many young couples I spoke with also reflected this chauvanism. The men would always step forward to take command of the conversation, trying out their English on this norte americano, while the woman would stay back not attempting or expecting to take part in the conversation. The most telling of all, however, is the division of labor in the work force. Women make op 31 percent of the work force in Cuba, but are concentrated in the traditional female roles. Women comprise 66 percent of the Public Health field and 64 percent of the elementary and secondary school teachers are women.

However, most college level professors are men. Fifty eight percent of the service related jobs are held by women (which includes the staff of Cuba's extensive day care service which is virtually all women). This is compared to women who are 25 percent of the industrial work force, 11 percent of construction, and 13.4 percent of agriculture. As a general rule women in Cuba still carry the double work load of having to maintain the household as well as hold down a job.

Here again, however, these problems are not left to fester and propagate by an insusceptible government. In 1960 the Cuban government established the Federation of Cuban Women (FMC). The FMC is a women-run organization set up to deal with women's problems within, and their relationship to, the revolution.

Prior to 1959, 70 percent of the women in Cuba were illiterate or had less than a fourth grade education. One of the first tasks of the FMC was to raise the level of education for all women to a sixth grade level. By 1965 the FMC hopes to raise this to a ninth grade level.

The FMC is also involved in political conciousness raising among women. It does this by sponsoring monthly study groups on speeches by revolutionary leaders and current events. A recent project of the FMC has been to create "Friendship Brigades" for the purpose of establishing solidarity with women of other countries.

But sexism, as well as heterosexism (and to a much lesser degree racism) still exists in Cuba. They exist because the fundemental change that must take place to eradicate them must happen in the minds of each individual. A lesson can be learned from the experience of women and homosexuals in Cuba. The lesson that socialism is not an automatic panacea for all social ills, especially those with deep historic and cultural roots, such as racism, sexism, and heterosexism.

What a socialist system does do, however, is create a context in which the profit motive for exploiting these prejudices to maintain the status quo is removed, and replacing it with a social system which functions on social cooperation. And the isms of sex, race, class, and sexual preference are the biggest obstacles to that cooperation.

Tomorrow the writer's impressions of the people of Cuba and how the Revolution has changed their lives.

Paul's Confusion: Part Two

Paul's Confusion is a political serial appearing here every Wednesday.

"Um..." Paul began, his arms flapping limpy twice by his sides.

"Oh," Michelle said absently, very carefully removing her hand from his face as if she had just glued it on a nd did not want it to set misaligned.

The man bounced up to Paul, clasping his hands energetically in front of himself at waist height. "Have you got a T.V.?" he asked with his eyebrows strained upward in what Paul might have thought an exaggeration of inquisitiveness. As it was, Paul could not think at all.

"Yes. Jockalot's on tonight!" said one of the women. "This morning," she added.

"Jackalot!" the four howled in chorus.

"Uh..n-no," Paul replied.

"Got to go," Michelle announced. "Just stopped by to say hello, welcome you back," she said examining the palm of her hand as if it were a rare postage stamp.

"R-right," Paul mumbled to their backs on their way down the stairs. "See ya." he crawled back into bed.

An almost perfectly square projection of sunlight beamed from the single, shadeless window on the far side of Paul's room from his bed; gliding in a low arc behind him on the white, cracked plaster wall, across two poster prints (attached with long, carefully cut rectangles of masking tape,), one a Miro and the other, less colorful, by an artist friend, a glaring corner now verged on Paul's left eye; his head, tilted slighthy to the right, sank deeply into his thick, feather pillow.

The glare touched the edge of one eye, unfolding both with languid, mechanical grace, like flowers in time-lapse photography. Paul had been dreaming in as singularly vivid colors as those he had seen only in movies of rare plants and flowers, opening and swaying to circadian rhythms, years before in high school biology class—National Geographic rentals. But now he had dreamt that he stood on a light brown mound of dry silt, inches from a low, olive-green plant with thick fleshy, broad leaves growing out of the soil in dense clumps. Where a leaf was broken, brilliantly red blood drooled from its veins, rolled off its waxy skin and collected in small, darkening pools that seemed to float on the dust.

The night before, when he was still home visiting his parents, Paul had seen a movie about Vietnam. It too was in color. Though this did not occur to him then, as he awoke this morning he thought of the Vietnam war he grew up to: A war in black and white—the satellite images he saw running, wailing, gazing blankly at him as he sat eating his dinner were peculiarly shattered and garbled so that he knew it was happening far away, maybe on another planet.

Paul glanced at his clock. He had half an hour before his nine o'clock class.

Regents to inflict 'vocationalization'

To the Editor:

Ed Levine's editorial on reorganization contained many good points, not least of which is the need for UMass students to be politically active to defend our university and public education. However there are additional factors concerning King's appointments to the Board of Regents that need to be addressed. First, the board is dominated by high technology and insurance company interests. What is their agenda for public education? Simply put they want taxpayers to subsidize the cost of training their future work force. Their goal is to maximize profits, not to ensure quality public education accessible to all citizens of Massachusetts. UMass will become Digital State University if they have their way. With the Regent's power to eliminate academic programs and transfer faculty the education offered at public schools will be increasingly vocationalized. Now there is nothing wrong with job training per se but these programs are to be created in a time of austerity. It is unlikely that the Regents will lobby for full funding of the university. Rather they will shift the meager existing resources away from traditional academic programs towards their pet areas.

This brings us to the second factor: the budget. Big business in Massachusetts via the Massachusetts Business Roundtable and other organizations have consistently supported KIng's plans to hold down or reduce state spending on social services—like public education. It is no coincidence that James Martin the Chair of the Board of Regents is also Chair of the Massachusetts Business Roundtable. It is doubtful that after his appointment to the Board of Regents that he and the other corporate execs like him will fight for the increased budget this university and all public schools need to overcome six years of budget cuts.

In fact reorganization is nothing but a big business attempt to take over public higher education and to mold it to its own ends: corporate profits. This would undermine the true mission of public higher education: to provide low cost high quality education to working class and middle class students unable to afford private schools. Only by organizing can we keep UMass from becoming the training center of Wang Industries, Prime Computer, etc.

Dormitory assignments nearly complete

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

Only 30 men remain to be housed in dormitories and Housing Assignment Coordinator Gerald I. Quarles said yesterday those students should receive their housing assignments shortly.

The 30 juniors and seniors have been without housing since the beginning of the semester for a variety of reasons, such as academic and bill paying problems or last minute decision to enter the dorms, Quarles said.

Rooms for the men should be available as soon as the housing office can consolidate, or put two students living alone in double rooms, into single rooms. While he was not sure when that would happen, Quarles said the rooms would definitley be made available.

"We'll come up with them. It's just a matter of time," he said.

"The University has the right to make assignments, but the students do have some perogatives," Quarles said. "We're trying to do it in a good cooperative spirit."

Quarles said 591 students have been placed in dormitory rooms since August 31. Rooms became available through an audit of the dorms which indicated 131 spaces available in the system, through the conversion of 100 "swing spaces" Which were previously used for other purposes and from 40 spaces found through a double-check of spaces available. In addition, an audit of the dorms taken late Wednesday by the housing office revealed another 150 spaces available because of no-shows. The opening of the Knowlton women's dorm in Northeast also opened up spaces around campus, he said.

"There will be hundreds of vacancies by the end of September," Quarles said, adding this is always a problem at the beginning of the fall semester.

Traditionally, Quarles said, the numbers of the students in the dorms declines steadily during the first few weeks of the semester and the housing office is attempting to keep track of vacancies created.

"We're running a daily process of having the Registrar do readings of our room files to see who has withdrawn. We're bound to hold a room until we receive official notice from the registrar or until we talk to the student directly," Quarles said.

"Thirty people means a lot of personal aggravation, but in terms of the whole system, it's not bad," Quarles said. There are 11,410 students living in the UMass dormitories, he said.

"The students we are dealing with, by an overwhelming majority, have been really decent to deal with. We're making a special effort to deal with these people," he said.

Quarles said housing problems this year have been the worst since the fall of 1977 when numerous problems broke out. Since that time, the housing office has instituted new policies to keep track of students in the dorms, dramatically cutting down on problems.

"1977 was a bad year," Quarles said. "There are more frosh this year than in 1977, when we had a major blowout in the system. But, we've had far less problems this year."

Human fence encloses Cubans

FORT McCOY, Wis. (AP) — Nearly 1,500 Army infantrymen and military police maintained a human fence around a men's compound at Fort McCoy yesterday after two days of disturbances at the Cuban refugee resettlement center.

More than 40 refugees were placed under guard in a high-security detention area for allegedly instigating fence-stormings by scores of Cubans on both Sunday and Monday, said U.S. Marshal Robert Thompson.

Seventeen people — six military policemen and 11 refugees — were injured in the disburbances, but most of the injuries consisted of minor cuts and bruises. One military policeman remained hospitalized in good condition with head injuries suffered Sunday.

Tomas Rodriquez, president of the refugees' self-government council, blamed the unrest on an unfounded rumor that a charitable organization was selling refugees to sponsors. Wisconsin Gov. Lee S. Dreyfus said earlier that the refugees apparently were frustrated over the long delay in resettling the 4,500 Cubans who remain at the camp.

The violence first erupted Sunday after banners, written in English and criticizing resettlement efforts, were displayed at the camp, according to Rodriquez.

During the four-hour disturbance, about 300 refugees stormed a chain-link fence and tore part of it down before being turned back by security officers, federal officials said.

On Monday, about 100 Cubans ran among buildings and again surged toward the fence, but no additional damage was done in the one-hour skirmish, the officials said.

A few refugees escaped during the disturbance Sunday and were later returned to the center, but there were no escapes Monday, according to David Nichols, a State Department spokesman at the camp.

The violence was confined to a men's compound that houses 3,800 refugees. Other refugees are housed in a juvenile section, a family section and a separate compound for single men.

Rodriguez said the disturbances apparently were caused by refugee anger at the volunteer agencies that are responsible for finding U.S. sponsors for the Cubans.

He said a rumor that refugees were being sold to sponsors by the agencies, specifically the U.S. Catholic Conference, caused an emotionally charged tmosphere in the men's compound.

Additional fees caused by cut in CETA funds

By Hannah Hosom
Collegian Correspondent

Students planning to graduate this year received an unexpected additional ten dollar fee on their bill.

This fee, approved last spring, will provide funds for the Placement Service at the University of Massachusetts. These funds were previously acquired from the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act.

When the CETA funds ran out in 1979, Director Arthur Hilson requested the additional fee to be added to the student fee bill to help finance the Job Employment Matching Service, a computer system which takes student files and resumes, and compares them with company openings or graduate school requirements.

Students are informed by the JEMS system of possible organizations to which they may apply, and the organizations receive a list of students who fill the qualifications.

Approximately 3000 students are registered with the program, and only about fifteen percent of these will not be placed by the service, said staff member Clark Edwards.

The Placement Service also arranges interviews, offers workshops on preparing resumes, and provides career counseling. About 500 employers came last year, and almost 7000 interviews were held, said Edwards.

The office was opened about 40 years ago to help the expanding student population. The JEMS program was initiated five years ago, and has been in operation for a year and a half.

Prof raps town on water issue

By PATRICK HAFEY
Collegian Correspondent

"If Amherst is going through this experience, it's not isolated. Other communities have the same problem," said Associate Prof. Carl Carlozzi, of the resource planning office at the University of Massachusetts.

Attempting to shed some light on the water shortage problem, Carlozzi said that while there were many unforeseeable events occuring this fall, Amherst town officials may have been somewhat relaxed about warning the University about the water situation.

"Amherst has apparently chosen not to go beyond it's own boundaries to obtain water," Carlozzi said.

Noting that water suppliers responsibility is to alert the user to the availability of water, Carlozzi felt the town was at fault.

"As far as I'm concerned, the principal responsibility lies with the town. I fully believe the situation was entirely knowable. It wasn't a mystery," Carlozzi said.

Normally, at this time of year, the traditional "stress period", precautions are taken to avoid the type of incident that recently occured. While the lack of rainfall was not as severe this year as in 1978, when a similar shortage occured, it was severe enough to have indicated a possible water shortage in the future.

"There's nothing new about the water supply situation, it occurs every year at this time," he said.

Carlozzi, who has been at the University for fifteen years, said the subject of obtaining alternative water supplies has arisen many times.

After the 1978 water shortage, a study done by Geraghty & Miller indicated an additional well, prducing 1.5 million gallons, would serve only as insurance in the event of a serious water shortage, but would have no significant effect in alleviating the "water stress period" of late August and September, he said.

"Provided there's no major growth and water use is maintained at its present level, then we are a little better off with the new well," said Carlozzi.

Former Republican gubernatorial candidate Francis Hatch, while attending a fund raiser in Amherst for Independent presidential candidate John Anderson, stated "within the next ten years there will be water shortages across the state. We have a big water problem. The University's problem is just symptomatic of a large problem," Hatch said.

Another question confronting town and UMass officials is whether the existing water supply system is capable of handling a significant increase in flow. To avoid the costs of rebuilding the present supply system, Carlozzi believes conservation measures, similar to those implemented during the 1978 shortage should be taken.

"I would recommend a more effective water alert conservation routine that would automatically kick into gear around the traditional water stress periods," Carlozzi said.

Gerry Grady, Director of Community Relations for UMass, said with adequate conservation measures and the new well, at the Lawrence Swamp in Amherst, the town should weather the current crisis with a minimum of additonal problems.

Many things could be done to prevent a similar incident from occurring, Carlozzi said, such as the formation of a special survey group that would examine the feasibility of a regular contract with alternate water suppliers.

"Basically, we can meet the water demands for ten or eleven months of the year, but that four or five week critical period has taught us to be conscious of our water supply. This year we weren't," he said.

such as people changing careers in midlife, by offering and advocating new programs. He said his sense of planning "places its premium on a flexible and imaginative disposition to see and set a number of alternative paths to the future. For the campus as a whole, if we exert ourselves through planning, the overall drop in enrollments ought to be confined to modest and manageable levels indeed."

Concerned about the 40 percent attrition rate of freshmen at UMass, Koffler said he hopes to institute changes here to provide a more "personalized education," encouraging more students to stay and graduate.

The chancellor also spoke of his continuing concern about the library, which was closed last August because of the danger of falling brick panels and reopened in November for limited use. Koffler said arrangements are being made to correct the problems, and that $2.5 million has been acquired to cover the costs of repairs as well as for improvements in the elevator system.

The money came this summer from a capital appropriation from the state cigarette tax, said Art Clifford, head of the UMass news bureau.

Koffler began his term as chancellor here last August after having been provost at the University of Minnesota, and was immediately confronted with having to make the decision to close the library. "When I came to Amherst, I believed in the comfortable old myth that a campus chancellor is entitled to a honeymoon period for the first year," Koffler said. "If this was a honeymoon, then I can only marvel at the deterioration of modern academic marriage!"

Spielberg's new film not up to par; Used Cars considered second rate

By ROBERT B. CARGILL
Collegian Staff

Former Disney idol Kurt Russell stars as a used car salesman with an eye on politics in Columbia Pictures' Used Cars.

This film is the epitome of everything the term "used car salesman" implies.

For starters, Used Cars is terribly cliche and mercilessly banal. From the casting of Kurt Russell as the fast-talking, contemptuous Ruddy Russo, a car-dealer with absolutely no conscience, to the helplessly immature manner in which women are downgraded and used solely as objects, this flick lacks not only character, but imaginitive direction as well.

Russell is perfect as a used car salesman, though, displaying a charming superficiality bordering on inanity and downright nonsense. As Ruddy Russo, his sales techniques know no bounds and he even goes as far as to pre-empt the President's nationally televised speech in order to insert one of his totally crass "New Deal Used Cars" commercials. Silly material indeed, especially when the main focus of this particular scene is the stripping off of Penthouse Magazine's Cheryl Rixon's nightgown.

Used Cars takes no chances. It is second-rate filmic foolishness, full of amateur car chases and stunts, reminiscent of the Walt Disney satires Kurt Russell so often appears in.

Like the cars Russell as Russo is trying to sell, Used Cars is junk.

Trust me.

Used Cars is currently playing at Hampshire Four Cinemas.

ABC tops television ratings

NEW YORK (AP) — For the first time since late in February, NBC broadcast the week's most-watched program—the Miss America Pageant—but climbed no higher than second place in the networks' three-way ratings race, figures from the A.C. Nielsen Co. showed.

In sharp contrast to the Miss America show, another NBC weekend special, the annual Emmy Awards broadcast, boycotted by many of the striking Hollywood actors, was only moderately successful in the ratings—No. 32 of 73 programs shown in the week ending Sept. 7.

The beauty contest, which pulled a rating of 24.9, was one of two NBC programs in the Top 10 for the week, itself a rare accomplishment in recent months.

Nielsen says the rating for the Miss America Pageant means of all the nation's TV-equipped homes, nearly a quarter—24.9 percent—saw at least part of the program.

Miss America, coupled with NBC's other Top 10 show, the concluding installment in a repeat broadcast of the two-part movie "Midway," in 10th place, contributed to a rating for the week of 15.3, second to ABC's 16.4 and ahead of CBS' 13.8.

The networks say that means in an average prime-time minute during the week, 16.4 percent of the homes in the country were tuned to ABC.

It was ABC's third week in a row in the top position.

ABC had five of the 10 highest-rated programs, including "Three's Company" in second place and "Taxi" third. CBS' most-watched show of the week was "Dallas," in fourt place.

As has been the case since mid-April, a large proportion of the programs broadcast in prime-time were repeats.

ABC' first prime-time college football game of the season, between Texas and Arkansas, was N. 30 in the ratings, while CBS' weekend coverage of the U.S. Open tennis tournament attracted fewer viewers, and was No. 48 for the Saturday night semifinals and No. 42 for Sunday night's semifinals.

the projected $6 million that will be needed to supplement projected government funds. Several Doonesbury cartoons were auctioned off, netting almost one hundred dollars, the most popular of which was one that quoted Ronald Reagan claiming that trees were the largest contributors to pollution.

At the end of his talk, Hatch said that the UMass water shortage was only symptomatic of a larger water problem that he claims will affect the entire state. "The fact is, in 10 years, there will be big water problems."

Engineering fellowships for minorities open

Ninety fellowships will be awarded to minority students for 1981 by the National Consortium for Graduate Degrees for Minorities in Engineering, Inc. (GEM). The Consortium, organized in 1976, is a joint venture of thirty engineering colleges and thirty engineering employers that have joined together to provide opportunities for minority students to pursue master's degrees in engineering.

Candidates for participation in this program are selected from the following American citizens who are underrepresented in engineering: American Indians, Black Americans, Mexican Americans, and Puerto Ricans. The minimum academic requirement for the student at the time of application is enrollment in the junior or senior year of undergraduate study in one of the engineering disciplines. Those recently graduated are also encouraged to apply. An applicant's record must indicate the ability to pursue graduate studies in engineering.

Each fellowhip pays tuition and fees plus a stipend of $4,000 for the academic year and provides summer engineering employment at an employer member's laboratory.

The deadline for application material for consideration for summer, 1981 is December 1, 1980. For further information and application materials contact:
Howard G. Adams, Executive, Director, GEM, P.O. Box 537, Notre Dame, IN 46556.

RSO groups to hold workshops

The Student Activities Business Office in conjunction with the SGA Treasurer's Office will be conducting workshops for all RSO Group Treasurers and officers who have been given signature power. . .entrusted with organizational funds. These work shops MUST be attended prior to your being able to initiate any financial documents. Workshops will be held as follows:

Sports info director thrilled with new job

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Howard Davis, newly appointed UMass Sports Information Director, has completed his first full month here as SID and is quite happy with the way things are going with the athletic department.

"I've been thrilled with the cooperation I have gotten here. I am sure it is the honeymoon of the marriage but I hope the honeymoon lasts," he said.

Davis replaced Richard Page who retired after 22 years as sports information director. Davis came to UMass in July after serving as Director of Sports Information at Springfield College for 12 years.

"Springfield is Division 11 athletics. It took me two days to learn that there is much more of an inthrust in the state wide media in Division 1. More requests are made of me here at UMass than me making requests of the media at Springfield," he said.

He is a past president of the New England and Eastern College Athletic Conference Sports Information Director's Associations and has served on the Board of Directors of the College Sports Information Directors of America and was recently elected their second vice-president.

Davis is a 1966 graduate of UMass who started out majoring in pre-dent and ended up an English major. He was a varsity football player for one day under Vic Fusia.

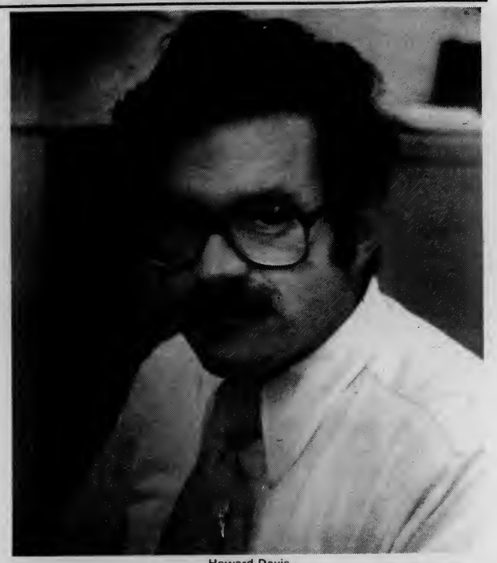
"I had never played before so when they asked what position I said linebacker. I got beat up so badly that I slept for a day and a half. That was my football career," he said.

After college, Davis was sports editor for the Attleboro Sun for six months before taking a job as sports information director at Kenyon College in Ohio.

While at Springfield College he received over 30 citations of excellence for his publications and in 1978 he authored and published "Basic Concepts of Sports Information," the first textbook manual ever written about the sports information profession.

Davis enjoys tennis, racquetball and gardening. He lives with his wife and two children in East Longmeadow but plans to relocate before winter hits.

"I have had a great four weeks," he said. "I'm much happier than I thought I'd be."



Howard Davis

Project DEEP, in charge of the UMass Scuba Program for the past 2 years, is once again offering a variety of diving courses this semester. Basic Certification, Sport Diving, Advanced Diving, and Assistant Instructor courses are being offered, all for two credits each through General Physical Education. Intersession courses, which require certification as a basic diver, will be offered in the Florida Keys and in Cozumel, Mexico.

If you are interested in learning how to dive, come ready to swim to one of the beginning courses starting this week (Sept. 8-11) at 7 p.m. in Curry Hicks Pool.

Blazers and beer

Kevin Cullen

It was Winston Churchill, pompous and English as he was, who once said only the British know how to enjoy themselves.

Or, was it Russ Kidd?

Hey, I'll tell you," Kidd, head coach of the UMass soccer team said yesterday, "I never saw a bunch of guys enjoy themselves as much as these guys."

These guys are the Bristol University soccer team, who brought their English football to Boyden field the other day and promptly beat the Minutemen 1-0.

When the Bristol boys arrived on Saturday, however, the last thing they looked like was a good soccer team.

"They were tired," Kidd said. "The flight over, the night before in Boston. Well, they just didn't look impressive."

The Brits immediately gave away what they had done the night before in Boston.

"I went up to see them (Bristol) practice on Saturday, and they looked beat," Kidd said. "I brought up some buckets of water and they went through them left and right. They were bending over the buckets, breathing hard. They must have had a tough night."

When game time came around Monday, the hangovers had melted away and Bristol, after losing to Amherst College on Sunday, was able to use their controlled style of play to defeat--and frustrate--UMass.

After the game, Bristol put on their team blazers and it was off to the Amherst College Alumni House for a reception.

Blazers, you ask?

In Bristol, blazers aren't preppie. Blazers are British.

"They had a helluva time at the reception," Kidd said. "They were drinking beer out of the keg we got, and singing songs. Our players and cheerleaders were singing along with them. It was great to share in their tradition."

The British got their biggest thrill when they saw the films of the game Kidd brought along to the reception.

"They had never seen themselves on film before," Kidd said. "They thought it was fantastic."

Bristol, one of the st four sides in British college soccer, left for Williams today. But not before showing they aren't as classy as you'd think.

"After the beer was gone at the reception, the Bristol team went out hunting Smithies," Kidd said with a laugh. "In fact, their striker was there with one."

Smithies?

Hey, we all make mistakes. You see, Winston, not even

Hall of famer Terry thinks Brett will break

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) —Kansas City slugger George Brett, pursuing the elusive .400 batting average, needs "all kinds of luck" and a cool head to crack the mark, says the last National League player to top the magic number.

Bill Terry, elected to baseball's Hall of Fame in 1954, closed the 1930 season with the old New York Giants at .401, a mark National League batters have been trying to match in the past five decades.

Now working at an automotive agency in Jacksonville, Terry keeps a close watch on baseball developments, including Brett's quest to break the .400 barrier.

"I think Brett has a good chance," Terry told The Jacksonville Journal. "He's a big, strong boy and he hustles and runs everything out. At least every time I've seen him he looks like he's giving everything he's got. But to hit .400 anytime, you've got to have all kinds of good luck."

Brett, the Royals' third baseman, missed his second game in a row Monday night at Anaheim, Calif., as the California Angels beat Kansas City 7-4. Brett injured his right hand swinging Saturday when his average dropped to .396.

"It's a day-to-day thing," Brett said. "I don't think the layoff will affect my chances of hitting .400 either way."

Several American League players have topped .400, including Harry Heilmann, .403; Ted Williams, .406; and George Sisler, .420. Brett could be the first AL player in nearly 40 years to break the rare barrier.

Rogers Hornsby hit .424 in 1924 and .403 the following year for the St. Louis Cardinals. Terry was the only other National Leaguer to accomplish the feat. And he barely finished on the plus side of .400.

"It was close," Terry laughed as he recalled the close of the 1930 season.

"I started the last week hitting .410 and all of a sudden I couldn't buy a hit. Everything I'd hit all season seemed to have eyes on it and get through gaps, over heads or into areas where nobody was close. But all of a sudden I was hitting balls right at fielders."

Trustees discuss funds, unions

Student funds may be used to pay for audit

By STEPHEN MORAN
Collegian Staff

WORCESTER – Administration officials have earmarked about $16,000 of student money to pay for next year's audit of the Student Activities Trust Fund, it was learned at the University Trustees Audit Committee meeting yesterday.

Richard LaVoice, Student Government Association co-president and student trustee criticized Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson for pledging the money to pay for the audit "without any attempt to discuss the matter with student representatives."

"It is not Madson's perogative to promise out student money to anyone without SGA approval," LaVoice said.

During the course of the Audit Committee meeting, LaVoice brought up the "problem of Dennis Madson," threatening to take SGA funds if they did not pay the bill for last year's audit expenses. LaVoice said that in July, a memo was sent from Madson's office to SGA treasurer Al Wallace threatening that if the SGA did not pay the bill within a specified period of time (one week), then he would have the money taken.

To this, Trustee Jim Crane shook his head and said: "He can't do that."

"That's what I said," said LaVoice. "If he did take it, we would have taken him to the Budget and Finance committee or possibly to court."

Crane replied, "I hope you would take it to us first, and not the courts," adding, "it's cheaper; we don't charge legal fees."

Revelations of the controversial meeting came out in further discussions. It was reported that Marie McDemot met with Madson when she asked whether the Student Activities Trust Fund would have the necessary $16,000 to fund the proposed cost of the audit for 1980. At this meeting, Madson was reported to have claimed that the money would be available from the Student Activities Trust Fund.

LaVoice was visibly annoyed by this revelation. He later said that the $16,000 figure was far below what SGA officials had budgeted for.

SGA Treasurer Wallace said "the audit each year has been a sore spot. I suggested we get a new firm, and one of the reasons was to prevent an increase of the cost" of the audit.

Wallace said he had hoped to put out a separate bid for a single company to audit the SATF.

"We could have had one firm at $8,000 and they would have done an excellent job," he said. "The students will pay more this year than last year when they got private contracts.

But, the money seems less at issue to LaVoice than the need to define whose right it is to control student funds.

"The issue is not whether we have the money to pay for it, but whether he has the authority to virtually spend our money without our permission," he said.

UMass choice of union lawyers questioned

By STEPHEN MORAN
Collegian Staff

WORCESTER – Richard LaVoice, Student Government Association co-president, and Student Trustee expressed concern over the University of Massachusetts at Amherst using the negotiating services of Skoller, Abbott, and Hayes in the current season of contract negotiations here on campus. His remarks were made yesterday before a meeting of the UMass Board of Trustees.

Stating that many students hold the notion that Skoller, Abbott, and Hayes is a "union busting" firm, LaVoice said he was "concerned that the University is employing the firm if this is an accurate characterization."

Hedy Veith, Director of Labor Relations for the entire University system, said this characterization was inaccurate.

"We have been represented by this firm for the last ten years. We think they are fine attorneys," she said, adding that it is wrong to assume that the administration receives its negotiating strategy from the firm.

"The firm only carries out our directives," she said.

In other matters, the board unanimously voted to accept the Audit Committee's recommendation to appoint a consortium of three accounting firms to audit campus trust funds for fiscal year 1981. The consortium consists of Peat, Marwick and Mitchell and two minority firms.

Trustee Daniel Dennis, chairman of the auditing committee, said he hoped the board's action would "send a signal to the community" that it is possible for large accounting firms such as Peat, Marwick and Mitchell to join in a consortium that includes minority firms. He said this was the first time such a consortium had been formed at UMass.

Later, he said, "the board has a strong policy on affirmative action," but that it had been "difficult to implement sometimes." He challenged other "minority firms to form consortiums to enter bids."

UMass President David C. Knapp in his opening remarks praised the Amherst administration for its effective handling of the recent water crisis and directed Chancellor Henry Koffler to explain the events leading up to the crisis and his assessment of the situation's future. Koffler said that a new well scheduled to open this week will produce nearly 50 percent more water for the campus.

President Knapp also announced the resignation of Sam D'Amico, the administration's chief negotiator for ongoing faculty contract talks. He said that D'Amico asked to be relieved of his duties because of the unexpectedly long duration of the talks. Knapp reported that D'Amico had complained that he was experiencing a conflict of scheduling because of the late date that Faculty Union proposals had been presented. Knapp then announced the appointment of Sue Lenox as chief University negotiator in the talks.

Union still upset

By GAYLE YOUNG
Collegian Staff

The university Staff Association will resume contract negotiations tommorrow and picketing Monday, spokeswoman Peggy Schwartz said yesterday after a closed association meeting in the Campus Center.

Schwartz refused to say what was discussed during the hour long meeting besides the picket scheduled Monday, but said union members have not ruled out the possibility of a strike.

Members staged an "informational picket" during their lunch hour last Monday to solicit campus-wide interest in their contract negotiations, which began in mid-May. Last years' contract for the 1,260 clerical and technical workers, represented by the union, ran out June 30 but will remain in effect until a new contract is signed, Schwartz said.

Schwartz said the union is holding out for the abolishment of parking fees and of a dual pay system which has around 500 workers hired after June 30 paid less than workers hired previously. The union also wants to strengthen contract clauses on seniority and sexual harrassment, Schwartz said. "Negotiations just aren't progressing quickly enough," she said.

John DeNyse, director of personnel, could not be reached for comment on the proposed job action or negotiations, which are being carried out for the University by a Springfield law firm.

According to Daniel M. Melley, director of public affairs, the USA contract is one of many currently in negatiation with University management.

"Almost every worker on this campus has a contract up for negatiation," he said. "It is taking up an incredible amount of time. Negotiations are going on continuosly."

Schwartz said she hopes pickets and leafleting will win student support for the USA contract.

"It's a good way students could show appreciation for the support staff," she said. "We help students schedule courses and form their career plans. We help students in the library and technicians set up labs for science courses."

The USA, affiliated with the Massachusetts Teachers Association, has been operating on this campus since 1977.

Officials talk to 15 students on water crisis

By CHUCK KILFOYE
Collegian Correspondent

Town officials and University administrators told a sparsely attended informational forum on last week's water crisis that reports due out next week will pinpoint the cause and that a repetition of the shortage is unlikely.

"Unless something far beyond anyone's wildest imagination happens, this campus will be able to function as is presently," said Vice-Chancellor for Administration and Finance George Beatty.

In addition to Beatty, Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson, Amherst Town Manager Don Jacobs and Selectwoman Francesca Maltese also spoke to the 15 students in attendance. Beatty said the town will be opening an additional well at Lawrence Swamp which will provide 1.6 million gallons of water a day by next week.

"It was a supply problem, we were dealing with an unusual situation, back in '78 there was a similar crisis. It was clear to us that we were facing a dangerous situation. The town was caught in a Catch-22 situation; we couldn't hook up to the Hadley supply until there was an actual physical emergency in the town of Amherst," Jacobs said.

Francesca Maltese said people didn't believe there was a shortage, it took something like this "to prove it."

"Last Tuesday we signed a water ban into effect, not realizing that by then we had already lost pressure," she said.

When confronted by student Howard Goldman as to why the University did not alert students to conserve water, Madson said, "At the time, to my knowledge, the situation did not warrant student conservation."

The town had requested the University, as early as August 7, to begin conservation efforts, such as shutting off air conditioners, stopping irrigation and lawn watering and also to discontinue washing cars, trucks and buses. Beatty said "most air conditioning was turned down."

"The water shortage will be the subject of an upcoming series of meetings between the town manager and myself," Beatty said. "At present we are trying to correct the problem rather than point a finger."

The subject of reimbursing students who were forced out of the dormitories was brought up by Vice-Chancellor Beatty who stated, "At a 4 p.m. meeting on the Saturday before students returned to campus, Dr. Madson and myself both agreed that a reimbursement of funds to the students was only fair, even though the housing contract does not require us to do so. However, we cannot even begin to assume responsibility for travel expenses incurred by the students."

Recall of legislature delayed

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — New strikes erupted in several cities yesterday as workers sought solutions to local grievances in the aftermath of Poland's big labor crisis. Workers, teachers and technocrats — among others — also began organizing independent trade unions.

Poland's First Deputy Premier Mieczyslaw Jagielski and a delegation of Polish economic officials flew to Moscow for talks on "a number of important questions related to Soviet-Polish economic relations," the Soviet news agency Tass said.

Although the government hoped its agreement to allow independent trade unions would resolve the three-week labor rebellion sparked by meat price hikes, many workers struck for local demands including removal of some managers and improved working conditions.

Springfield may sue teachers

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — A Superior Court judge has cleared the way for the City of Springfield to sue the Massachusetts Teachers Association as well as its local affiliate for damages resulting from a 14-day strike by the city's public school teachers last spring.

Mayor Theodore Dimauro called Judge John Murphy's ruling "significant," because the city maintained from the inception of the walkout that it was being orchestrated by the MTA.

City Solicitor Frank Antonucci said the ruling will allow the city to attack the assets of the MTA, which has a treasury many times larger than that of the Springfield Education Association and is in a better position to pay damages.

Pope John Paul II talks with an unidentified American Indian during yesterday's weekly general audience in St. Peter's square.

Families of injured workers may sue

BOSTON (AP) — Employers face a possible rash of suits for damages from the families of employees injured on the job, according to a state Supreme Court ruling that the Workmen's Compensation Act does not prohibit such action.

The court delivered the ruling Tuesday in the case of the family of a 28-year Hopedale carpenter seeking $3 million in damages because of a 1979 accident making him a quadriplegic.

The court decided in a 4-3 decision the Workmen's Compensation Act does not bar automatically the family of an injured worker from suing the worker's employer.

Libya, Syria, to become one

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — Syria and Libya proclaimed a merger of the two Arab countries yesterday and vowed to confront Israel, "liberate Palestine" and oppose American-sponsored Mideast peace moves.

President Hafez Assad and Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy declared the merger in a joint communique broadcast by Damascus and Tripoli radios at the end of two days of talks in Tripoli.

The communique pledged "total economic, political and military" merger aimed at uniting Syria's nine million people with Libya's three million in an anti-Israeli front dedicated to "Arab revolution."

But given the failure of previous Arab unity attempts and the fact that Libya and Syria are 800 miles apart, there was skepticism that total merger would be accomplished. The two leaders said they would meet within a month to form a common government.

New cars, satisfaction guaranteed

BOSTON (AP) — Buyers of new General Motors cars in eastern Massachusetts will be able to take their complaints to binding arbitration if they don't get satisfaction through usual channels, a company official announced Wednesday.

The program, in effect in eight areas of the country, will be administered by the Better Business Bureau of Eastern Massachusetts in accordance with the state's Uniform Arbitration Act.

Arbitrators, whose decisions will be binding on both parties, will be unpaid volunteers from the public. There will be no cost to consumers. General Motors will reimburse the Better Business Bureau for all administrative expenses incurred.

Carter's decision to skip debates draws fire from candidate Reagan

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press Writer

President Carter stood firm yesterday, dealing himself out of a nationally televised campaign debate that will draw Ronald Reagan and John Anderson to Baltimore later this month.

While representatives of all three candidates and the sponsoring League of Women Voters tried unsuccessfully to reach a debate compromise, Republican candidate Reagan campaigned in Ohio, where he said Carter's energy policy is a failure.

"The truth is, America has an abundance of energy. But the policies of this administration consistently discourage its discovery and production," he said.

Reagan insisted the United States has enough resources to last until the "fuels of the future" are developed — if only they could be put to use.

Stumping a big industrial state where Carter won a narrow victory in 1976, Reagan also told a predominantly black audience he might set aside a portion of the nation's military budget to establish defense plants in depressed inner city areas.

Meanwhile, three of Reagan's top defense advisers insisted in a news conference on Capitol Hill that the White House handed the Soviet Union an intelligence windfall by disclosing the existence of "Stealth" technology that makes U.S. warplanes invisible to enemy radar.

"We announced that it was not only do-able, but of the highest importance for the United States and that it indeed changed the strategic balance," said retired Air Force Gen. Brent Scowcroft, President Ford's national security adviser.

Carter, campaigning Tuesday in New Jersey, branded as "absolutely irresponsible and false" an earlier charge by Reagan that the administration leaked information about the technology for political purposes.

The president spent his day at the White House, dispatching lawyer Tim Smith to meet with representatives of Anderson, Reagan and League of Women Voters officials for a debate on the debates that lasted more than two hours.

Once there, Smith said Carter wouldn't budge from his insistence on meeting Reagan in a one-on-one matchup before he joins in a three-way debate. Ruth Hinerfeld, president of the League of Women Voters, said the president's aide turned down two compromise offers, including one calling for a series of two-man, round-robin debates with the participants to be selected by lot.

"They said go ahead and hold it without us," she said of the president's men.

She said the league would — on Sept. 21 in Baltimore — and representatives of Reagan and Anderson said they would, too.

President Carter, who has refused to participate in debates which would include Republican candidate Ronald Reagan and Independent John Anderson, speaks at the White House after receiving the endorsement of various environmental groups.

Local group seeks ways to conserve water

By J. ADAM BAILEY
Collegian Staff

The water shortage, which forced the evacuation of about 11,000 UMass students last Thursday was preventable, said Yaffa Grossman, an employee of the Hitchcock Center For The Environment in Amherst.

The center, which deals with conservation and environmental issues in Amherst, is conducting the "first town-wide, state-funded water conservation project," in Massachusetts, Grossman said.

Grossman said the emergency shouldn't have happened, because the town has had experience with this type of problem before, but has done nothing about it.

"When people have looked at the water supply issue in the past, they have treated it like they can always go out and find more," Grossman said.

The center is working with the town to aid it in finding methods of reducing water usage by 25 percent. The center is mailing handbills with instructions from Town Manager A. Louis Hayward on what people can and cannot use water for.

"It's better to live with what you have than to waste it," Grossman said.

The center has been working on the water problem since August.

"The cause of the shortage was largely the weather," Grossman said. The rain that has fallen is just 44 percent of what the average rainfall should be, she added.

The center was started in the fall of 1979 with grants from the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs and has four goals: educating the public in water conservation, a home water use audit, educating UMass students in water conservation and developing a conservation curriculum in the Amherst public schools, Grossman said.

"Becoming aware of how a system works usually makes a person respect it more," Grossman said. "The state has made the first important step and that's good."

Alaskan trip happy event

By CHUCK KILFOYE
Collegian Correspondent

Members of the University of Massachusetts Outing Club fulfilled a dream this summer when 13 members of the club participated on a trip through the Alaskan wilderness.

The month-long trip brought the group across thousands of miles and ended with the club's arrival at the UMass campus on July 13.

"We all met in Toronto on June 13, from there we took an Amtrack to a town called Prince Rupert in British Columbia; the ride lasted four days and was almost 3000 miles long," said trip organizer Al Howcroft.

This proved to be only the beginning for the group. From Prince Rupert they boarded the Alaska Ferry which sailed them up along the coast to Juneau, Alaska's capital city.

"Once we were in Juneau, we chartered two seaplanes which flew up into Glacier Bay, where we spent three days camping and paddling around in kayaks. Then we headed back to Juneau for a few days to recuperate," said Howcroft.

After the rest stop in Juneau the club was ferried to Scagway, "a small outback town in Alaska," Howcroft said. "Then we backpacked 35 miles along the Chilkoot Trail, which is the same trail many of the miners used during the Klondike gold rush in 1898. Because of it's elevation there was snow all around us despite 70 degree temperatures."

They arrived in White Pass, a small railway station, where they rendezvoused with a train which took the group 100 miles north to the Yukon Territory.

"We arrived in White Horse, the only city in the Yukon, then we canoed 200 miles up the Yukon River to Alaska to end the trip. We accomplished all our objectives," Howcroft said.

"The weather was great, we ... only twice in the entire 31 days," he ad...

Group member Debbie Black said the original cost for the trip was estimated at $900 but it turned out to be only $720.

Police seek exhibitionist

UMass police are looking for a blonde curly haired male about 5'7" and weighing approximately 140 pounds who reportedly exposed himself in front of a woman Tuesday in the sixth floor hallway of Coolidge tower.

Amherst police are investigating a similar complaint involving a stocky black man at Village Park on East Pleasant St. He was figured to be 25 to 30 years old and about 170 pounds.

An unidentified man was rushed to the UMass infirmary after taking ill while on board a South Amherst PVTA bus yesterday at 2:37 p.m. UMass police responded to an emergency call from the bus and removed the man at the Hasbrouk Laboratory stop.

A car operated by Brian Dixon, 35, of Gilford, Conn. was hit from the rear early Tuesday afternoon while making a right turn into the Carriage Shop parking lot on East Pleasant St. The car which slammed into Dixon's, operated by Bruce S. Conover, 25, of Bay Road, Hadley, was in turn struck from behind by a third car driven by Niel W. Merchant, 38, of East State St., Granby. All three cars sustained minor damage and no citations were issued.

A car driven by Kevin O'Leary, 28, of Merrimack, N.H., sustained considerable damage to it's left front and side Tuesday after being struck by a car operated by Karen A. Bergston of Lake Drive, Shutesbury. O'Leary was turning left on East Meadow St., just as the second vehicle was attempting to pass. Police said no citations were issued.

Police are also investigating the theft of $80.00 in change from pay laundry machines at Riverglade Apartments Tuesday evening. Police said the thief had to have had a key to the machines. An investigation is continuing.

Mark S. Spies, 25, of Lord Jeffrey Inn and Sandra M. Dacey, 22, of River Road, Northampton were arrested separately on charges of defaulting on motor vehicle related fines.

Police also investigated the theft of over 100 blank checks from a car parked on Lincoln Ave., a shattered car window on Amity St. and a vandalized door at a home on Overlook Drive.

Friend in need gone

Last night was the end of Joan Poole's 15 year stint as confidante, medical advisor and emergency godmother to University of Massachusetts students.

Beginning tonight students will hear a tape recording instead of her voice if they dial operator between 11p.m. and 7a.m. Poole will now answer the University switchboard during the day.

"I loved working with the kids at night," she said.

"The kids are lonesome sometimes, so they call me up. As long as they use decent language, I talk to them. Now, they'll get a recording telling them different numbers to call," she said.

She said many people only dial operator in an emergency, and she often calls for ambulances to assist students. She has helped students who have been raped, injured, ill or depressed during the late night hours.

"One time I helped find a girl whose sister was sick. We found her, brought her here and I helped get her a flight out. Then she only had $7 and I lent her some money," she said.

One of her most frequent tasks over the years has been locating students for their parents during an emergency.

"We work closely with the police. I think they'll miss having us here," she added. "I don't think they should be doing this."

How many voices answer the phone after 11p.m.? "Just one. You're talking to her," she said.

Homecoming plans changed

By RICHARD NAGLE
Collegian Staff

Greek Area activities Chairwoman Stacey Bacon and Noreen Kelleher yesterday confirmed a new idea for the homecoming weekend.

The traditional Friday night parade has been rescheduled for Saturday morning, Oct. 11 at 11 a.m. starting at the Old Chapel from UMass.

George Parks, director of the University Marching Band, said h... students will have a tough schedule for the ...ekend but are willing to try the new time

At the Wednesday morning downtown council meeting, the idea was greeted with enthusiasm as members discussed ways to get more of the community involved.

It is hoped the Saturday morning time will draw residents, alumni, and publicity for the parade.

All campus and community organizations are invited to march in the parade and to watch for details as the weekend approaches

The theme for this year's parade will be television advertisements and there is a bonfire and Multi-bands concert scheduled for the Fine Arts Center on Friday night.

What makes Tech Hifi the best place to buy stereo?

Appliance stores and department stores are not the best places to buy quality stereo. You'll do much better at a stereo store.

The problem is, which stereo store? You're about to read why over 2 million music lovers have decided to buy from Tech Hifi.

It's OK to pick our brains. (We know our stereo).

The salespeople at Tech Hifi know what they're talking about. They work at Tech because they love stereo, not because they love selling.

Our people keep up with all the latest equipment, and can tell you the differences among the leading brands.

You get to play at Tech Hifi, not just look.

Some stereo stores have signs all over that tell you "Don't Touch The Merchandise"

At Tech Hifi our signs say "Come Play." We encourage you to spin knobs, push buttons, toss switches, and try out any of the components in our soundroom.

If you take enough time to play in a Tech Hifi soundroom, you'll get a good idea of which equipment sounds best in your price range.

The buying power of the 65 Tech Hifi stores.

The reason why no store has better prices than Tech Hifi is no dealer buys quality components in such a huge volume as the 65 Tech Hifi stores.

You'll find our prices are as good as anybody's, and often better on some brands.

You might expect to pay extra at Tech for all the extra things we offer. But you won't.

At Tech Hifi we back what you buy.

When you make any big investment like quality hifi, make sure you're getting sound guarantees.

Tech Hifi gives you guarantees most stores don't. And we'll give them to you in writing, right on your sales slip.

Our guarantees include a 7-day moneyback guarantee (no questions asked), 30-day price guarantee, 60-day defective exchange, 3-month full-credit swap (for any reason), and a 1-year loudspeaker trial.

Our guarantees are backed by the Tech Hifi Service Centers. If the equipment you buy from us ever needs service, we have trained professionals who will make things right. Fast.

Our back-to-school sale

This is a good time to buy at Tech Hifi, because we're having our annual back-to-school sale.

You'll find complete systems on sale right now for as little as $189, and lots of name-brand turntables, receivers, loudspeakers, and cassette decks are on sale as individual components.

Come in this week and listen to what your money can buy at Tech Hifi.

The best place to buy stereo.

This $189 system delivers good sound at a low price. The receiver is a TDC 1500 with T-Lock tuning that eliminates FM drift. The loudspeakers are compact, wide-range Studio Design 16's and the turntable is a multiple-play Collaro 1251 with a Philips cartridge.

Former UMass employee sues company for asbestos exposure

By LARRY COX
Collegian Correspondent

A former University of Massachusetts physical plant employee and his wife have each filed a $1 million law suit against the Johns-Manville Corp. of Delaware charging the company's asbestos had given him lung cancer.

Edwin Clark of Northampton is seeking $1 million from the company for negligence and breach of warranty. His wife, Sophie, is also asking for $1 million for mental distress and loss of companionship.

The suit was filed by Atty. John Callahan in Hampshire Superior Court Tuesday, but Callahan said yesterday that the case would probably not be brought to trial for at least another year and a half. He noted there are a great number of cases of this type, including suits brought by the employees of Monsanto in Springfield.

Asbestos is a common insulating material and, according to a university health official, an asbestos material is wrapped around the steam pipes at the heating plant, from which Clark retired as a foreman five years ago. The suit claims that Clark's disease was caused by habitual inhalation of asbestos particles and as a direct result of his handling of asbestos and asbestos products.

According to Donald Robinson, head of environmental safety at UMass, a series of tests were run last year by school and state health officials to determine if the asbestos levels in any campus buildings exceeded the state safety standards. Using state procedures and equipment, asbestos was found to be widespread but of no danger. Testing was not done, however, in either the physical or heating plants, where there are known quantities of asbestos being used. Also, officials made visual inspections of the fireproofing materials in all buildings, finding neither leaks nor any areas with measureable amounts of asbestos.

In February, 1979, 62 UMass employees working in the heating and power plants were to be given health examinations as part of the expansion of the UMass Occupational Health Plan. The program was stalled due to lack of funds, however, and the results of those tests are not available. One employee, though, was told by a private physician that his sinus infection was caused by his daily asbestos exposure.

Democratic conference succeeds in delaying recall of legislature

BOSTON (AP) — With Lt. Gov. Thomas P. O'Neill 3rd presiding, the all-Democratic Exective Council deferred action yesterday on Gov. Edward J. King's bid to recall the Legislature Sept. 18.

The delay was a victory, perhaps temporary, for legislators who do not want to vote on Proposition 2½ or other controversial items on the unfinished constitutional convention agenda, including abolition of the Executive Council.

The postponement was instigated by Councillor Herbert L. Connolly, Newton, who said there should be a public hearing next Wednesday on recall. He would not guarantee the question would ever reach a vote.

King concluded that the constitution required recall to resume discussion of pending constitutional amendments. He needs support from a majority of the council.

Neil Lynch, his legal counsel, said after the week's postponement that he remained confident that the council would go along with the governor's wishes. Other council sources were more hesitant. There was speculation that O'Neill — although feuding openly with King — may have the decisive vote.

Democratic leaders in the House and Senate, despite pleas from supporters of "2½" which is aimed at limiting property taxes to 2.5 percent of valuations, refused to allow the issue to get to a vote during the drive for adjournment in early July.

This is an initiative petition, the result of a massive signature campaign, and needs 50 votes — 25 percent — from this Legislature to qualify for a similar vote in the next Legislature and, if successful, a ratification vote on the 1982 ballot.

Editorial/Opinion

Cuba's 'Popular Power' insures participation

Editor's note: This is the last of a four part series of commentaries about Cuba based on the experiences of its writer, a UMass student, who visited there this summer.

The Cuban people are keenly aware and extremely proud of their revolutionary past. Everywhere I went in Cuba there were portraits, busts, photographs, or murals of revolutionary leaders both Cuban and from the world over. (There is a school in Cuba named "The Martyrs of Kent (State)." The glorification of revolutionary leader and the awareness of the struggles from which they came makes Cubans very internationally minded while retaining a strong national pride.

This awareness of the struggles of other people (most of whose situation is similar to that of pre-revolutionary Cuba) fosters an identification with them which precipitates a sense of selflessness and a commitment to help. A good example of this occurred recently when the Cuban government asked for 1,200 volunteers to aid Nicaragua in their literacy campaign. They recieved 29,000 responses. At a concert one evening I met a man who had just returned from Angola. He had volunteered for two years service working as an electrician. What struck me most was the fact that he was not a young idealistic college student but a middle aged man who would leave a steady job and family to help rebuild a country to whose people he felt a real affinity.

A high school student I met explained his and his people's willingness to sacrifice in order to help rebuild and maintain the revolution in other countries because it would, "give to them what Fidel has given to us." And for a people who, before the revolution, did not even own most of their country, let alone benifit from its puppet government, the revolution has given them everything.

A woman I spoke with in a planned housing community told me that although she was unemployed, she was in no danger of being evicted from her apartment for lack of rent bacuse as long as she was unemployed she was not requiried to pay rent. (For as long as two years.) She explained that this was because it is the duty of the state to provide full employment. The people also receive free such basics as health care, education and child care.

Our tour bus drivers, explained to a group of us one night the sliding scale method used in Cuba to determine rent, debts etc. One of the drivers has three children, the other eight. The one with eight pays less for rent and the installments on his TV because his pay check is divided by ten as opposed to his partner's which is divided by five. I thought it illustrated very well the axiom: "From each according to their ability; to each according to their needs."

One key force in Cuba which gives the people a sense of participation and direction are the mass organizations: The Committee for the Defense of the Revolution (CDR) and Poder Popular (Popular Power). The CDRs, are block level organizations in which issues of a local concern can be disseminated and discussed. Anything from social functions on national holidays, to repairing the local school, to applying peer pressure on a man who beats his wife are dealt with in the CDRs. They are a tool used to develop and maintain a sense of community.

The Poder Populars, however, are the local governmental bodies. In Havana, for instance, the city is divided into districts, and each distrcit elects its representatives to the city council. In order to insure that these representatives are kept responsive to the desires of their constituency they can be recalled at any time, and must return to their districts every three months and justify to their electorate why they should be sent back for another three months by detailing the work they have done and plans for the future. These quarterly meetings also allow the people to pass on to their representative complaints, problems, and new ideas for him to take back.

What this all adds up to is a system that offers the incentive to participate because the rewards of participation go to the majority. And this in turn gives the sense of collective strength and unity that was reflected in the words of a young man I met in Havana when I asked him about the effect of the blockade on Cuba after all these years. He said, "Cuba will survive, we can survive anything."

Right-to-Lifers mirror 'new right'

"A federal judge yesterday upheld the constitutionality of a new state law requiring unmarried minors to obtain parental or judical consent before seeking an abortion" (Boston Globe, 9/3/80).

Some people think that abortion is murder. Right-to-Lifers believe that women with unwanted pregnancies must bear children that they had not intended to conceive, regardless of the circumstances.

Other people don't agree. They say that human life does not begin at the moment of conception and that a woman's reproductive freedom is essential to her full participation in society. They argue that the decision whether or not to have an abortion is up to the individual, not the church or the state.

The Supreme Court agreed with the latter sentiment in 1973. Abortion became a woman's constitutional right. But not for long. The Right-to-Lifers vowed to fight the ruling and they have. They've succeeded in legislatively hacking away at a constitutional right and turning it into an economic privilege with moral strings attached.

In 1977 the Supreme Court ruled that states do not have to provide Medicaid funding for abortions. Soon after, the Hyde Amendment was passed by congress cutting off federal HEW funding for voluntary abortions. More recently, this past June, the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of the Hyde Amendment. These developments were in no small way due to the efforts of the Right-to-Life movement.

Cutting off Medicaid funding for abortions makes them almost as inaccessible as when they were illegal—if you can pay for one you can get one. If not, you have two choices: have a child or have a cut-rate, back-alley abortion. If you are totally indigent, you can always do it yourself.

Jimmy Carter supports this arrangement; his comment on Hyde was "Life is unfair."

But the Right-to-Lifers have bigger plans. They want to pass "The Human Life Amendment" which would outlaw abortion completely, constitutionally defining it as murder. Nineteen states have called for a convention to add this to the constitution; fifteen more are needed. "The Human Life Amendment" is also being pushed through congress. If passed, a woman who had or gave herself an abortion could be charged with murder. "The Human Life Amendment" was declared a top priority at the National Right-to-Life convention this past summer.

In the meantime, the Right-to-Lifers have other tactics to keep women from having abortions, that is, what they define as "killing babies." One of them is informed consent laws like the one upheld by the Massachusetts Superior Court, Sept. 2 in Massachusetts.

The Massachusetts law has two parts. First, it requires all unmarried women 18 years or under to obtain parental or judicial consent before they can have an abortion. It is unrealistic to expect a frightened and pregnant sixteen year old to get herself before a judge so that he can rule if she is mature enough to decide what to do with her own body.

The second half of the law requires all women seeking abortions to sign a detailed consent form 24 hours before the abortion is performed. The consent form reads, "At eight weeks of development, the embryo is about one inch at length. Main organs are formed and some external, human-like characteristics are recognizable." This law saves the Right-to-Lifers some trouble; it simply institutionalizes their tactics of showing bloody fetuses and pictures of embryoes to women seeking abortions.

Right-to-Lifers do not restrict themselves to electoral politics and legislation. In the past three years, abortion clinics in six cities have been burned or firebombed.

But aren't these people simply sincere humanitarians who want to stop what they consider "the slaughter of the unborn"? One close look at the Right-to-Life movement reveals that there are very few humanitarians or gentle pacifists involved.

They call themselves "pro-life—but issues as life threatening as nuclear weapons, chemical waste and starvation don't seem to concern them too much. It would be fair to assume that not too many of them protested the slaughter in Vietnam. They show nothing but disrespect for the life of the woman with the unwanted pregnancy and the child once it's born.

These people are part of a newly politicized Christian movement that has been successfully courted by and entrenched into what is now known as the "new right." One observer at the last National Right-to-Life convention described them this way: "These people are for traditional marriage, against contraception, against sex education, against divorce and against welfare. They see the women's movement as the destruction of the ultimate and correct authority of the home." These people are motivated by their own brand of victorian morality, not their sympathy for destroyed life. Their leaders include such familiar names as Phyllis Shafley, Anita Bryant, as well as Ronald Reagan and Jimmy Carter.

But like Ronald Reagan and the "New-Right," the Right-to-Life movement can no longer be brushed off as a bunch of fanatics. The Republican party has endorsed the Human Life Amendment; the anti-abortion movement is becoming legitimized.

Welcome to the 1980's. Next they'll be after birth control.

If you feel that a woman's right to a safe and legal abortion is worth defending, the Right-to-Life movement is a force to be contended with right away. ISIS is a local organization doing abortion rights support work; you can get their number from the Everywomen's Center.

Soviet support of Cuba supports non-alignment

To the Editor:

I would like to commend Collegian commentator Joe Gannon for his attempts (in the present four-part series on Cuba) to present to the UMass community his impressions of "a country so shrouded in the myths and misconceptions fostered by American Propaganda" (his words). I think it unfortunate, however, that Mr. Gannon's remarks in the first installment of the series—on the relationship between Cuba and the Soviet Union—serve to perpetuate one of those "myths and misconceptions." In fact, it is one of the most dangerous of those distortions fed to us over the years for it serves as the official justification of the continued U.S. blockade of Cuba. It also serves, when applied to Cuba as well as other countries and political movements around the world, to support the present U.S. attempts to escalate the arms race and past U.S. military interventions, as well as any that may be in the planning stages right now. Furthermore, it is just the "propaganda" that supports Reagan's recent proposal to apply a full blockade to Cuba.

I don't know how Mr. Gannon would respond to the question, why is Cuba a satellite of the Soviet Union? He certainly provides no argument or proof for that assertion in his article. He is surely correct when he points out that the Soviet Union has supported generously the construction of a more just and democratic society in Cuba (although it does not buy all of the exported sugar harvest—but let's not quibble about such facts). How this support is an obstacle to Cuba chartering a non-aligned course is not obvious to me nor to those in the Non-Aligned Movement. Witness that Cuba, in the person of Fidel Castro, is the current head of that movement (contrary to U.S. attempts to disrupt the proceedings of the recent Non-Aligned Movement conference in Cuba).

The arguments and examples could go on. Let it be said only that Mr. Gannon, as all such commentators, should look carefully at those assertions that come all too easily because they have been fostered for so many years in this country. The time is now more critical than ever that we begin to destroy those "myths and misconceptions"—all of them!

New punch-out policy endangers employees

To the Editor:

The new policy requiring security receptionists to punch out on time clocks (located only in certain buildings) proposes an unreasonable risk to the safety of those students who must work until two or three o'clock in the morning. The Housing Security Office has informed us that, beginning in two weeks, security workers will have to walk to a dorm with one of the time clocks after work and punch out. This new procedure contradicts what students are repeatedly told from the time they are freshmen. That is, not to walk on campus alone at night. Considering the level of concern expressed in the past about safety issues, it seems unwise to further endanger those of us who work security.

As most of us are aware, there has been a high incidence of rape, violence, and harassment in the recent past. These occurrences can be avoided if students are cautious about walking around at night. It is unfair that one's job, a security job at that, places them in such a precarious position.

As a woman, I am particularly concerned about this issue. Conditions are dangerous enough without this additional hazard. Specifically, women from all-female dorms are a prime target. The common knowledge that between 1:50 and 2:10 A.M. a number of people will venture out alone, offers a tempting opportunity for any willing aggressor to strike. Despite the fact that there will be other security workers out during this time, each must eventually return to their own dorm. Furthermore, the chances that someone will be going the same way at the same moment are slim.

I would like to suggest that the issue be carefully reviewed, including the risks involved. Perhaps a more practical way of signing off duty can be proposed, such as a phone-in leave. I urge all those concerned to aid in expressing your views to the Housing Security Office.

Drs. find birthing nicer with friends

BOSTON (AP) — Women who have a friendly companion with them during childbirth experience faster, simpler deliveries and are more affectionate toward their newborn babies, a study shows.

The report concludes that a reassuring face during labor calms anxieties and may be an easy way to reduce the number of delivery problems for both the mother and child.

Increasingly in recent years, American women have taken husbands or friends into the delivery room with them, but many mothers still give birth surrounded only by doctors and nurses.

"Certainly a rule is that no mother should ever labor and deliver alone. That's awfully clear," Dr. John Kennel, one of the researchers, said in an interview.

The new report, published in today's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine, showed that when women were accompanied by a companion, they had far fewer complications during childbirth, and their labor lasted only half as long.

In the first 45 minutes after birth, these mothers talked to their babies, smiled at them and stroked them more than women who gave traditional births.

In this study, conducted at the Social Security Hospital in Guatemala City, 20 women were accompanied during childbirth by untrained strangers who rubbed their backs, held their hands, talked to them and simply acted as friends.

The results "are particularly relevant to the care of low income, single or teen-age mothers, who may not receive positive support from their families during labor and delivery and who may have had no formal or strong cultural preparation for childbirth," the researchers wrote.

"An untrained woman provided the friendly support in this study, but similar or greater benefits may be expected when a family member or a friend remains with the mother throughout the labor and delivery," they added.

The doctors speculated that when pregnant women are anxious, they may secrete hormones that disrupt labor and endanger the child.

The study was conducted by doctors from Case Western Reserve University in Cleveland and the Institute of Nutrition of Central America and Panama in Guatemala City.

BU agrees to buy college

LENOX (AP) — Boston University trustees have agreed to purchase the 65-acre Holliston Junior College campus here for $595,000 if all liens can be removed from the property, university officials said yesterday.

The 600-student junior college, which opened in 1973 and closed five years later, was ruled bankrupt in 1979. Further hearings in that bankruptcy case were scheduled for Tuesday in U.S. Bankruptcy Court in Boston. At the time of its original petition, the college listed debts of $1.4 million and assets of $760,000.

Gerald Gross, Boston University vice president for arts and publications, said the university plans to use the campus during the summer to house students attending its Tanglewood Institute at the Berkshire Music Festival. He said no decision has been made on its winter use.

Hospitals seek permission to raise rates for services

BOSTON (AP) — Massachusetts hospital officials told the state yesterday they will be unable to begin essential construction projects unless they can collect more money from some of their private patients.

The proposed hikes in patient revenue vary from hospital to hospital but on a statewide basis average 14.5 percent, or about $378 million in all, according to the Massachusetts Hospital Association. The hikes would apply only to patients who pay their bills directly or those who have commercial health insurance — not to those who have Medicare, Medicaid or Blue Cross coverage.

The State Rate Setting Commission, which oversees hospital finances, is insisting the hikes be trimmed by $22.5 million to comply with the King administration's new ceiling on hospital charges. The ceiling requires hospitals to hold most cost increases to 11¼ percent but allows exceptions to be made for certain "costs beyond control."

William Neilan, associate administrator of Charlton Memorial Hospital in Fall River, urged the commission to treat revenue increases required for bond issues as "costs beyond control." He said his hospital was denied construction bonds by the Health and Educational Facilities Authority because the commission has refused to let it earn an extra $3.5 million a year.

Rate Setting officials suggested that Charlton make a deal with some of its neighboring hospitals in southeastern Massachusetts. The new cap law allows some hospitals in a given region to exceed the ceiling if other institutions in the same area offset that amount by seeking smaller than-permitted budget increases.

However, Neilan, joined by Peter Brown of Falmouth Hospital, replied that such an approach was impractical. They said several other hospitals in the region plan construction projects, and, like Charlton, have to increase their revenues to qualify for bonds. Those institutions include St. Luke's in New Bedford, Brockton Hospital, St. Anne's in Fall River, Falmouth, Jordan in Plymouth, Goddard in Stoughton and Cape Cod in Hyannis.

The Hospital Association urged the commission to give hospitals more time to justify some of their proposed costs before it intervenes and rolls back the increases in a prorated, across-the-board fashion. Under the panel's timetable, hospitals have only until Monday to submit data opposing the $22.5 million reduction.

Peter Hiam, chairman of the Rate Setting panel, sympathized with the hospitals' plight but said he did not think hospital budgets should be aimed at pleasing the bond market.

Shelby Muddari, a fellow commissioner, wondered why the Facilities Authority requires hospitals to generate extra money before their new space is ready for use. He said the condition places hospitals in a bizarre situation.

"It's as if I wanted a loan for $100,000 and I have to go to my employer and say 'Raise my salary to $200,000' so I can borrow the money," he observed.

Spikers to begin season in New Hampshire

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's volleyball team will get underway with its season this coming Saturday when they travel to Durham, New Hampshire, for the UNH Tournament.

At UNH, the Minutewomen will play Bates College, Providence College and the University of Connecticut, with the winner of this pool facing the winner of a pool featuring UNH, Keene State College, the University of Rhode Island and the University of Maine.

Coach Elaine Marasco said she was pleased with the progress her team has made in the last three weeks, though the team will face a serious challenge this weekend.

"Our overall offense is not quite as well rehearsed as I would like to have it," she said, "but we are beginning the season a week earlier than last year, so it was impossible to get the offense any better than it will be when we leave Saturday morning."

"We're a strong team going against some strong teams. Providence College will be very big; they've got people about 5'10", with some at six feet, so we'll get tested on our defense and our blocking."

"I'm pleased with our offense, our serving and passing, and I'm pleased with the team's attitude — it's very competitive and strong. I hope to finish in the top of our pool," she said.

Last year, UMass fared well against UConn and Providence College; the Minutewomen defeated UConn twice and PC once, all in tourney action. This will be the first time UMass will face Bates. As for the others in the tournament, the Minutewomen fell to URI in a tourney, defeated UNH and Keene in the regular season and did not play Maine.

The Minutewomen, though not having much playing time as yet, have already played Smith College in a scrimmage at NOPE gym last weekend. UMass won every game using the 5-1 offense (an offense using just one setter), instead of the offense they used nearly all last season, the 6-2 (featuring four hitters and two setters). The Minutewomen plan to use the 5-1 this weekend.

After the tourney, UMass will host the UMass Invitational next weekend, September 19-20.

★Football

"It amuses me when people get concerned with the scores and outcomes of scrimmages," Pickett says. "But to be perfectly honest, I'd have to say yes, we are looking past Saturday. Our football players want to play Villanova. We're going to Dartmouth to get ready for Villanova."

In the meantime, the eyes wander. Without anyone really letting on, the eyes look to the calendar, to Sept. 20. Counting the days.

The dentist awaits.

Maravich to terms

BOSTON (AP) — Pete Maravich has agreed to contract terms with the Boston Celtics and will report to training camp when it opens Friday morning, the National Basketball Association team said Wednesday.

Terms were not revealed and Maravich is expected to sign when he arrives here, a team spokesman said.

The 11-year NBA veteran guard started last season with Utah, where he saw little action. The Celtics acquired him as a free agent in January. In 26 games for Boston, Maravich averaged 17 minutes and 11.5 points per game and added 29 assists.

Gridders ready to see action

By KEVIN CULLEN
Collegian Staff

It looms, like a dentist appointment, in the not too distant future. You just can't help looking at the calendar, counting the days.

The UMass football team is looking at the calendar, counting the days.

"We've been up here since August 24th," says UMass head coach Bob Pickett. "So we really want to play. Practice has been going well, extremely well. But we need the opportunity to get on a field and play another team."

That opportunity arises Saturday, when the Minutemen travel north to Hanover, N.H., to take on Dartmouth in a full-contact scrimmage.

The Dartmouth scrimmage will provide the first and only opportunity for UMass to experiment and hone their game plan against another team before the season opener with Villanova a week from Saturday.

UMass will be placing an emphasis on the kicking game, and Pickett reports that some starters will be used on special teams.

"We have to be a complete football team," Pickett says. "I mean, we use a lot of players in games anyway. The fewest number of players we used in a game last year was 43. In 1978 the fewest number we used was 48."

On Saturday, many eyes will fall on Tim Fontaine, the fifth-year senior from Bellows Falls, Vt., who will quarterback the Minutmen this year, after seeing limited action the past two seasons.

"Tim has looked fine in practice," Pickett said. "Saturday is a big test for him, and the way he's been playing I'm expecting him to do well."

The UMass offense, which is multiple and runs frequently out of the I-formation, is suited just fine for sophomore tailback Garry Pearson. Pearson, a 5'11", 185-pound speedster from Bristol, Conn., led Div. 1AA with a 29-yard kickoff return average and has developed his rushing game over the year to stir up comparisons to former UMass standout Dennis Dent.

"Dennis was a bit quicker, but Garry is a little stronger," Pickett said. "Garry is certainly an excellent pass receiver. I hope we can get the same end result out of Garry as we did from Dennis, but it's difficult to compare the two. You really can't. They're two entirely different ball players."

What is almost more encouraging than Pearson's development is the rest of the offensive backfield.

"We have depth in the backfield now," Pickett says. "All our runners are exceptionally strong and quick. We have depth this year."

The defensive backfield, along with the rest of the defense, leaves Pickett optimistic, despite the loss of All-Yankee Conference middle guard Ray Benoit, who is out for the remainder of the season with a knee injury.

"Ray was a tremedous loss to us," Pickett says. "He loves football. He was a great practice player with an infectious type of personality on the football field."

Is the team looking past Dartmouth?

Nuke, Leia, Vader and the incredible tale of "Mud Wars"

Frank Papsadore

A long, long time ago, in the faraway galaxy of Athleticus, there occurred the strangest event. For in a land of supernatural athletic abilities called UMatta, the evil villian Wally Vader-Gator, (a real crummy guy exiled by the superathletes), re-routed the entire planet's water supply to fortify his own dwindling, swampish reserves. UMatta had no idea where all the water had gone.

The problem eventually became a severe one for the people of UMatta. They had no water to drink at all, and therefore were forced to survive solely on the evil, exiled emporer's million-dollar beverage enterprise called Wally Vader-Gator-Ade. But this was not the most serious of UMatta's problems. For without water in this galaxy of supernatural athletes, there could be no showers, and consequently, there came forth a supernatural odor, paralyzing the plant.

Soon came spring, and time for the "Whattsa-UMatta games," a competition with the nearby planet of Whattsa, not unlike our own Olympic contests. But all the athletes of UMatta were afraid to compete in the same arena. Their supernatural sweat would produce such a supernatural odor that they would have to evacuate the planet and the evil Wally Vader-Gator would regain ultimate rule over the planet once again, turning it into a swamp, (not unlike UMass in the springtime).

Enter the hero. A young man called Nuke Strikewalker decided to protest the evil Vader-Gators actions by challenging him to a specia; contest. Nuke figured that with the help of his good friends, Hans Solong and Princess Leia-egg, he could defeat the evil Vador-Gator at his own game.

So on the first day of the Games, a special celebrity match of mud-wrestling, the national sport of UMatta, was set up between the two men. Vader-Gator loved mud-wrestling and was quite good at it. He became tremendously involved with this special match even before it had started. He had never had such a large forum as the games would provide.

When Nuke and Vader-Gator were ready to compete, a hush fell over the crowd. But then, in a flash, Princess Leia-egg came rushing down onto the field of battle and exclaimed, "There is no water and therefore no mud! There can be no match!"

The frenzied Vader-Gator fumed that the match must go on. Just as everyone started to get their ticket money back and leave for good, Vader-Gator commanded one of his men to unleash the restricted water supply. With a crash, the water started to flow again. But the stored up water supply flowed so quickly and violently that Vader-Gator was washed away.

The people of UMatta took showers and rejoiced. In honor of their good fortune they held the Whattsa-UMatta Mud Games every Spring. There was mud-softball, mud-soccer, even mud-volleyball. But in order to do this they had to conserve water in Autumn to supply the games of Spring. The people did conserve and saw that it was good. And so goes the story of UMatta and on and on and on.....

Women booters aim high

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN

Youth dominates the 1980 UMass women's soccer team. In a roster filled with sophomores and freshmen, UMass can boast having only two seniors (co-captains Elaine Contant and Kelly Tuller). However, while possessing this youth, the Minutewomen have experience, with seven sophomores, two juniors and the co-captains returning from last year's 12-1-1 regular season and fourth-place finish in the Easterns.

Among the returnees are sophomore Natalie Prosser, the Minutewomen's high scorer; sophomore Nina Holstrom, last year's Most Valuable Player for her performance in the midfield and junior Maddie Mangini, one of the team's best defenders.

> ...last year was one in which the players played individually. This time it shall be teamwork and consistency...
> —Ken Banda

The Minutewomen will be headed by first year coach Kalekeni Banda, a native of Malawi who attended UMass on behalf of his government from 1971-75. Last year, Banda served as an assistant to the team. This year, Banda will seek to maintain the level of play that earned UMass such a successful record, beginning this weekend with the Plymouth State Tournament in New Hampshire.

At the tourney, UMass faces New Hampshire, Connecticut and Plymouth State in 60-minute matchups; the team scoring the most goals will be declared tourney champion—an honor UMass has won for the past two years.

"We'll be working to maintain possession of the ball throughout the game," said Banda. "We'll try to help each other out, and to get the ball into the net as quickly as possible. It will be more offense-oriented, but we'll try to keep the ball on our side, because if the other team doesn't have the ball, they can't score."

After the tournament comes a schedule featuring teams that played in last year's Eastern Championships, including co-champions Harvard University and Cortland State University, Brown University, UConn, and the University of Vermont. In preparing for this season, Banda has emphasized the team concept.

"I got the players that I need for every position," he said, "They are very skilled players, but last year was one in which the players played individually. This time, it shall be teamwork and consistency playing as a team. They should understand one another, help each other out. It is a tough schedule, with good teams. I plan to take it one game at a time, and I believe we are as good a team as any of the top five."

UMass will play its first home game on September 24, when the host Westfield State College on the lower NOPE fields. Game time is 3:30 p.m.

Co-captain Joel Zuckerman gets set for a pass in yesterday's ultimate game with Western New England champs Hampshire College. UMass defeated Hampshire College 25-15. The UM ZooDisc'ers will play Boston Aerodisc Saturday at 11 a.m. on the grass across from the horse shoe in Southwest. Boston Aerodisc is the number two ultimate team in Eastern Massachusetts. Chips are down one more time

By LAURIE ZUCKER
Collegian Correspondent

Time and weather have deteriorated the slate roof of the South College Building and chips of slate have reportedly been falling to the ground below.

Physical Plant Director George Norton said the falling slate is not a serious problem, but said wooden barricades have been placed around areas of the 95-year-old building to protect pedestrians.

Last September, University Chancellor Henry Koffler closed off the 28 story main library next to South College when reports were issued stating its crumbling brick facade was a danger to pedestrians below.

Norton said only "isolated" pieces of slate have fallen from South College which opened in 1885.

Physical Plant Foreman Ted Rhodes is examining the roof to see if it needs to be repaired or replaced. Norton said funding for a new roof would come from the state legislature via a capital outlay and not from University maintenance funds.

Norton said the interior of South College, which houses offices, is safe and in good condition.

Nursing home strike planned as negotiations continue

By STEPHEN MORAN
Collegian Staff

Sixty workers at the Amherst Nursing Home will go on strike, starting Sept. 23 at 6 a.m., Richard Graham, negotiator for District 1199 of the New Englnad Health Care Employee's Union, said yesterday.

Graham said last Sunday's count of 43-4 in favor to authorize a strike provided the necessary mandate for the negotiating committee's action.

Betty Kravitz, owner of the nursing home, acknowledged reception of the strike notice. In an open letter from Kravitz to the union members, she termed the strike decision as a "most unfortunate" action, and asked the staff members to reconsider.

Negotiations are scheduled to resume next Wednesday in an effort to avert workers from walking out of work and joining the picket line.

But Linda Edwards, union negotiator, said she "doesn't have a whole lot of faith" that union and management bargainers can iron out a proposal in time to forestall the strike.

The Union members are asking for higher wages, for retroactive pay and for the right to ratain a union shop. More than four months of negotiations have failed to resolve these central issues.

The nursing home management is represented in negotiations by the Springfield law firm of Skoller, Abbott, and Hayes.

At Wednesday's meeting of the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees, UMass Student co-president, Richard LaVoice told board members he was concerned because students perceive the firm as a "union busting" outfit.

Commenting on LaVoice's remarks, Edwards said: "That's the point we've been trying to make. They're getting paid big bucks and that's their job. We'll stop them, but we don't get paid big bucks."

Calling the nursing home patients the "unseen victims of a strike," Kravitz wrote in the letter to employees: "We will be forced to hire permanent replacements for the strikers."

She added that the strikers will not have the right to be automatically re-instated in their present jobs if and when they return to work. "You will be placed on a preferential list and can only be rehired after these people leave," she said.

She wrote that management does not have to continue payment of the strikers' insurance premiums and that the strikers will be ineligible for unemployment in Massachusetts, under the present unemployment laws.

Edwards said that union offices have begun plans to set up and finance a strike fund. They are hoping to receive additional community contributions from sympathetic area residents and organizations.

SCERA releases report on legislative records

By KATHLEEN HOWLEY
Collegian Correspondent

The Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy has released a study which documents key roll call votes of Massachusetts senators and representatives during the 1979 and 1980 sessions of the state legislature.

This study, released Tuesday, one week before the Massachusetts primaries, was designed to provide voters with information about incumbents running for re-eleciton.

Approximately 200 roll call votes are included in the report, on such issues as state funded abortions, higher education appropriations, nuclear power, and the increase of the drinking age.

According to the record, State Rep. James Collins (D-Amherst), made a motion last year to increase higher education appropriations by $1 million. The bill was defeated by a narrow margin.

The report shows Collins repeatedly voted for legsilative pay raises, and opposed all efforts to amend the bill or decrease the amount of the raise.

In April of 1980, he moved to delete the higher education reorganization section from the House Ways and Means Committee version of the state budget. This section, which was passed, created new Boards of Trustees for the 28 state public colleges and universities, and a 15 member Board of Regents for the entire system. Collin's amendment was defeated, and as a result, many representatives who opposed this section voted against the entire budget, according to the report.

Collins also filed a bill to repeal the act which raised the leagal drinking age to 20 years, but a negative report on the repeal was issued by the House Committee on Government Regulations and it did not pass.

Collins was absent four times during the 1979 session, and six times during the 1980 session.

The report shows State Senator John Olver, D-Amherst, co-sponsored a bill which would also repeal the increase of the drinking age. The bill failed by a vote of 9 to 28.

On April 28, 1980, Olver voted against a bill which would allow the use of marijuana in therapeutic research. The bill passed with a vote of 21 to 12 and was referred to the House Ways and Means Committee, where it died.

According to the report, Olver was not absent at all during the 1979 and 1980 legislative sessions.

The Public Policy Office of SCERA worked for two months compiling the report. Copies can be found in the SCERA office on the fourth floor of the Student Union Building and in the Government Document section of Goodell Library.

SCERA backs bill

Would check harassment

By JOAN McKENZIE
Collegian Staff

[First in a two-part series on the SCERA sexual harassment bill.]

The failure of a sexual harassment bill in the Massachusetts State House this past summer, has resulted in a continued effort by a campus group to publicize and gain support for the bill, which will be reintroduced in December.

The Legislative Team of the Student Center for Education Research and Advocacy collaborated with state Rep. Barbara Gray, (D-Framingham), to draft the bill last year. "I was happy with it the way it was," said Gray, "but we are working on affecting changes in the bill" to ensure passage. There is currently no Massachusetts General law dealing with sexual harassment.

House Resolution 5172, that failed in its third reading, would have made sexual harassment a criminal offense. The bill allowed victims of harassment to file a lawsuit and collect for damages caused by the incidents.

State Rep. Michael Creedon (D-Brockton), chairman of Bills in Third Reading said he thought the bill had "unconstitutional elements. As I remember it it was far too broad and ill-defined," he said. "The difficulty with the bill, was that it affected both the private and the public sector," Creedon said.

"The bill was very strict and all encompassing. It would affect every institution in the state and working women as well as students. Anyone who felt they were subject to sexual harassment could introduce a suit into district court," he said.

"The cure proposed by the bill was far greater than the ill," said Creedon. "It was like a cannon going after an ant," he said.

Anne O'Connor, a senior on the SCERA team, believes Creedon should have investigated the bill more fully. "If he didn't agree with the definition of the bill, why didn't he go beyond his committee," she asked. "Why didn't he go to the sponsors and ask them to define the bill?"

"Our real initial goal was to have the subject brought out into the open," said O'Connor. She said she found many legislators unclear about the meaning of sexual harassment.

"When a person in a position of power can place another person in a position of submission because of a refusal of sexual favors, that is sexual harassment," said O'Connor.

"Never having been exposed to sexual harassment, many of the representatives are unaware of the effects and refuse to acknowledge the problem," O'Connor said.

Rep. Gray, who sponsored the bill, said she is currently working on a revision with women lawyers. They will also work with University of Massachusetts students on recommendations for changes.

The bill that failed to pass defined sexual harassment as the following:

> "The cure proposed by the bill was far greater than the ill. It was like a cannon going after an ant."
> —State Rep. Michael Creedon

"Explicit or implicit promise that any person's employment, career or education will materially benefit in return for sexual favors; . . .or will be adversely affected if sexual demands are rejected or deliberately repeated, unsolicited verbal or written comments, gestures, or physical actions of a sexual nature."

Ellen Ginsberg, a junior and legislative member of SCERA, believes the bill has a better chance of passing next year.

"A lot of universities have women working on the issue. In addition, many businesses and organizations are establishing programs to deal with the problem," she said.

Stressing that the work to publicize the bill would be stronger than ever, Ginsberg said "no one is going to give up now."

Bleachers Collapse, 18 Hurt

PITTSFIELD, (AP)—A set of folding bleachers in a junior high school gymnasium, which reportedly was not supposed to be used for classes, collapsed yesterday morning sending 18 students to area hospitals with minor injuries.

Those hurt, all seventh graders, were released after examinations, officials said.

Ambulances and police cruisers began converging on the suburban Crosby Junior High School shortly after the bleachers collapsed at 10 a.m. in a tangle of wood and screaming children.

William Goggins, a state building inspector sent to the scene, said the bleachers were structually unsound, "becauses they had been detached from the wall."

State Census Count Disputed

BOSTON (AP) — Lt. Gov. Thomas P. O'Neill 3rd lauched his own drive yesterday to sue the federal census for an alleged shortcount that could cost Massachusetts millions, and a congressional seat.

Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti joined O'Neill at a meeting of representatives from 20 cities and towns in the McCormack State Office Building and said a decison on filing a suit will be made later.

Precise figures from this year's census have not been divulged but O'Neill said he beleived the federal range was 4.9 million to 5.4 million persons. He estimates the state population at six million.

The census figures determine the availability of some federal aid, including direct help to cities and towns, as well as congressional districts. O'Neill said "hundreds of millions of dollars" are at stake and said he believed the census-taking adversely affected industrial states.

Poland Union Counters Strike

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Poland's state-run labor unions sought to counter a growing independent trade union movement yesterday by promising workers greater labor democracy and autonomy if they remain loyal to the government organizations.

The campaign began as interest in independent unions soared and workers in Warsaw announced plans for an independent regional union open to all professions and crafts. Pilots, airline stewardesses, academics, actors and others announced plans for unions of their own.

Government and dissident sources agreed that scattered pockets of labor unrest were shrinking, with few strikes still in effect. Some workers had refused to return to work, or had begun new strikes after major labor settlements on the Baltic seacoast and Silesian mining districts two weeks ago.

Those workers won demands for the right to form their own unions and to strike, among other social and economic reforms, before going back to work. In Moscow yesterday, Soviet leader Leonid I. Brezhnev met with Polish Deputy Premier Mieczyslaw Jagielski, and it was announced afterward that the Kremlin had agreed to increase Soviet supplies of food and manufactured goods to Poland.

Check-out proposal condemned as unsafe

By SCOTT BERNAT
Collegian Correspondent

A controversial new check out policy for student dormitory security employees is being considered by the University of Massachusetts Housing Security Department, Director of Public Safety Gerald O'Neil said yesterday.

O'Neil said the proposed policy would have "punch-out" stations located in various dorms throughout the five UMass residential areas. He said they would serve as a check to make sure student security employees were working their assigned hours.

Kathryn A. Grant, a sophomore security employee in Southwest , said the policy would put security students in danger because they would have to leave their dorms at night and report to other dorms to punch-out.

Persons working security alone during weeknights would be out alone without any protection, she said.

"It's dangerous being out at 2 a.m., especially during the week when I would be working alone," she said. "The hour between 1 and 2 a.m. is the time when most attacks occur."

O'Neil said, "The punch-out policy is only an idea and could be scrapped tomorrow. But, " he added, "they are still exploring the possibility of implementing the program because it could give better accountibility for student security personnel." He said, however, "The students are doing an excellent job."

Grant suggested alternatives for checking up on security people, including a plan which would have a member of the housing security deparment check on the students personally.

She said it would alleviate the need for time clocks and the necessity of going out alone in the early morning hours.

BOG on the Wall: 90 days

By CATHERINE CLABBY
Collegian Correspondent

Renovations in the Blue Wall should be completed in 90 days, Fred Harris, director of the Campus Center, said at a University Board of Governors meeting last night.

"The dilemma now is how to enforce the over 20 only drinking law," said Greg Dennis, chairman of the Food Service Committee.

Dennis said he hopes to avoid the "play pen" effect used last year in the Blue Wall to separate those of legal drinking age from those who were not.

"We'll use a physical barrier but don't want to use the orange plastic chairs we used last year," he said.

In other business, Nancy Serapin, chairman of the University Program Council, said Director of Food Services Richard Ellis, decided to eliminate the Program Council's name from advertisements for bands that will perform in the Blue Wall.

In the past, bands were advertised as being brought to the University "in association with the University Program Council" she said.

Serapin said having the UPC name dropped will hurt publicity and will limit the kind of exposure it needs to attract name performers.

Quabbin tie-in opposed

By SARAH ROLL
Collegian Correspondent

The future of the town's water supply depends on the successful operation of the nearly-completed Lawrence Swamp Well and not on a possible tie-in with the Quabbin Reservior, according to the Amherst Conservation Commission.

At a meeting Wednesday night, the commission discussed the importance of informing both the Metropolitan District Commission, which regulates the Quabbin Reservoir, and town residents of its opposition to the Quabbin tie-in. They said they are also opposed to a possible Connecticut River diversion into Quabbin.

Commission member Chris Moffitt said the Lawrence Swamp Well, which is expected to be completed by Wednesday, Sept. 17 will supply 1.6 million gallons of water a day and ensure Amherst of an adequate water supply. She said the water was not being taken from the swamp itself but from a glacial deposit of water beneath a surface of clay.

Referring to a report cited by William Atkins, chairman of the board of selectmen, predicting a population increase in Amherst of 33 percent in the next decade, Moffitt said, "first of all, I'd like to know where he got his statistics. It came as a surprise to all of us."

"A reasonable conservation program would reduce consumption by 15 percent," Moffitt quoted from reports from similar towns using conservation practices. This would allow for another 15 percent population growth at the very least, she said.

"Let us make it clear that we are not on the verge of begging for water from the Quabbin," said Claire Fortier, chairwoman of the Conservation Committee. "We must attempt in all ways first to supply our own water."

Moffitt added, "the future of the Quabbin is uncertain but we are guaranteed a water supply if we use the Amherst resources properly."

With the new well, town supplies will be adequate and there will be ways to deal with the increasing population. Commission members said town officials are discussing the possibility of putting in another well if needed.

The town is working on research into conservation measures financed by a state water conservation grant.

Prof discusses problems with hazardous waste

By CATHERINE CLABBY
Collegian Correspondent

Few people want a hazardous waste disposal unit in their neighborhood, but New England's industry produces over 300 million gallons of dangerous waste each year and it has to go somewhere, said Barbara Turoff, an environmental planner with the New England Regional Commission yesterday while addressing a seminar of graduate environmental engineering students.

"Over 5,000 small businesses produce hazardous wastes in Massachusetts and may go out of business if they do not have a local means of disposing their watses," she said.

Most of New England's waste is shipped to New Jersey or New York or it is disposed of illegally. Yet the region is so small that it makes sense to have some sharing,' she said.

The governor of each New England state and a presidential appointee make up the regional commission. Its activities include a distribution of information on what constitutes safe and unsafe disposal practices through pamphlets and lecture series.

"The disposal of hazarddous waste is not only an environmental problem," Turoff said, "It is an economic one."

Labeling hazardous wastes an "unseen national product," Turoff said consumers, not only producers, must give attention to its disposal.

"Not one product a consumer uses was produced without producing waste," she said.

A recently passed law, the Federal Resource Conservation and Recovery Act, requires industries that generate threatening wastes to register their disposal activities with the Environmental Protection Agency or an authorized state agency.

Turoff said the New England Regional Commission hopes to develop a uniform regional system for the monitoring of waste disposal: giving industry the opportunity to dispose of their waste in a neighboring state with minimal obstacles.

"This way Massachusetts could specialize in one type of a waste facility," Turoof said, "and Rhode Island, for instance, could specialize in another."

Turoff appeared at the University as a participant in a graduate seminar series dedicated to the issue of hazardous waste disposal.

Rally for Seta

Today is the eve of the second anniversary of the death of Seta Rampersad. On the afternoon of September 13th, 1978, Seta, a twenty year old, Trinidadian, University of Massachusetts student was found dead, alone in Motel 6 in South Deerfield. We are here today to keep the memory of Seta Rampersad alive. Surely, her family has not forgotten, her close friends have not forgotten and I'm sure Jimmy the Greek, Brian Pitzer and Carol Newton have not forgotten either. I would like to remind you all that there are plenty of people who would like us all to forget. Our efforts to seek justice in this case will be dismissed as hysterical, over reactionary, paranoid behavior. Folks have all kinds of "rational" reasons for Seta's death. Before I give you some facts about the case and its history, let me bring it home. If Seta had been your sister, lover, daughter, friend would you be so apathetic as to let this issue fade? Unfortunately, we all can be the victims. We can't be so complacent as to think it can not happen to each of us. That reality is always present.

Seta Rampersad was a woman of color. Seta was the daughter of working class people. Seta had to work in order to attend school. She was not unlike many of us. She was not unlike many women you know.

After Seta was found in Motel 6, the District Attorney paid an unusual visit to the motel in what he maintained was a normal case. Shortly after Seta was found dead, an inquest was performed to determine the cause of death. The inquest was limited. Only the judge and district attorney were permitted questions. Many areas thought to be important by Ozell Hudson, the Rampersad's lawyer, the Rampersad's and The Third World Women's Task Force, were left untouched. However, when the details surrounding Seta's death emerged, people called the Third World Women's Task Force and talked to members of the Committee Against Repression and told of a variety of ugly problems which surfaced with this case. In a technical sense their concerns and information could be kept out of court — and it was. We also can expect most others to cringe at the very mention of heroin trade, cocaine, prostitution and coverup connected to young women from the University.

Strange things happened around this case. Dr. Olsen, the first medical examiner to examine Seta's body testified during the inquest to his contention that the cause of death was possible homicide. Dr. Olsen can add no more to his observations. He is dead. Dr. Brendler can add no more to his observations. He is dead. Dr. Brendler, a neurological surgeon, was called on to testify the possibility that the symptoms Seta exhibited prior to death were indicative of epilepsy. There had been no histroy of epilepsy. Also, for one who developes epilepay late in life, other changes would have been discovered in her brain. The epileptic seizure theory developed because of signs of Seta's head jerking about and discriptions from Brian Pitzer, Jimmy the Greek and Carol Newton. Smothering also was not ruled out. Considering discrepencies in the testimonies of the three people with Seta in her final hours and the admittance by these parties that they did nothing for an allegedly sick woman for 12 hours, constitutes at least negligent homicide.

Even the inquest was a response to public demands. It wasn't until people began to ask questions about the case that the inquest was done. Those of you who have followed this case from the beginning know that each time a statement came out about Seta, the story changed. Then with the inquest, the legal system's officials tried to obsure matters. We will not allow the facts to be covered up forever.

Right here in Northampton, the courts have cooperated in not wanting to find out why or how she died. I know we don't want to think that racism and political corruption exists in bucolic New England. But it does, just as in any bustling urban area, just as it does from Watts to Memphis, from London to Soweto. We must also remember that working people, foreign people, women, people of color, poor people experience these injustices often.

Today, is the eve of the anniversary of Seta's death. We haven't forgotten. We will not forget.

Organizational Fair

Marlene Duncan (Black Affairs Staff)

The Minority Organizational Fair was held Thursday, September 11, in the Campus Center. We received an overwhelming response from the Third World community of the five college area. The purpose of this affair was to expose the community to various Third World organizations existing at the University of Massachusetts campus. Representatives were there from the following organizations; W.E.B. Dubois Afro-American Studies Department, DRUM magazine, Ahora, Alpha Phi Alpha, Nummo News, Black Mas Communications Project, Afrikam, Third World Womens Task Force, Third World Women Center, Third World Scientists, Black Affairs, Center for Racial Studies, Malcolm X Center, Collegiate Association of Black Business Students, Asian American Students Association, the Black Caucus, Society for Third World Engineers, Alcohol Education Program for Third World Students, the Duke Ellington Committee, Third World Head of Residences and Resident Assistants.

The message is unity, strength and determination. Take advantage of the organizations that are about our advancement. We are here to assist each other for we are ONE. Speaking on behalf of the senior class, we have learned to love and respect each other with an intensity that is real. We have learned the importance of working together and what it ultimately produces. Get involved with what's happening with minorities on this campus. There is always the possibility that there may be a time when we will not be here at all. In the STRUGGLE!!

First Impression

Norman J. Morgan (Black Affairs Staff)

When I first arrived at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst, I just stood in a state of bewilderment! Coming from a small town, East Point, near Atlanta, Georgia. The campus looked huge to me, in fact, UMass is twice the size of my hometown.

However, bewilderment was not only because of the size of UMass, but also as a result of all those preconceived thoughts that tend to fill anyone's mind when going into a new environment. If anyone remembers back as far as their freshman year in college, wondering what if no one likes me?, what if my courses are too hard? and just "What If's" in general. As I'm getting settled, I'm beginning to see that people aren't so horrible; Bostonians aren't really arrogant and snobs, and I will make friends. Also that my courses are not reasonably hard. In fact most of the people seem really warm and friendly, especially my black brothers and sisters. They all seem ready and willing to lend a kind word, give directions and even be of assistance.

Now the campus appears half the original size and the thought I had of being lost in the crowd; which is composed of 26,000 students, seems less likely. "Thanks", of course to the Committee for Collegiate Education of Black Students (CCEBS) who have directed me to courses and programs that will help me most. Such as Black Affairs. I was the editor of the Future Business Leaders of America peper at my High School, and my major is Journalism.

I feel I'm going to like UMass! The proportion of Black students to white students isn't going to make much difference, because the Black population seems to be tightly woven together. I've seen from pictures and heard from verbal accounts of mass turnouts for the Third World Picnic held every year. Also the fact that over 90 percent of Black students on campus are members of CCEBS.

New Staff Member

By Barbara Covington (Black Affairs Staff)

With the beginning of a new year, the University has taken on many new characteristics internally as well as externally. Many departments find themselves with new personnel and faculty, and the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students (CCEBS) is no exception. The fresh, new face warming the halls of the New Africa House is that of Doris Arrington, the new academic advisor to the class of 1984.

A native of Bridgeport, Connecticut, Arrington did her undergraduate study at the University of Connecticut and graduated in 1977 obtaining her BA. She continued her education at Springfield College and graduated with a masters of education (MED) in 1978 in Student Personnel.

Her only goal and advice to her class are to insure the combined efforts of CCEBS and the University to see to it that every class member graduates, and that her first-year students are able to establish comfortable balance between their academics and their extracurricular activities. "It's part of the whole educational experience."

Everywoman's Center

The Employment Peer Counseling Program at Everywoman's Center is looking for interns and volunteers to participate in a training program this fall. Everywoman's Center is located on campus at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst.

Employment Peer counselors help campus and community women assess their skills, interests, and goals with regard to employment, as well as provide information about available educational and skill-training opportunities. Academic credit is available for interested students.

Applications for the fall training can be obtained at the Center during its open hours; deadline for applications is September 17, 1980. Interviews will be held as applications are received. For further information, contact Karen Eichstaedt-West at 545-0883.

Parachutist hurt

By KEVIN CULLEN
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts student was injured yesterday when gusty winds blew his parachute too close to the Whitmore Administration Building and forced a hurried landing during an exhibition jump onto campus.

Senior Russ Pirkot, vice-president of the UMass Sport Parachute Club, suffered a dislocated fracture of the right ankle and was taken to Cooley-Dickinson Hospital in Northampton. Hospital officals said Pirkot was in satisfactory condition last night.

The accident occured shortly after noon on Haigis Mall, the area between Whitmore and the School of Business Administration.

Pirkot, a veteran of 130 jumps, fell from about 5,000 feet and hit the ground at a speed of 20 to 30 mph according to other club members.

"I hooked a low turn to get over Whitmore," Pirkot said, as he was wheeled to a waiting ambulance. "I was in a turn when I landed on my side."

Boston's Best

The Blue Wall presents the City of Boston's choices of the best rock bands tonight and tomorrow night. Tonight the Neighborhoods will be playing in the Hatch (while the Blue Wall is being renovated).

They won the 1979 "Rumble at the Rat", an annual contest at the notorious punk rock club, where Beantown's music establishment picks their favorite local group. The Hoods, as they are affectionately called, are Dave Minehan on guitar and lead vocals, John Hartcorn on bass, and Mike Quaglia on drums.

The band has a single out, "No Place Like Home," backed with "Prettiest Girl," on Ace of Hearts, a Boston record label.

Saturday, Pastiche, the winner of the "Rumble," will perform. Patiche consists of Curtis Nalhersey on guitar, Brad Hallen, bass, Ken Scales, lead vocals, Rick Martin, drums, and Ron Marinick on keyboards. They have an E.P. on P.P. records, another Boston label. It's called Wicked Intense!, a well-deserved title, and has the songs "Talk Show," "Boston Lullaby," and "Terminal Barbershop."

Each show is only $2, and both feature The Trademarks as the special guest. The Neighborhoods and Pastiche are presented by United Program Council Productions.

Editorial/Opinion

YOU CAN'T COME AWAY UNAFFECTED

Register and show them 'Ruskies'

Despite the efforts of a loud minority, I will certainly be among the thousands of young adults who register with the government this summer. I am disturbed by many Americans who are in opposition to the registration. The media has been filled with the insistent opposition. So much so that I am concerned that it may appear that the opposition is in fact a majority. I am concerned that it may appear that we are a people not willing to stick up for our rights. Or are our rights not so important? I am particularly concerned that the Soviets may see it as such.

Stephen Geiger

I hope that others see the registration as I do; the youth of America can unite in a common show of support that the world may see that we still strongly believe in the ideals that America was built upon; basic freedoms. Let us not forget that our freedoms — religion, speech, etc..., are not rights granted to all peoples in this world. Unless we stay united to uphold those freedoms, they could very well be taken away. Let us take this opportunity to show the world that we are indeed a "United" States of America.

The registration alone will not resolve our conflicts abroad, but it is a step in the right direction. I sincerely hope that those with the choice to register will not be misguided by the all too simplistic and unrealistic stand of the anti-registration campaign. They see the registration as a forerunner to a draft and aggressive military foreign policy, ultimately nuclear war. Some say that America is acting imperialistically, that we are overly expanding our capitalism abroad. I have heard the fears of those who feel we are being used solely to defend corporate profits, expecially oil corporate profits; "why should we fight for the greedy oil companies?". I have heard many take the basic standpoints; "We don't believe in war." or "War is killing, is hate, is immoral". Sounds great. I'm all for it. There is only one problem; reality.

It seems to me that these anti-registration, anti-draft, anti-nuclear (weapons) supporters fail to see reality. Of course we don't want war. Of course we don't want to get killed. What sane person does? I would love to live in a world where there is no need for defense spending and no communitst threat. But this is earth and we are men and right now we need defense spending to deal with any aggressive threat.

The Soviet Union, in the words of one American ambassador, "is a cause, not a country." This cause, its ideology, is expansionist (it always has been) — to spread its power, its rule, throughout the world. It made clear that Russia has been and will continue its methods of expansion: to apply force in its desired path and thus extend its communist influence and boundaries. Only when there is solid resistance to this force will Russia let up. It will then apply force elsewhere or wait until the path is unobstructed. It will continue to do so until it has occupied all territory or if it is contained by our resistance.

Because Russians are not landing on the United States coast does not mean that there is no Russian threat. (I hope that isn't what it will take to unite would-be draft dodgers). As it was stressed on the program, Russia's expansion toward Africa could undermine the U.S. ability to manufacture metals. Many Russian eyes, and ships, are directed toward Africa, where the U.S. imports up to 80 percent of its minerals necessary for the manufacture of metals. (By the way, Russia is nearly 100 percent self-sufficient of these same minerals.). The surrounding and eventual occupation of this territory would cut off supplies to the U.S. and its allies thus leaving us with sugar roofs against the rain.

If we don't resist Soviet intention of this sort, Russia could soon control vital world resources. We cannot sit and watch Russia, or anyone else, extend to areas which we are dependant upon for resources. I am not an expert, but I am not blind to the reality that coexistance of capitalism with Communism cannot be acheived without resisting the communist cause which ideally does away with capitalism. If we don't match Soviet intentions with military strength, the path will be clear for that cause.

If the anti-registration campaign had its way, no one would register. Then we could all carry on with our No-Nuke protest and hopefully unplug the American society from its dangerous military and energy sources. Then we could all begin building the windmills and the solar power generators. And then we could all smoke peace pipes, make love, and wait for the wind to blow fast enough and the sun to shine bright enough so that we would be able to keep the energy supplied to our T.V.'s so that we could continue watching Fantasy Island!

Sin Drum

Mothers are notorious for assuring their children that nothing their children could do, short of suicide, could prevent them from becoming a success. Of no exception is my mother, who has yet to forget that I was once first in my science class, back in fourth grade. Convinced that my future was in science she had bought me an experiment kit, equipped with plastic safety knife and frog. Unfortunately, my interest in science was less a function of my genuine love for problem solving than my love for Annie Ostrower, whose attention I tried in vain to attract using an arsenal of shifting watery eyes which I was careful to focus in her direction as I gave my always too elaborately worked out answers to the class.

One day she moved and my grades immediately fell. My mother worried that her little Einstein might be getting brain damage from too much "Winky Dink," so she took my crayons away and limited me to three hours a week of television, of which two hours were mandatory non-fiction viewing. But, of course, none of this had any effect on her love sick son, who was now not only ignoring his science and math homework, but was spending Friday night over at Jimmy Schlaegels' (whom I hated for reasons I don't have time to explain) so that come Saturday morning he could watch as much Looney Tunes as was possible, since Mrs. Schaegel was always out playing bridge and Mr. Schlaegel was usually "out" from his drinking excesses accomplished the night before.

Seth Jacobson

Eventually, I overcame my infatuation for Annie Ostrower, and regained some kind of interest in science and math. When I received my first straight A report card I was nearly crushed to death by my excited mother, whose arms contracted around me like a boa constrictor. "He's going to be a doctor! He's going to be a doctor!" She cried as she did a little "hora" around the living room. I got my first stethoscope within a week.

But, the glory didn't last, in fact, it seemed to fade along with the sweet smell and four color gloss of my text books. Gone were those beautiful illustrations of rocketships to the moon ("It might happen some day!" the caption read), or telescopes on picturesque mountain peaks. As I entered high school I carried under my arm a yellowing, dog-eared book filled with honeycomb tinted graphs and tiny little print. There were so many numbers in my science book and so many variables in my math book that I started to bring the wrong book to my classes. Perhaps, the most traumatic moment was discovering that neither my math nor science course had any use for that most securist of symbols, the equal sign. Replacing it were symbols meaning "close to," "approaching that"; what had happened to Mr. Jones and his attempts to compute the cost of his apples?

In a flash I was a freshman at this university. For my four more years of blessed sanctuary I decided that English would be my area of concentration, leaving science for those who understood what derivatives were. But my mother still had plans.

"You'll be a doctor, a good doctor. You still have time."

Sometimes I still believe her, and on those occasions I sign up for chemistry, only to drop the course the moment I smell the sulfer in the Goessman air.

Today, they tell me I'm a senior, that I must make some kind of plans for my future, but I don't know whether I should believe them or not. After all, I've been a student my whole life, so why should things all of a sudden change? Perhaps I could wish myself never to grow into the workaholic world of big people, but then even Oskar had to become big.

Letters

Prof style 'inexcusible'

To the Editor:

The following is a list of events that occurred during the introductory lecture for T. Ashton's expository writing class, on the evening of September fourth. Professor Ashton's remarks and actions as listed below were delivered without humor, and were received by the class first with confusion and nervousness, and later with fear, awe, and obedience.

1. Professor Ashton barked at any students who arrived late to class and told them in an aggressive tone to get out and wait outside. He brought the students in individually after about five minutes outside and had them stand in front of the class. He demanded that they repeat after him the words "I will never be late to class again," forced them to agree that this will be the most important class they will ever take, and only then allowed them to be seated.

2. Professor Ashton brought a riding crop in to class and spoke of having to wash the blood off of it after meetings with students. He also mentioned that tutorial meetings are in his office because the janitors want to confine the blood to a small area.

3. He demanded that the class say in unison a phrase about the proper way of learning to write, stating that it was not important whether or not students agreed with him, only that they obey him.

4. He singled out a student for a role play, and asked her questions about her situation. When she answered "incorrectly," he called her stupid, repeatedly emphasizing that only his course could save her from her stupidity.

I found Professor Ashton's behavior intimidating and offensive. Whether Professor Ashton is trying out a new technique of teaching, attempting to get rid of time consuming students, or just a dedicated sadist, his conduct is inexcusible. His methods of instruction could be damaging to a student's self-respect and confidence, two things which greatly affect the quality of an individual's intellectual and emotional life, as well as that individual's academic future.

I gave Professor Ashton a letter expressing these feelings as I left class Thursday evening, telling him I was not continuing in the course. He replied that since I wasn't his student anymore there was no reason to look at my letter and dropped it into the wastebasket. I've therefore taken recourse to this editorial page to express my outrage.

Real source of irritation

To the Editor:

I found the Collegian recent articles on the water shortage and what students intend to do about it very hilarious. It boggled my mind to find that about 98 percent of the students interviewed were Southwest residents, who never lost their water throughout the entire incident. The students interviewed had such catchy solutions as, "showering with a friend." We at the top of the hill would have been satisfied with a glass of water!

Not only did we lose our water at approximately noon Wednesday, our residental staff didn't post signs notifying us of the situation until after 3 p.m. Even then we were told that the water had been shut off temporarily, not that it was gone.

I hope next time the Collegian decides to publish an article, such as the one mentioned, it goes to the source of the irritation. At least 2,000 students between Sylvan, Orchard Hill and Central had no water for 24 to 30 hours. It was no joke to them. Better luck next time on your poor attempt at humor.

UMass woman assaulted near local bar

Amherst Police have a suspect in the alleged assault and battery of an Amherst woman which occured shortly after 1 a.m. yesterday outside the Pub on East Pleasant Street.

Witnesses said the woman, a 20-year-old University of Massachusetts student, was talking with an unidentified man in The Pub parking lot shortly after closing when the man suddenly struck her on the right side of the face and knocked her to the ground. Police said the man then fled on foot.

An assault and battery complaint was filed by the victim about an hour after the incident. According to the police, she refused medical attention.

Approximately $110 in cash was stolen Wednesday from several pocketbooks left on a desk at the University Day Care Center. UMass Police said they have a suspect and the investigation is continuing.

Cars operated by Katherin F. Bruhn, 23, of 9 Colonil Drive, Amherst and Fredrick Filios, 62, of 69 Pelham Road, Amherst were in a minor accident Wednesday morning at the junction of Southeast Street and Main Street.

The northbound Bruhn vehicle was easing into traffic afetr stopping at a stop sign on Southeast Street when it clipped the second car traveling west on Main Street. There was slight damage and police reported no injuries or violations.

A car owned by Agnes B. Shipman, 56, of 95 Hockanum Road, Hadley was slightly damaged early Wednesday evening at the Price Chopper parking lot on University Drive. The parked car was hit by a vehicle driven by Alice R. Flemming, 48, of North Main Street, Sunderland which was maneuvering into a parking space. The Flemming car was also slightly damaged and no injuries or violations were reported.

Cardinal attacks Rep

BOSTON (AP) — The congressional candidacy of state Rep. Barney Frank is under attack by Cardinal Humberto Medeiros and an anti-abortionist group that is fighting in another Massachusetts congressional race.

Frank is drawing heavy fire in his bid for the Democratic nomination for the seat held vacated by the Rev. Robert F. Drinan, a Jesuit, who is not seeking a sixth term because of the papal ban on priests holding elective office.

Drinan, asked by 80 clergymen to reconsider his endorsement of Frank before Tuesday's primary, issued what amounted to a renewal of the endorsement yesterday and expressed the hope that voters "will repudiate the false attacks against him (Frank)..."

Members of Massachusetts Citizens for Life are set to support Frank's opponent — conservative Waltham Mayor Arthur Clark. They are also opposing Rep. James M. Shannon, the 5th District incumbent.

Frank is considered a liberal on a variety of issues and has backed Medicaid financing of abortions.

Similarly, Shannon, a Democrat, is under attack for his support of abortion funding.

Medeiros sent a letter this week to parishes in the Boston Archdiocese, which includes the 4th District, asking voters "to save our children, born and unborn."

Medeiros said those "who make abortion possible by law — such as legislators and those who promote, defend and elect these same lawmakers — cannot separate themselves from that guilt which accompanies this horrendous crime and deadly sin..."

Citizens for Life plans to distribute 100,000 leaflets to homes and churches this Sunday urging support of Clark, who favors a constitutional ban on abortion.

BU vandalism, blame disputed

BOSTON (AP) — Saboteurs allegedly filling locks with glue and jamming elevators have caused $25,000 damage at the Boston University library, the university claimed yesterday in a statement linking damage to a labor dispute with librarians.

Jackie Ruff, a spokeswoman for the librarians, said, "None of our members would participate in what they are alleging."

She said 3 issues still were outstanding in contract negotiations which were in mediation.

"Files of catalogues in critical areas have disappeared," said a statement issued by Robert C. Bergenheim, the university vice president of labor and public relations.

"Elevators have been put out of commission so handicapped persons can't use the libary. Locks have been filled with glue so service has been further disrupted.

"It is not enough for the librarians to say 'we didn't do it.' They should publicly condemn such irresponsible stupidity. We have no idea who the individuals are, but whoever they are, they are familiar with the library and know their way around. They are not strangers."

Bergenheim said what he called "sabotage" has cost about $25,000.

The statement was issued with an announcement that the university planned to put into effect for 17 librarians an offer of an average salary increase of 8.6 percent retroactive to Sept. 1, despite not reaching a contract agreement.

The university and the librarians' union, Local 925 of Service Employees International, have been bargaining for five months over the wage offer, said Bergenheim.

Ruff said the librarians earn from $11,000 to $16,500 a year.

Kickers at Keene for tourney

By SCOTT SOLOMON
Collegian Staff

Coming off a split of their two exhibition matches with Bristol University of England, the UMass men's soccer team heads to Keene State College in New Hampshire, for the Sumner Joyce Invitational Tournament, and the first two games of the 1980 regular season.

The two-day tournament is being held to commemorate the opening of the Sumner Joyce Athletic Field. Joyce was the head soccer coach at Keene State from 1946-1970, compiling a 99-141-22 record. He was succeeded by Ron Butcher, who is currently in his tenth seascn as skipper. Butcher has led the Owls to seven post-season and five national tournaments during his ten-year tenure.

"Last year was a good year," commented UMass Coach Russ Kidd, "but we didn't win the big games that we needed to win." That statement could have been no closer to the truth. The Minutemen went on a 3-0-2 tear through the first third of the '79 campaign but suddenly faltered, dropping five of the next nine games, including two consecutive single-goal losses to URI and UConn, both of whom were selected for the New England NCAA Tournament.

One area in which UMass is not lacking this year is depth, as over three-quarters of the team is compiled of sophomores and juniors. That strength will undoubtedly prove to be one of the major sparks for the team, as mid-season aches and pains begin to take their toll on weary bodies. Meanwhile, with the offensive firepower of forwards Tony M. Dias (five goals and one assist in '79), Tony G. Dias (no relation), freshman Mike Runeare, and Iranian-born Bahram Emani-Zedah, the Minutemen are looking to better last season's 7-5-2 record and 12th place New England ranking.

The big trouble spot for UMass last year was its inability to get the big goal when the team needed it most. The Minutemen dropped two crucial games by identical 2-0 counts midway through the season, and it was at that juncture that things started to nose dive.

After a 1-0 victory over Providence, UMass went up against the URI Rams. But the Minutemen could not rebound against an early Ram tally, going on a 77-minute scoring drought following the Rhode Island goal, and losing the game 1-0. Eight days later, a late goal by UConn's Joe Morrone was the deciding mark in a 3-2 UMass loss, which knocked them from a playoff berth.

Tomorrow the Minutemen will be, for the most part well-rested, but the club will have to lay its cards on the table early in the tournament. While UMass is ranked number five in Div. 1 (New England), opponent Davis and Elkins checks in at the number two spot in West Virginia, with Central Connecticut at number four (Div. 2), and Keene State at number six, (Div. 3).

The Minutemen will square off against Davis and Elkins College of West Virginia tomorrow at 12 p.m., while host Keene State faces Central Connecticut State College at 2 p.m. On Sunday, the winner of the UMass-Davis and Elkins contest will meet the winner of the Keene State-Central Connecticut game, with the losers battling for the third spot in the consolation game.

. . .and the harder they fall

It wasn't exactly the best way to start a membership drive.

As club vice-president Russ Pirkot was driven off in an ambulance to Cooley-Dickinson Hospital with a fractured ankel, the UMass Sport Parachute Club went on with their exhibition jump yesterday at Haigis Mall.

Pirkot, who jumped from an estimated height of 5000 feet, came too close to Whitmore and had to hook a low turn to clear the building. Pirkot hit the ground on his side at a speed of 20-30 mile per hour, according to other club members.

"Russ broke two of the cardinal rules of parachuting," said Larry Wright, club treasurer. "He landed in a turn, and he didn't have his feet together and under him."

Wright was quick to add that the accident was unusual.

"We have the best safety record of any university jumping club," Wright said. "We've never had a serious injury in our existence (since 1959). The last injury I can recall was a sprained ankle a year ago."

The actual object of the exhibition, beside attracting potential members, was for the two groups of three jumpers to hit a roll of pink toilet paper, situated on the grass between Whitmore and the SBA (incidentally, who the hell calls it Haigis Mall?).

Closest to the target was Brian Roache, who landed just a few yards away. Roache, who has 640 jumps behind him, was unimpressed.

"I should have been much closer," he said. "But the wind was tough today."

The crowd that watched it all was fairly sparse, but the response left Wright and other club members pleased.

"Last spring, when we did basically the same thing, we got about a dozen serious candidates," Wright said. "Today we talked to about 40 or 50 people who were really interested. I never saw such a response."

As for the saga of poor Russ Pirkot, he was resting comfortably in Cooley-Dickinson last night where his condition was listed as satisfactory.

"He experienced some discomfort at first, of course," said Dr. Eaton Freeman of Cooley-Dickinson. "But he should be all right. Nothing happened that should affect him in the future."

Pirkot, whose ankle was broken in two places, can derive some comfort in the fact that his club has received its greatest public response and publicity. But, as one student said after the accident: "Hell of a way to get attention."

Netwomen face Catamounts

The UMass women's tennis team is looking forward to the strongest season since coach John Beal took over two seasons ago. All varsity players are returning and eight freshman will be playing on the team. Senior captain, Joanne Vennochi, commented on the coming season: "With the depth and experience that we have we should be at the top of our division, if not first." A promising freshman, Elizabeth Sullivan, will be playing number two singles and last year's most valuable player, Barbara Mills, will have the number one spot.

This year's schedule is tougher than last year's with such teams as Tufts and Harvard leading the pack. Harvard finished second and Tufts sixth in the New Englands last year. Barbara Mills explained that the schedule this year was more difficult than last season's because all the teams which UMass defeated were dropped from the schedule. Closer to home, a Smith-UMass rivalry promises to be an exciting match.

Saturday, the team opens it's season in an away game at the University of Vermont. Coach John Beal feels the game will be a close one but UMass should come out on top. The junior varsity will also make the trip north.

Haynes hold-out goes on

He spent last Sunday the way any typical suburbanite might—doing a little landscaping, measuring the garage for some shelving, playing with his son, listening to a football game.

The game was at Foxboro, Mass. The New England Patriots were beating the Cleveland Browns 34-17. Mike Haynes wasn't there, though. The best cornerback on the Patriots—the best cornerback in the National Football League—wasn't wearing the red-and-white uniform with No. 40 on the back. He was in neighboring Norfolk, Mass., trudging around the backyard, gazing at the garage walls.

Mike Haynes already is a wealthy young man with a lovely wife, Julie, and an 11-month-old boy, Aaron. And Mike Hay . is also has an agent, Howard Slusher, who seeks to make him wealthier.

Howard Slusher may be as welcome around pro football's front offices as Willie Sutton at a bank. Howard Slusher plays hardball in football.

Student Credit Union loans to be available once again

By LARRY COX
Collegian Correspondent

The UMass Student Federal Credit Union will start acepting applications today for student loans for the first time since last April, when a serious money shortage forced the union to cut loan service to students.

Stu Tobin, president of the union, said that due to the poor economic situation, the loan service will probably be cut again next spring.

Traditionally, the union's funds (student deposits) would run low around mid-April, and the loans would be cut in May, only a few weeks from the close of school. But last year, due to the economic crunch, students began withdrawing large amounts of money much earlier, seriously depleting the union's supply.

The severe shortage last spring caught the student-run union completely by surprise. As the situation worsened, the union was forced to take out an $85,000 loan in order to protect its' student loans. The loan was taken from MassCUNA, a "bank" for Massachusetts' credit unions which operates similarly to a Federal Reserve Bank.

Tobin said the union's funds are in a healthy state now, however, because of a large amount of student deposits from summer jobs. Tobin, who has worked with the credit union for two and a half years, said the loan service is opening again due to a favorable "share-to-loan balance".

Tobin explained how the share-to-loan balance works: the total amount of money (deposits, or shares) the credit union has is divided by the number of students making those deposits. Therefore, if the union has $600,000, for example, and 20,000 students have deposited that total, the share-to-loan balance is 30 percent, which is also the union's maximum share balance allowance (compared to 80 or 90 percent for the large commercial banks). If, however, the share balance goes above 30 percent, the union must cut off the loans.

When the share balance reached 33 percent late last March, the cut was imposed. It rose to 40 percent during the summer, but now, with the sudden influx of money, the balance is down to 20 percent, and Tobin promises the union will not get caught off guard this year.

"There will be weekly tabulations, and all of the records will be thoroughly checked," Tobin said Friday. "Then if the money starts running low again, we'll be ready to handle the problem."

"All types of loans will be available to all students," Tobin said. "They will include the share-frozen, car, co-maker, and personal," he added. All loans will have a 15 percent interest rate, either the same or lower than commercial banks.

Tobin noted the number of loans the Credit Union gives will depend on how quickly students withdraw money over the course of the year, but the number should not decrease significantly. However, with 150 outstanding loans already, the union will be much less lenient about due payments and awarding of loans than it has been in the past, and, like most banks, Tobin added, "we'll go with the economy".

The Credit Union is a student run organization, with over 100 students volunteering over 25 hours a week. "The experience gained here is very invaluable for anyone going into business," Tobin said. He added that people at the credit union have gone on to very good jobs.

Negotiator leaves amidst conflict

STEPHEN MORAN
Collegian Staff

Conflicting explanations have emerged over the recent resignation of Sam D'amico, former chief university negotiator in the ongoing faculty negotiations.

UMass President David Knapp announced D'amico's resignation last week, claiming that due to a conflict in scheduling, the prolonged tenure of the talks had forced him to request the termination of his duties. Knapp cited the last date that bargaining commenced and the unexpectedly voluminous 140-page union proposal as factors that led to D'amico's decision. D'amico has returned to his post as Vice President in charge of labor relations at the University of Maine.

Bruce Laurie, Massachusetts Society of Professors vice president, was skeptical of the official explanation for the resignation, which came during a two week recess which had been taken to allow the administration to prepare a set of counterproposals. He thinks the reason for D'amico's departure is that he "never got clear signals" from the administration.

"D'amico was aware of the possible lenght of negotiations in June," he said. He added that it was "strange" that he would resign at a time when the administration was preparing the first counterproposal since the first round of talks.

But Associate to the Chancellor, Terrence Burke disagrees with Laurie's interpretation and says that "It is mistaken to think that a large and complex document can be negotiated quickly. It is unfortunate that negotiations began so late." He anticipates progress in the next round of talks scheduled for Sept. 18.

No Nukers registering voters

By JOE BARRETT
Collegian Correspondent

A registration drive for voters is being waged by the Campaign for Safe Energy and the Student Coalition Against Nukes Nationwide in the Amherst Area for the upcoming election in November.

The drive is the latest in a series of efforts which began during the primaries last spring.

The Campaign for Safe Energy is part of MASSPIRG—an area-based research group which is trying to make students aware of the nuclear energy issue, said Ken Ward, chairman of the campaign's Board of Directors.

"Together with the Student Coalition Against Nukes Nationwide we form a very strong voice for the issue in Amherst and at UMass," Ward said.

Elise Jacques of MASSPIRG said the Campaign for Safe Energy was formed when members of MASSPIRG got together and decided to go to New Hampshire for the first Democratic presidential primary.

"Our goal was to raise the issue of nuclear power and get positions from all the candidates. Valuable national exposure could be gained in New Hampshire, so a strong effort was made," Ward said.

Ward said they were successful in pushing the issue into the campaign and all the candidates expressed their opinions one way or the other. He said Senator Edward M. Kennedy and California Governor Jerry Brown both endorsed the campaign's energy platform this year.

After April, the Campaign for Safe Energy changed their tactics. They began to work on getting a floor fight at the Democratic National Convention on the nuclear/solar issue.

To do this, the campaign had to go to the Democratic platform committee one month before the convention. In order to come out of the platform committee with the power to debate an issue on the floor, the campaign needed at least a minority plank, which meant support from 25 percent of the platform committee. Instead, the issue got a majority vote, so this plank needed no debate.

Because of the strong lobbying effort on the part of the Safe Energy Campaign, this plank was the only one Carter forces lost in the Platform Committee.

"Though this was mostly a symbolic victory, it was signifi-

Student killed

By J. ADAM BAILEY

A University of Massachusetts student was killed when he was struck by a car Friday night on Route 116 near the Lantern Court Apartments in Sunderland.

Nap-pdol Charukultharvatch23, of Bangkok, Thailand was an exchange graduate student in the electrical engineering program. He had just stepped off a PVTA bus with a group of students when a car driven by James Wasielewski, 20, of River Road Sunderland suddenly veered into the group, hitting Charukultharvatch.

Wasielewski's car skidded 300 feet after he hit Charukultharvatch. It then flipped over one and a half times, totaling the vehicle. Wasielewski was taken to Franklin County Hospital in Greenfield, treated for minor lacerations and released. There were four passengers in the car,—Gay Dhabodeau of Turners Falls, and Rodney Sutherland, Chris Kote and Kelly Wills all of Greenfield. None were injured.

Wasielewski will be arrained today in Franklin County District Court on charges of driving under the influence of alcohol and endangering behavior. There is a possibility of more serious charges to be brought against him, Sunderland police said.

Charukultharvatch was also taken to Franklin County Hospital with multiple fractures and injuries including a fractured skull, arm and leg. He was later transferred to Wesson Memorial Hospital in Springfield where he died at 2:23 a.m. Saturday. Funeral arrangements have not been announced.

Man leaps, floats and leaves

NEW YORK (AP) — He looked like any other backpacking tourist atop Manhattan's World Trade Center — then suddenly he jumped the electrified fence ringing the observation deck, stripped off his rubber gloves and dove off the side of the world's second-tallest buiding.

The Mystery Leaper's parachute unfurled and he floated 1,350 feet and 110 stories down to West Street, where he calmly unstrapped the chute, rolled it into a neat bundle and drove away in a waiting car, leaving officials scratching their heads Saturday afternoon.

They were mainly baffled because the Mystery Leaper didn't wait around for reporters and television cameras.

"We don't know who he was and nobody has called to say they did it," Peter Monahan Jr., a spokesman for the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, said yesterday. "It doesn't seem the guy wanted publicity."

Authorities said they were trying to establish the jumper's identity and added that he could be charged with tresspassing and reckless endangerment.

Registry is cracking down

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts Registry of Motor Vehicles in the past 18 months has caught up with 59,537 Bay State motorists who illegally registered their cars in neighboring states to avoid excise taxes and higher insurance rates, an official says.

Registry Inspector Thomas Callahan said that of a total, 11,054 cars were illegally registered in New Hampshre alone.

Callahan said the crackdown, which began in February 1979, has been working because of cooperation from those neighboring states and from local police departments, who report suspicious out-of-state cars to the registry.

Callahan said that based on a conservative $150 per car estimate, Massachusetts cities and towns are collecting an extra $9 million a year in taxes because of the enforcement effort.

Chemical dump debate starts

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House begins debate this week on legislation establishing a $1.2 billion "superfund" to clean up abandoned hazardous chemical dumps such as that at Love Canal in New York.

The superfund proposal follows a surgeon general's report released late last week describing the problem of toxic chemicals as "a major public health concern" that will plague the nation for years.

It comes after two days of hearings last week on the Senate version of the bill, during which federal, state and local officials called for urgent congressional action on the problem.

But the legislation faces obstacles in the form of the Chemical Manufacturers Association and other industry groups.

Although the industry prefers the House version of a superfund to a much more ambitious Senate version, the association still feels the fund is too big and puts too much of a burden on the industry.

KKK: Leader arrested, rally held

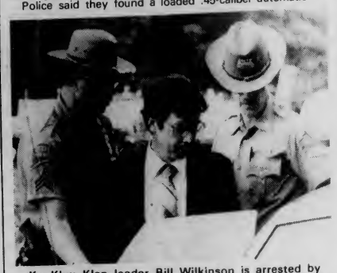
By DAN HALL
Associated Press Writer

SCOTLAND, Conn. — Shortly after Ku Klux Klan leader Bill Wilkinson was released on bond following his arrest on a weapons charge, members of the Klan and their supporters held their second public rally in a farm pasture last night.

Intermittent showers cause a delay in the start of the rally by the Invisible Empire of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan for about a quarter-hour. The group is one of about 42 Klans in the United States.

A police spokesman estimated the crowd at about 150, a sharp drop from the estimated 450 who had attended Saturday night's rally, the first public Klan rally and cross-burning in Connecticut in 70 years.

Police said they found a loaded .45-caliber automatic pistol in Wilkinson's suitcase, which was in the trunk of a car driven by a Klan sympathizer Sunday afternoon.



Ku Klux Klan leader Bill Wilkinson is arrested by police in Scotland, Conn. yesterday for carrying a dangerous weapon in a motor vehicle. He was later released. (AP Laserphoto)

Wilkinson, 37, was charged with carrying a dangerous weapon in a motor vehicle. On Friday, a Superior Court judge had banned the carryng of firearms in the town of Scotland on Sept. 13 and 14. The court order authorized state police to conduct searches of vehicles and individuals.

The circumstances surrounding Wilkinson's arrest became clouded when an unidentified man showed police a permit he said had been issued to allow him to carry the gun. Wilkinson, however, had already said the gun was his.

After being released on a $1,000 non-surety bond, Wilkinson told reporters he had been "surprised — totally" by his arrest.

"I'm sure when the case goes to court, if it goes to court, you will realize why I was surprised," he said. He did not elaborate.

Wilkinson was scheduled for a court appearance this morning in Windham County Superior Court in Willimantic.

Security for last night's rally was not nearly as tight as for the Saturday rally.

State troopers were allowing cars to drive up the long, hilly road leading to the rally site, something not allowed Saturday. Nevertheless, each car was subjected to two searches, and occupants were also frisked by officers.

Two more arrests were reported yesterday bringing the total to 12 for the two days of the event. Police said they charged a Norwich man with disorderly conduct, resisting arrest and possession of a dangerous weapon. A Lithia Springs, Ga., man was charged with operating a motor vehicle while his license was under suspension.

On Saturday, more than 200 state police troopers, some in riot gear, stood guard to control the hundreds of KKK sympathizers and anti-Klan demonstrators that descended upon the community.

Nine persons were arrested before the first rally, most on charges of interferring with a police officer, and scattered violence resulted in injuries to eight persons, two of whom were admitted to a nearby hospital.

Springfield woman at the rally, Wants more women involved

SCOTLAND, Conn. (AP) — The hooded robe was the same. The tone of voice was the same. And the general attitude was the same.

The difference was that this member of the Invisible Empire of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan was a woman — the only woman at Saturday night's rally who was clad in the traditional garb of the Klan.

She wouldn't give her name. She said only that she was 19, unemployed, engaged and from the Springfield, Mass., area. She would reveal nothing more about herself. But under her hood, green eyes could be discerned. And she had long, brown hair flowing from under the hood.

"I went to a meeting with some friends," she said when asked how her relationship began with the racist organization. "Their stands, I really liked."

She referred to herself as a "Klansperson."

"I wish more women would get involved," she said. "In the beginning, it was all men. Now there must be 40 to 50 women who are members that I know of in the Northeast."

Her philosophies reflected the standard Klan dogma: "I just don't like the way things are going, especially in Boston. Black people are getting away with attacking white people, but look out if it's the other way around."

She also mentioned the old Klan line about "shipping blacks back to Africa."

She said her Springfield-area Klan meets more than once a month, but she wouldn't say anything more about those meetings.

"That's privileged information," she said.

She said Saturday night's rally was the first Klan gathering she had attended where a cross had been burned.

"I've been a member about a year. And there was nothing in the world that would make me miss it," she said.

On the cross-burning ceremony itself, the young woman was enthusiastic, even excited.

"I'm very proud of it," she said. "I thought it was great. I hope there'll be many more."

Scotland residents upset about rallies

By PAT MYERSO AND MARGET CARSLEY
Special to the Collegian

This weekend's Ku Klux Klan rally and the counter Klan demonstration brought mixed reactions from Scotland, Conn. residents.

Two large Anti-Klan groups were represented in the crown that gathered to observe the KKK's rally and cross burning Saturday. They included the International Committee Against Racism and a local anti-klan group.

An organizer of the local ad hoc Coalition said their group was formed two weeks after word came that the Klan was going to be in the area. The purpose of the Coalition was to form a protest against the KKK and to educate area residents about racism.

Saturday was peppered with skirmishes between pro and anti-klan followeres as confrontations occurred. Nine people were arrested by riot-equipped state police.

"It's a mess (the rallies). They shouldn't be here. As far as I can tell, nobody wants them here," commented on Scotland resident.

"I was home asleep on the couch, and somebody woke me up and brought me here. It's a weekend and I came down here to find a good time, but there's no good time to be found here," said a man from Willimantic, a town next to Scotland.

John Bracey, of the Afro-American Studies Department at the University of Massachusetts said he found it interesting that the Klan came up to the Northeast when traditionally in the 1860's and the 1920's they were a decidingly anti-Catholic organization. He noted that the recent demonstration was anti-Black rather than anti-religion.

Bracey said he feels the re-emergence of the Klan is "just a sign of people losing grips on the complex changes in today's society, and falling back on simplistic ideas such as race to explain these changes."

Harassment awareness planned

By JOAN MCKENZIE
Collegian Staff

Second in a two-part series on SCERA's attempts to deal with sexual harassment.

With the recognition of the University of Massachusett's attempts to address the issue of sexual harassment on campus, other universities have begun to seek assistance in developing their own policies and guidelines to deal with the issue.

The State University of New York at Albany is one such university. The university contacted UMass during the summer in connection with an article that appeared in a news publication.

In a recent issue of Equal Opportunity in Higher Education, (July 28, 1980) the University of Massachusetts was mentioned as establishing a forum for addressing sexual harassment issues. In a letter to Ronald Sinacore, an Affirmative Action Coordinator at UMass, Tina R. Wynn, a research assistant at the University at Albany stated: "Recently, the State University of New York at Albany campus conducted a survey on sexual harassment and the results indicated that it is both prevalent and widespread...We are looking for suggestions, advice and/or brochures on how you have attempted to handle such cases."

The survey was included in the letter. Among the questions asked were: " Have you to listen to sexual innuendos and/or racial slurs made in lectures?" and "Have you ever been told if you didn't sleep with a professor or supervisor that you'd be in serious academic or job trouble?" Respondents were asked to either answer never, once/twice or often.

Sinacore handed the letter over to the Women's Issues Team at the Student Center for Education Research and Advocacy (SCERA). 'I felt that since SCERA was most poignantly involved with the issue they should be made aware of the issue," he said. Sinacore added that he gave the letter to SCERA with the stipulation that the Women's Issues Team would not issue an answer independent of the Administration.

Ellen Bagli is head of the Women's Issue Team. Bagli said the members of the team are working on a response to the letter and hope to set up a meeting between the two campuses.

Bagli said SCERA will conduct an extensive outreach program on campus this semester to educate both men and women about sexual harassment. "During the summer we set up a workshop in which men and women were exposed to sexual harassment. Members of the student senate were involved in the workshop." she said.

"We intend to contact all Residence Assistants and Heads of Residence and let them know about the workshops. The workshops will alert both men and women to the actions and behavior which constitute sexual harassment," Bagli said.

Last semester SCERA sent surveys to women students in the dorms. The surveys were designed to find out the amount of individual exposure to sexual harassment on campus. According to Bagli the response was strong. "We found out a lot of women were very angry," she said.

The women who conducted the survey left school and SCERA is currently trying to obtain conclusive results.

UM prof questions energy alternatives

By JUDY JASUREK
Collegian Correspondent

Wood burning in the home may cause cancer, and other alternatives to nuclea energy have risks associated with them, says University of Massachusetts public health professor Howard Peters. Peters, who is acting chairman of the Environmental Health department, said "Coal and oil burning plants may be more radioactive than any properly working nuclear power plant, although they are not without the potential for a major nuclear accident."

"No source of energy is without risks," said Peters.

There and other findings about coal, oil, solar power, natural gas, and windpower were presented at a recent National Air Pollution Control Association Conference in Montreal that Peters attended.

Peters, who said he is unbiased about the various energy sources, wants people to weigh all the facts concerning energy.

Wood burning in the home emitts soot and carbon monoxide, both of which are known lung irritants. It also emits hydrocarbons, some of which are known to cause cancer, Peters said.

According to the experts' findings from the conference in Montreal, wood burning stoves in the home are more dangerous than diesel fueled cars as far as air polluting goes.

Peters also said most air pollutants are harmful to the lungs and believed to result in bronchitis, emphysema, as well as lung cancer. Pollution first breaks down the health of a person with a chronic disease and it can be detrimental to a normal person under prolonged exposures.

"Coal is a dirtier fuel than wood," says Peters because it emits sulfur oxide as well as hydrocarbons both of whch are irritable to the lungs.

The cause of the acid-rains that are believed to have reduced the number of fish in lakes of the northeastern U.S. and caused problems with soil is being attributed to the large coal plants of the midwest, particularly in Ohio, Indiana, and Pennsylvania, Peters said.

Coal and oil contain radium and uranium from the ground and in large scale use of these fuels, emit radiation, said Peters. "This doesn't mean that nuclear energy doesn't have its problems," he added.

Solar power and natural gas are relatively clean power once they have been installed, but the dangers associated with these are in the production of them, said Peters.

He also said that there are dangers in handling vast amounts of silicon chips for photovoltaic cells, copper tubing, aluminum, steel and plastics, which are used in solar energy.

The batteries that store power from the sun, release "explosive and dangerous gases," namely ozone and hydrogen when they are recharged, Peters added.

UMass police busy over rowdy weekend

By JANE M. DEVIRGILIO
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts police had an unusually active weekend with problems of vandalism, drunkeness, and "general rowdiness" although there were no arrests made, according to UMass Seargeant Michael Grader.

Grader said the problems are all due "basically to alcohol" and that "if this weekend is an indication of what the semester will be like, we will have some problems."

He cited areas of campus where there was toilet paper strung from the trees, numerous beer bottles littering the sidewalks and grounds, and destruction to dormitory buildings.

"I saw about three hundred beer bottles on the pyramid in Southwest and several window screens were pushed right out in Northeast, Grader said. It was really bad."

False fire alarms were reported over the weekend in Pierpont, Brown, Baker, Moore, and Washington dormitories, according to police.

Grader said police also had problems with the new help phones. "We got people just calling up, saying a nasty word or two. and then hanging up, " he said. So far, none of the phones have been vandalized, he added.

Police said most of the activity occurred this weekend in off-campus apartment complexes with groups of people dispersing and later regathering at different apartment buildings.

An overheated electrical motor brought the Amherst Fire Department to the University of Massachusetts campus Friday morning after heavy smoke was reported in the Marshall Hall Annex.

Carpenters entering the Annex called the fire department after smelling a strong smoke odor.

The fire department responded at 10:50 a.m. to find "a considerable amount of smoke" in a basement crawl space. UMass Fire Inspector David Bowder sounded the building's fire alarm alerting the people in the building.

Damage to the North Pleasant Street structure was restricted to the crawl space and reported to be superficial. The fire was not of "suspicious origin" and will not be investigated, according to Sgt. Michael Grader of the UMass police.

An over-heated electrical motor in the crawl space was the source of the smoke according to Deputy Fire Chief Casmir Ziomeck. Fire fighters had the situation under control in about 20 minutes.

Classes scheduled for the building will still be held in the facility because of the minimal amount of damage to it.

No flames actually developed, said Ziomeck.

Hostage release to be debated

(AP) The Iranian Parliament voted to open debate Tuesday on the fate of the American hostages, less than a week after Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini appeared to change the climate of the crisis by issuing a modified list of conditions for the Americans' release.

Fighting along the Iran-Iraq border continued, and Iranian President Bani-Sadr and Iranian Prime Minister Mohammad Ali Rajai escaped unharmed when an Iraqi jet fighter attacked their helicopter as they toured the troubled border, the official Iranian news agency Pars reported.

,Khomeini, Iran's revolutionary leader, has given the Parliament final authority over the hostages, who spent their 316th day in captivity yesterday.

The ayatollah on Friday outlined conditions for their release, a list that heartened some U.S. observers because it omitted the previously demanded apology from the United States a term President Carter had rejected.

Some officials in Washington, who asked not to be identified, said Khomeini's four conditions were the first real sign that resolution of the crisis was in sight.

Former Iranian Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh said Khomeini had "unlocked" the barrier to a settlement.

Ghotbzadeh, in an interview with a French radio station Saturday, also said a message from U.S. Secretary of State Edmund S. Muskie urging the opening of negotiations on the hostages was well received by Parliament.

The conditions Khomeini listed were:

Release of about $8 billion in Iranian funds frozen by Carter after the embassy takeover Nov. 4.

Guarantees by the United States that it will not interfere in Iran's internal affairs.

Suspension of all U.S. claims against Iran, an apparent reference to a U.S. suit before the World Court at The Hague, Netherlands, seeking release of the hostages and damages.

Return to Iran of what the Iranians claim is a fortune the late Shah Mohammad Reza Phalavi transferred out of the country before he was driven into exile.

Some U.S. officials say only the last condition would be difficult to meet because most of the shah's money was deposited in Swiss banks over which the United States has no authority.

Local man injured

By BILL HALLISAY
Collegian Staff

A Northampton man sustained damage to his right eye being struck with a beer glass shortly before midnight last Thursday at Poor Richard's Discotheque on Belchetown Road, Amherst, Amherst police said.

Police said the victim was hit with the glass following an argument with another man. The glass shattered causing facial injuries that require 31 stitches.

Melvin Gomez, 26, of 51 William Sand Road, Springfield, was arrested Friday afternoon in connection with the incident for assault and battery with a dangerous weapon. Gomez is being held a Hampshire county jail where his bail is set at $5000. He was arraigned this morning at Northampton District Court.

Diane Gabis, 28, of 83 Wendell Road, Shutesbury was arraigned Friday morning at Hampshire District Court on a complaint of driving while intoxicated.

Her arrest followed a Thursday evening auto accident at the junction of North East Street and Main Street in Amherst. Police said Gabis's vehicle failed to stop for a stop sign on North East Street and collided with another car operated by Kim A. Whittiker, 23, of Durant Road, South Weymouth. Both cars were damaged considerably but police reported no injuries.

Pastiche offers new wave of New Wave

By ROBERT B. CARGILL

Pastiche with the Trademarks
Hatch Cafeteria
Sept. 13

Leaving behind them a summertime wake of well-deserved recognition in the Boston area, Pastiche rode into Amherst Saturday night on not only the crest of the local New Wave movement in general, but their very own "wave," one which will undoubtedly take them in any direction they choose.

Pastiche know where they're going. Copping last July's WBCN-FM sponsored "Second Annual Rock 'N' Roll Rumble" held at Boston's Rat (and defeating 23 other solid Boston bands in the process), Pastiche have a three-song EP out entitled "Wicked Intense!" containing nothing but sizzling material, and are due back in the studio within the next month to work on another single, probably containing "Like I Always Do" and an as-yet-undecided-upon second track.

But there was nothing indecisive about their performance Saturday night before some 600 dancing enthusiasts at the Hatch cafeteria. Led by a gesturing lead singer, Ken Scales, and the indomitable presence of lead guitarist and group-founder, Mr. Curt, Pastiche "pulled out all the plugs" and let loose with one "helluva" show, electrifying in its originality; exhilarating in its intensity. Pastiche proved their songs can run a gamut from reggae ("Lock it Up") to the super-punkish "I'm Going Blind," which was for "all you students alone in your dorm rooms at night." Basically, Pastiche sticks with a brand of music which is undefined in classification and certainly unrestrained in delivery.

Scales' stage antics as the chief vocalist and indisputable center of attention (shaved scalp, lurking eyes) added a "wicked intensity" to the lyrics of Mr. Curt and the musical backdrop of Brad Hallen 'bass,' Ron Marinick 'keyboards,' and Rick Martin on drums. Scales sang about his band's hometown in more than one number, combining his consistently eerie mannerisms with a conviction in voice that's simply got to be heard to be believed. When he proclaims that Boston's "got Thrills, chills, and Dirty Water/What more do you need?" one's inclined to join in which him whether you're from The Hub or not.

After a strong first set nailed down by an abrupt-though-squeaky-clean "Terminal Barbershop," Pastiche came back for a stinging-sweat-provoking final set, including covers of The Who's "Can't Explain," The Byrds' "Rock 'N' Roll Star," Jonathan Richmond's "Roadrunner," and the infamous Sex Pistols' "Holidays In The Sun." Their "ace in the hole," "Talk Show," (WBCN's Most Played Local Music this summer), received its usual ovation on this, its second take of the night, as did the band on this, their first UMass appearance.

As an ominous-sounding Ken Scales concluded the chorus of 'Boston Lullabye" during the group's opening set, he told the packed house "when the big-beat hits ya/It's like the 'T' at full speed....." Pastiche are unquestionably the "big beat."

As the "warm-up" act, The Trademarks sent forth a solid, upbeat sound, inspired by the pairing of co-lead guitarists and vocalists Dave Morrison and Matt Langone. They have a fascination for mid-sixties rock which definitely influences their style, but takes nothing away from their New Wave posturing. Thus, their set was well received, an indication that their upcoming single, "Run For Your Life" and "Magic In Her Eyes" (easily their best song of the night), should sell quickly. Fanatics of the rock-club circuit, The Trademarks could be breaking in as regular "headliners" very shortly.

The 'Hoods' and the hoods take over the Hatch

The Neighborhoods with the Trademarks
Hatch Cafeteria
Sept. 12

Cramming throught the crowd, this writer entered the "Hatch" early sandwiched between people slowly inching through the door past the rude and agressive bouncers. They were the typical Masta Beta Smegma-types who cause more violence than they prevent.

Two doors were broken that night, due to the frustrations of the crowd of people trying to get in.

Once inside, the punk atmosphere this writer expected was pretty sparce, but prevailed by the end of the Neighorhood's set.

Opening the show was Trademarks a mod-type group-leaning toward plain rock and roll. Their continual array of originals as well as covers was impressive though the crowd seemed fairly blase. Only a few people were dancing up til their last song, when a decent number were inspired beyond a foot-tap.

At one point the lead guitarist asked the audience, "Way out here in the middle of nowhere, how do you guys (sic) use up your extra energy?" Apparently everyone was saving it for the Neighborhoods. By the time they began playing, half the audience was pushed up against the stage or standing on tables and chairs.

A three-man band, the Neighborhoods bounced up on stage and kept up the pace throughout their set. They opened with "No Place Like Home" from the flip-side of their 45, and skipped through number after number with a few short breaks between songs.

During the breaks Guitarist David Minehan (Minimum) queried about the division separating alcohol drinkers and non-drinkers. After asking the audience if it was divided between the Catholics and Prods, or rich and poor, he got his answer when the alcohol side raised their beer pitchers.

They performed "Prettiest Girl" from their 45, which has gotten some radio play. Every number was well calculated right up to coordinated scissors-snaps between guitarist "Minimum" and bassist John Hartcorn. The 'Hoods have an impressive, full three-man sound.

The musical skill of the band members went beyond the simple, danceable punk themes. Their stage presense and confidence was admirable, and an exciting moment was when David Minehan spontaneously stepped out of the rehearsed medley into an old Sex Pistols tune, "God Save the Queen."

Another surprise came with the band's two encores, "Twist and Shout" and "I Can't Explain." Reminiscent of The Who, drummer "Cuaglia Mike" Cuaglia did a Keith Moon and violently kicked down his drum set, abruptly ending the concert during "I Can't Explain."

The audience was definitely twisting and shouting.

Register to vote for political results

"Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of their country."

Across America, young men have been signing up for the draft registration. Many have done so. But, to the dismay of draft officials and politicians, a whopping 25 percent have failed to do so, according to recent polls. This, they say, is appalling.

What is even more appalling, is the numbers of people who have registered to vote. While 25 percent of young men felt strongly enough about their political beliefs to ignore the call for selective service registration, less than that number have registered to do anything about it.

Ed Levine

Even though it sounds phony and cliche, voting is a right, and a right not offered in too many places. By not voting, an open invitation is extended to the politicians to do whatever they please. People wonder why the young are always picked on and are the victims of legislative action. It'a mainly because the young do not vote, and so, do not force the politicians to respect them.

While lobbying and political pressure are the best methods of achieving political results, the existence of a large voting block should not be taken lightly. If a legislator knows there are a few million 18 to 20-year old voters out there watching him, he will be less inclined to vote for a measure they may not appreciate. If the voters aren't there, then the lawmaker is free to vote any way he wants, and rightly so.

There are numerous special interest voting blocks in this country. Labor unions, women, minorities, the elderly, business and issue-oriented groups all effect legislation and the seating of legislators. Only young people, the new voters, do not have a powerful voice in politics — and it's their own fault.

People who bitch about the way things are politically have no right to do so unless they have voted. For if one has the opportunity to vote, as does every American over the age of 18, one should excercise that chance. If the vote is not used, then the person only has himself to blame when something happens that he doesn't like.

An unused vote is a terrible waste. Naturally, some people choose not to excercise this right, and it's their right not to do so. But if one cares about the quality of his life, if he cares about what is happening around him and what is being done, then one should vote.

The true, ultimate power is in your hands.

Security check-out necessary

To the Editor:

Kathryn A. Grant's concern over the Office of Housing Security's new time clock procedure is not the first expression of doubt nor is it the last.

The reasons for implementation of this procedure are two-fold. The first stems from the basic purpose of the Office of Housing Security; to administrate a student run network of dorm security. In the past a telephone call made by a student supervisor at the end of shift verified the security receptionist's presence and state (awake, asleep, under the influence of drugs, etc.) This system proved to be ineffective. The new procedure will require receptionists to meet the student supervisor at one of the designated time clock locations.

The second reason embodies the solution to Ms. Grant's concern. A receptionist preparing to leave his/her dorm will be able to call a neighboring dorm's receptionist who will be walking to the same time clock location at the same time. A group of 10 to 20 men and women, depending on dorm area and night of the week, is certainly safe from any aggressor short of an organized attack force. Another advantage to this group system is that in time members of the security force will become acquainted with each other, increasing the degree of cohesion among security personnel.

This change is designed to increase the effectiveness of a system that benefits each of us—our dorm lifestyles as well as employment opportunities. Employment opportunities brings another facet of this argument to mind. The position of security receptionist has a job description which each receptionist hired this year has read and signed. If the duties outlined in this description are not performed by a receptionist the services of said receptionist will no longer be needed.

U.S. history: interventionism

To the Editor:

A thorough critique of Mr. Stephen Geiger's guest editorial would fill the pages of the Collegian, without advertisements. That being an impossibility, I wish to call him on one point only. This point is the double standard that he applies to the U.S., and the Soviet Union (Russia, by the way, is a misnomer).

There is no doubt in Mr. Geiger's mind that the Soviet Union is expansionist and imperialist. This is not a point of contention between us. Yet, no such adjectives are used to described U.S. foreign policy, particularly when he explains that the U.S. imports 80 percent of Africa's minerals. It is no coincidence that he neglects any mention of present social conditions in South Africa.

His utter ignorance of our nations' history is appalling, and almost frightening. Don't take my word on this. Let us hearken to the words of former U.S. leaders, businessmen, and policy-shapers.

"We in the West...want the world's wide market."
Rep. Wm. Watson Wick
of Idaho, 1846

"We are on the threshold, in my judgement, of a development outward, of a contest for the commerce of the world."
Sen. Preston B. Plumb
of Kansas, 1894

"I am an exporter, I want the world."
Charles L. Lovering
Mass. Textile executive, 1890

"Our domestic markets no longer suffice. We need foreign markets."
Woodrow Wilson, 1912

"Fate has written our policy for us; the trade of the world must be ours."
Albert J. Beveridge, 1897

"...the doors of the nations which are closed must be battered down."
Woodrow Wilson, 1907

I would suggest that it is for the reasons enumerated above, not some Communist threat, that the U.S. has a history of intervention in the affairs of other nations (i.e. imperialism). Note that all quotes are taken from before the Russian revolution of 1917. It is my contention that it is the internal logic of capitalism (rather than the containment of Communism) that has driven the U.S. to send armed forces into Nicaragua (1930's), Guatemala (1954), the Dominican Republic (1965), Vietnam (1960's and '70's), El Salvador (1980), and so forth.

It seems paradoxical to me that in order to "save democracy," our C.I.A. has been instrumental in undermining democratically elected governments in Brazil (1964), and Chile (1973). It seems that Mr. Geiger considers U.S. access to the wealth of other nations among "our rights" which we must register (for the draft) to protect. Apparently it is our Manifest Destiny that entitles our country, as 6 percent of the world's population, to control 30 percent of the world's resources.

I believe that Mr. Geiger is a True American: over-privileged, arrogant, and short-sighted. The inability of U.S. foreign policy to undercut or derail popular movements in Cuba, Vietnam, Nicaragua, Iran, Grenada, and El Salvador has led to a resurgence of Cold War rhetoric, militarism, and the raising of the Soviet spector. The means of preserving "our" affluence has entailed U.S. support for the most ruthless of sub-fascist dictatorships, particularly in Latin America. The basic freedoms, which Mr. Geiger holds so dear, are systematically denied to people of other nations, where U.S.-based corporations require a "stable investment climate. Again, don't just take my word. Check me out. Was it not Phillip Agee (an ex-C.I.A. officer) who said that the C.I.A. operates at night, so that U.S. corporations can do business during the day?

I implore Mr. Geiger, and others who share his perspective, to study the history of our nation more closely and critically, before unreflectively asserting that the U.S. is a benevolent bulwark against Communism, and the worldwide defender of democracy.

KKK scorned; not welcome

On Saturday, Bill Wilkinson, Imperial Wizard of the Invisible Empire of the Ku Klux Klan, 45 fellow klansmen and 350 supporters met in the small Connecticut town of Scotland, chanted slogans of white supremacy, burned a cross and scuffled with some of the 450 demonstrators who came in protest.

The appearance of the Klan in the Northeast signals an attempt by Wilkinson and other Klan leaders to broaden the reach of organized race hatred and bigotry into areas where they believe it has a chance of gaining popular acceptance—in and around the communities of the white poor.

The Klan's appeal to racism has historically been confined to areas of the South (particularly Lousiana, Georgia and Mississippi) where the organization was founded during the depression following the Civil War, by confederate veterans and their families suffering from high unemployment and poverty at the demise of the slave-dependent plantation economy on which they had before prospered. They feared the emancipated blacks; the Ku Klux Klan was formed to organized the scapegoating of blacks, blaming them for problems caused by failures of the South's political economy.

During subsequent economic depressions the Klan's membership has risen, and fallen in times of prosperity, recently extending into regions of the Northwest. Each time, the Klan chose new enemies—Irish, Jews, Communists—depending on what group was popularly, though erroneously, perceived as the root of the economy's failure. They claimed themselves as an "institution of chivalry, humanity, mercy and patriotism."

This time around, with the U.S. economy set on a crumbling debt structure, suffering from low industrial productivity, high inflation, unemployment and severe economic and military international instability, the Klan has maintained as a brutally oversimplified, hopeless and loathsome cure the supremacy of the white race in political and economic power.

Bill Wilkinson was not well received in Scotland, Connecticut. In fact he was arrested Sunday for illegal possession of firearms—a .45 pistol he had in his briefcase in violation of a town ordinance of which he was aware.

The townspeople did not want him there. They demonstrated peacefully in protest of the Klan's ethos, were horrified by their presence. If the Klan were to come to Amherst, how would they be received here? For the sake of blacks and all third world people, of the future of our community and nation—of humanity—we pray no member of the Klan be given the dignity of setting foot inside our town's boarders.

cant because it was part of the official democratic party position," Jacques said.

The plank supported by the campaign called for suspending the issuance of permits to new nuclear plants until strict new safety standards are met, and puts the Democratic party on record in favor of retiring all existing nuclear plants as alternative fuels become available in the future, Jacques said.

Two solar energy reports also emerged from the platform committee, one majority and one minority. The solar energy proponents had enough support at the convention, so that Carter's hand was forced to let the group have a speaker at the convention. The speaker was Representative Edward Markey from Malden, who had sponsored the first bill calling for a moratorium on nuclear plants being built, Ward said.

Now, the Campaign for Safe Energy is gearing its efforts toward national congressional elections, on the statewide level, Ward said.

Ward defined the group's strategy for the next three years: "We have the Safe Energy platform on 33 senatorial and representative districts in Massachusetts alone this year. This is a referendum just asking the people if they want nuclear power or some alternative. It would not become law. But a good reaction would help us with both lobbying and organizational efforts. In a couple of years we hope to push for a statewide initiative on the issue, which would have the power to become law."

★SCERA

Presently, if a student has a sexual harassment grievance they file a complaint with the Ombudsman's office. SCERA can only act as a referral service. At present there is no established grievance procedure.

SCERA has written a grievance procedure with the assistance of the Legal Services Office. The document has been approved by the Undergraduate and Graduate Student Senate. It has not been presented to the Administration, however.

Bagli said the grievance procedure was written without meeting first with the Administration and faculty because of complexities involving the union.

"We didn't want to get involved with the Union. At that time we didn't know what that would entail. We didn't know if we as students could get involved with that process," Bagli said.

Since the procedure of union negotiations exists, the Women's Issues Teams has been encouraged to meet with the Administration and faculty. "We want to establish one grievance procedure, affecting students, faculty, and the Administration," Bagli said.

Mandatory RSO Workshops

The Student Activities Business Office in conjunction with the SGA Treasurer's Office will be conducting workshops for all RSO Group Treasurer and officers who have been given signature power. . .entrusted with organizational funds. These workshops MUST be attended prior to your being able to initiate any financial documents. Workshops will be held as follows:

Groups	Time (P.M.)	Date	C.C. Rooms
Non-SATF Funded	3-4 4-5	Tues 16 Sept	CC 162
Stockbridge	3-4 4-5	Thur 11 Sept	CC 904
Any Group	3-4 4-5	Wed 17 Sept	CC 162
Any Group	3-4 4-5	Thur 18 Sept	CC 162

If an individual cannot make the scheduled meetings for their particular group, attendance at any one of the sessions will suffice. The sessions will review the financial responsibilities and requirements placed on each RSO. There will be a discussion of all new policies placed on each RSO. There will be a discussion of all new policies and procedures and the impact of the "new accounting" procedures.

ARMY ROTC

Pats lose second, now 1-1

FOXBORO, Mass. AP — Steve Bartkowski rifled three touchdown passes, two of them in the second quarter to top draft choice Junior Miller, and William Andrews rushed for 124 yards and one touchdown to lead the Atlanta Falcons to a 37-21 National Football League victory Sunday over the New England Patriots.

The outcome evened both teams records at 1-1.

With the score tied 14-14, Atlanta took the lead for good as Bartkowski combined with Miller for a 12-yard touchdown to cap an 80-yard drive with 7:45 left in the first half. Miller caught the ball at the New England 10 yard line and went into the end zone as cornerbacks Ray Clayborn and Rick Sanford collided

Bartkowski hit on five of seven passes during the drive. Four completions went for first downs, including consecutive passes of 13 yards to Alfred Jackson to bring the ball to the New England 34 and 25 yards to Miller to set the ball up at the nine two plays before the touchdown.

Miller grabbed his second touchdown pass just 4:34 after his first score. The rookie from Nebraska caught the ball at the five and romped in for a 22-yard scoring play that made the score 28-14.

Bartkowski's first touchdown pass was a 28-yarder to Wallace Francis that broke a 7-7 tie late in the first quarter.

Yankees sweep series

BOSTON AP — Bucky Dent and Aurelio Rodriguez lined two-run homers and Eric Sonderholm drilled a solo shot as a pinch-hitter yesterday, powering the New York Yankees to a 5-3 victory and a sweep of their four-game series with the Boston Red Sox.

Reliever Ron Davis, 8-3, who replaced starter Gaylord Perry in the fifth, picked up the victory as the Yankees fashioned their fifth consecutive victory and 13th in 15 games.

Dent belted his fifth homer in the fifth inning, erasing a 1-0 lead, after Rick Cerone opened the inning with a walk off Boston starter Dennis Eckersley, 10-13. Eckersley walked Dent with two out in the sixth and Rodriguez followed with his second homer into the screen in left-center.

Sonderholm hit his eighth homer of the season off Tom Burgmeier in the seventh.

Alex Eldridge

To Alex, from a friend

By STEVE ZACK
Special to the Collegian

During the summer, on June 27, tragedy struck the UMass campus when former basketball star Alex Eldridge died suddenly, the result of a blood clot which traveled from Eldridge's leg to his heart.

It is hard to put into words what one feels towards another, especially a close friend. Through the years I came to appreciate Alex not only for his on-court talents but as a companion.

His wizardry on the basketball court was something to marvel at. His ability to control a game, to make that crucial game-winning pass or score the winning bucket were but a mask covering what a truly compassionate person Eldridge was.

Some took his silence to be that of disrespect, his court gestures to be that of an overconfident sort, but that is not so.

His silent nature was simply his way, choosing to speak only when he had something of importance to put forth. His court tactics, merely a way to win the game and the hearts of the UMass basketball followers.

His untimely death leaves us all at a great loss but his memory will always be with us.

ZooDisc tallies loss to Boston

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

ZooDisc brought its record to an even 1-1 with a hard loss to Boston Aerodisc Saturday afternoon on the grass across from Southwest. UMass kept up with Boston Aerodisc for most of the first half but 11 consecutive touchdowns starting late in the first half gave the Bostonians a 21-8 win.

"Our biggest problem was our defense," player/coach Pete Holschuh said. "We weren't picking up quick enough. We were also a little overconfident because of Hampshire." (UMass defeated Hampshire College Wednesday).

Boston Aerodisc tallied the first three scores in a game played to 21, without kept time. Gary Rotatori put ZooDisc on the board when he caught a long pass from Larry Denaro. Denaro got posession of the disc after forcing a Boston turnover. Denaro connected with Rotatori again midway through the first half for ZooDisc goal number six.

Dean Cretsinger was one bright spot on the UMass defense, early in the game he batted down a Boston pass preventing a touchdown and he was involved in two UMass scores. Cretsinger passed to co-captain Joel Zuckerman for ZooDisc's second TD and caught a pass from Jim Melody to score number five.

Keene State break.

After an Owl tally at 29:46 of the first half on an attempted pass which deflected into the net off a UMass defender, the Minutemen came roaring back. MESSRS. Dias and Dias combined on a pretty pass play to the left of the Keene goal, with Tony M. sliding the ball past a bewildered Dietrich, to knot the game at two.

The Minutemen opened the second half at a sluggish pace. Keene began to turn things around, as they hemmed UMass in their own end, taking total control of the ball and the game. Just as the Minutemen had done in the first half, Keene strikers and midfielders were pushing UMass off the ball, giving them little chance to move upfield.

Finnally the opportunity of the series konked UMass on the head. Keene goalie Dietrich was injured in a collision with Tony M. Dias, and was forced to leave the game. Enter freshman goalie Merolla, and a wealth of UMass opportunities. Things seemed to be looking up for the Minutemen, as Tony G. Dias fired a drive by the new goalie, but the score was disallowed by the referee, who ruled a UMass player offside.

Finally, after the Minutemen had dipped into a severe stand-still, unable to get even a semblance of a shot away at Merolla, Runeare, in a crowd of Keene players, lined a shot past the screened Keene netminder, giving UMass a much deserved win.

The UMass soccer team opens its home season Thurs. at 3p.m. against Bridgeport.

Booters split pair in tourney

BY SCOTT SOLOMON
Collegian Staff

After being beaten 5-1 by perennial powerhouse Davis and Elkins College on Saturday, the UMass men's soccer team, on a Mike Runeare goal at 30:38 of the second half, squeaked past Keene State College,3-2, to earn a consolation victory at the Sumner Joyce Invitational Tournament yesterday.

The goal came after the Minutemen had peppered Keene goalie Toby Merolla with an arsenal of shots. Runeare picked up a loose rebound in front and blasted it past the Owl netminder. The 6'1" Merolla had entered the game just minutes earlier, replacing injured Keene starter Kyle Dietrich.

"This is probably the worst start we've had in my ten years here," said Keene State Coach Ron Butcher, whose team dropped a 2-0 decision to Central Connecticut State College the day before, to finish the tournament at 0-2. "There's nowhere to go but up."

Butcher's club pressured the Minutemenn early and often in the contest but UMass goalie Matt Esteves was equal to the test. The junior goaltender showed his prowess from the opening kick, as he smothered a Bill Scott drive off a direct kick, foiling the Keene offensive attack.

The Owls broke the scoreless drought at 10:15 of the first half, as Tony Pearce punched in a Kevin Forgeron corner kick, putting Keene State ahead, 1-0.

Two minutes later the Minutemen got lucky. Doug White pushed the ball across to Tony M. Dias, who got off a half shot at Dietrich, As the ball broke in on the Keene goalie he fell, and the ball trickled by him into the net, evening the score at 1-1.

With the goal, the Minutemen suddenly caught fire, as they began to put pressure on the Owls, continually penning them in their own end. It was a strategy the UMass had failed to use the day before against Davis and Elkins, and one that seemingly paid off. As soon as the visitors got the ball they dumped it into the Keene end and followed it, setting up a semi-circle of offensive power. But while the offensive pressure was being exerted by the Minutemen, the defense was getting trapped upfield, helpless against the

Umie Gridders downed by Big Green

By JONATHAN HAMILTON

Hanover, N.H. In what was the first real look at this year's edition of Minuteman football, UMass fans left here Saturday with mixed feelings. For it was not the defense that questions were largely raised, but rather the offense, which at best sputtered throughout the afternoon.

The Big Green of Dartmouth, cashing in on good field position the entire day (a direct result of UMass' innability to move the ball) finally struck late in the second half tallying three touchdowns and came away a 20-0 scrimmage victor.

"I'm pleased with our defense today. We came here to hit and we did."
-Pickett

The UMass defense was superb thwarting Dartmouth scoring drives as they neared the goal line in the first half. But in the second half, as Head Coach Bob Pickett cleared his bench with his second defense, mistakes began to plague the defensive corps. Late in the third quarter a short punt (the punting was a problem all day as were two snaps) and a late hit on a fair catch moved the ball deep into UMass territory. From there, Jeff Kemp the Big Green quarterback, found Dave Shula (yes, it's Don's son) near the 8-yard line. Three plays later, Kemp rolled right and scampered in for the score.

Early in the fourth period, again aided by poor punting, Dartmouth again marched deep in UMass territory. This time a sweep right produced a 16 yard touchdown run by Dartmouth's Rich Lena and a 14-0 lead after the two-point conversion was good.

Finally a lapse by the UMass defensive secondary accounted for the final Dartmouth score. Quarterback Joe McLaughlin connected with Lena for a screen pass that left a gaping hole out in the flat around the Dartmouth 25 yard line. Lena saw the daylight and raced 72 yards unmolested for the score. The two point conversion was missed and the final score remained 20-0.

But the scoring that took place seemed secondary to Pickett.

"They didn't score on our first defense. We came here to hit and we did. I'm pleased with our defense today." He was though concerned with the lack of consistency the offense displayed. "I'm disappointed that the offense couldn't move the ball. We had to stay on the ground because of the bad field position we had. On the ground we stayed inside mostly."

Pickett's comments were accurate. Offensively UMass looked sluggish as Fontaine did not mix his plays well. Brian Heyworth ran well inside and Gary Pearson ran well outside only to have one 20 yard pick-up nullified because of a clipping penalty. Second-string quarterback Dean Pecevich started the second half with a good drive to mid-field only to see it stalled. Defensively the pass rush led by Frank and Peter DiTommaso and George Lewis pressured Kemp all day. Bob Manning and Dwayne Lopes had good outings in the secondary. Lopes, in fact, took a pass away from Shula for a big interception near the UMass goal line.

"The kicking game hurt us today," added Pickett referring to Fontaine's shaky punting during the game. In the end Pickett mused philosophically, "I'm pleased with some things we did today, and not so pleased with others."

Women booters finish 2nd

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Though ending up with a 2-0-1 record, the women's soccer team finished second to the University of Connecticut at the Plymouth State Tournament in New Hampshire on Saturday.

Throughout the day, UMass and UConn blanked their opponents by the same scores. In the first of these 60-minute matches, UMass blanked New Hampshire2-0, while UConn shut out Plymouth State 2-0. When they faced each other, UMass and UConn shut out Plymouth State 2-0. When they faced each other, UMass and UConn battled to a scoreless tie. It was in the third and final matchup that determined the winner, for the team that scored the most goals became the tourney champion. While the Minutewomen defeated Plymouth State 3-0, UConn downed UNH 4-0, therby winning the championship.

Despite losing the title they posessed for the past two years, UMass did recieve the honor of having the two top players named for Most Valuble Player. The coaches chose sophmore Nina Holstrom as MVP, with teamate Maddie Mangini in second.

Mangini and Natalie Prosser led the Minutewomen with two goals apiece. Nancy Feldman booted in one goal for UMass.

Coach Kalekeni Banda said UConn had improved from last year, and that they deserved to win. Also, he mentioned some of the problems facing UMass for the past few weeks.

"We did not have as much practice time as the other teams," said Banda, "the water crisis cut our time. We have some things to work on, but the team concept is coming along fine. These are not selfish players. They pass the ball whenever they can. Sometimes, I think they are a little too unselfish, because they pass the ball when they have a shot on goal, and I say,'Wait a minute'."

"We outshot everybody, but we shot not from the right area. Our defense was excellent, but our offense needs a little more work," he said.

UMass will have its first home game of the season on September 24, when they host Westfield State at 3:30 p.m.

Spikers lose at UNH, but remain optimistic

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

It was a day of frustration and some disappointment for the women's volleyball team Saturday. Expected to do well at the University of New Hampshire Invitational, UMass ended up losing all three of its matches.

Against Bates College, the Minutewomen had difficulty setting up their offense, especially in the serve. UMass fell in the best-of-three contest 8-15, 11-15.

Providence College, who eventually placed second in the tourney to the University of Rhode Island, was the next team to take advantage of UMass' improving but still inconsistent offense. The lady Friars took the match 11-15, 5-15.

Though losing four games, the Minutewomen were getting better as the day progressed. Their defense stayed sharp throughout the tourney, and their offense was taking shape. UMass played the University of Connecticut with some of their best volleyball of the day. However, after losing the first game 11-15 UMass began to feel the frustration and mental fatigue; they droppeo the final game of the match and of the day 6-15.

Despite the outcome, UMass coach Elaine Marasco felt that her team's mistakes are not permanent, as they were playing the first matches of the season and having new personnel on the court.

"I realize there's a lot of inexperience on the team," said Marasco, "but I still feel we'll go a long way once we get our offense straight. I was pretty confident of the way we got better with every match. If we had gotten poorer or stayed the same, I would've been a little upset. We looked real good against UConn, but we lost not because of physical fatigue, but from a psychological fatigue."

Senior player Peggy Barber said she and her teammates were not disillusioned by their sub-par showing, though a little disappointed.

"We were running a complicated offense," said Barber, "and we didn't play it too well, though I think our defense was pretty good for this early in the season. The problem was that the other teams were using a simpler offense and had it down, while we didn't. We were uptight, but we got better towards the end."

UMass will have one week to remove the bugs from its game, as it will be hosting the UMass Invitational this coming weekend. Among the teams participating in the tourney will be Southern Connecticut State College, Colgate University, Central Connecticut State College and UConn. Unlike its previous matches, most of the play will be in Boyden Gym, with the finals of the Invitational either in Boyden or in NOPE.

WELCOME BACK

It should have come to no surprise when man and nature decided to vent their anger together in a violent demonstration of disgust over oppression and pollution On a weekend in May of 1980, Mount Saint Helens and Miami Blacks erupted simultaneously. This writing however, is not about the volcano but the volcanic eruptions that shocked again an insensitive and unaware white America. As in the 1960's, whites are hiring all sorts of experts to study why such eruptions happen and quietly; obsessively purchase weapons to train against the Black victims of their prized American System. Too often even among ourselves we don't feel the severity of it since we are living and learning in Amherst. We don't have to pass thousands of teenagers without jobs and sometimes without homes. We don't have to smell the burned-out houses devastated by arson for hire to collect a benefit that all too often is at the expense of sleeping and unsuspecting tenents. To most folks these are the faceless masses that "one day" will recieve justice. That "one day" has turned into centuries of unbriddled brutality and discrimination. America has a race of over 50 million Blacks in this country who have lost faith in a system that was designed to exploit, oppress and degrade them, while promising "Justice for All."

This past week marks the anniversary of the deaths of Seta Rampersad and Steven Biko. Seta in the Unitged States of America (USA) and Steven Biko in the Union of South Africa (USA). Both died at the hands of a racist insensitive system that regards the life of a black person as less than that of a white. Both died on a September day that can't over shadow the similarities of two societies founded upon the most racist nations on earth. So while many regarded the summer as a vacation others will remember it for the deaths and injustices that Black communities across this country had to endure.

While you were gone the murderers of Arthur McDuffy in Miami, Billy-Ray Kelly and Levi Hart in Boston, Julia Love in Los Angeles all were set free. They did not die alone William Green was murdered by Police in Philadelphia, Richard Ramey in Chicago, Ja-Wan McGee in Baltimore and all were unarmed. Just a few days ago a policemen's "service" revolver extinguished the life of a four month pregnant woman with four shots from a 357 magnum in Jackson Mississippi. With Police protection like this we are better off protected by Charlie Mansons'klan.

Speaking of klans, the Imperial Imbecile of the K.K.K., Bill Wilkinson will be in Connecticut this weekend to burn a cross for white folks rights. They probably decided to come to this area because they saw the last Spring Concert at U. Mass was encouraging since it was drapped from end to end with the flag of Dixie, which they traditionally fly. U.P.C. saw fit to encourage it all by bringing that group the Allman Brothers, the darlings of southern racists to this area to entertain those of such degenerate tastes.

We heard a lot about the tragedy of black folks burning up their communities but very little commentary over the on-the-spot executions by police for robbery, gas bills and smoking in elevators. Oh, and speaking of unheard of events does anyone remember 19 year old Michael Doherty ? He died March 28th, his mangled body wasn't discovered for two days because it was wedged between the guard rails on the median strip of the Southeast Expressway near exit 17 in Dorchester, Mass. Excuse me for not mentioning that he was white. He died because he attempted to rescue a black man being beaten in Columbia Station in Dorchester by four whites and so he also was extinguished before he had a chance to make the drinking age.

So this semester when you take some of the racist courses here praising America's free society under the obsenity of law called "academic freedom," and the superiority of capitalism over socialist countries like Cuba (being starved out by a twenty year economic embargo and the only country on the planet to outlaw by its constitution, Racism), think of those who will never make it here. And if you think that its not your worry and that hard work will immunize you from these summary executions or your degrees will keep the racists here and across the country from extinguishing your life - forget it. Remember too, that Theodore Landsmark the Black state street attorney in Boston with his briefcase, three piece suit and a Docterate of Juris Prudence was smashed in the face in front of Boston City Hall next to the "Freedom Trail" on July 4th 1976,with an American Flag pole to commemorate the Bicentennial. Remember Daryle Williams who lies totally paralysed from a bullet in the neck as the Pope of the Holy Roman Church paraded away from the Black Community to say a prayer for the preservation of American Democracy.

If you can manage to remember these events of American history then just maybe you will be able to read between the lines and see the meaning of the poem that says - That Justice is a blind Goddess - is a fact of which we Blacks are wise, her eyes hide two festering sores that once perhaps were eyes.

FIGHTING RACISM IN THE 1980'S

Many progressive political activists confuse racism with discrimination and make the mistake of confusing and limiting the Anti-Racist movement with the struggle against discrimination. While it is true that discrimination is a form of racism, mainly institutional racism, there are other far more dangerous and complex manifestations of racism that are not so easily identifiable and are much harder to attack. That is the racism which is a vital component of the European American economic structure (capitalism) and the Western cultural superstructure (the European-American philosphical world outlook).

Institutional racism manifests itself in the form of racial discrimination. In the majority of cases, those few African-Americans who are qualified for a certain category of work are selectively denied positions in certain firms or agencies because the hiring and employee promotion policies of those firms and agencies are racially biased against Blacks and other minority nationalities. Discrimination also manifests itself in the assignment of African-Americans lower positions in terms of catagories of work(often hard, dangerous and, or menial) and a lower pay scale. They are often show-token positions that appear to be progressive and impressive to outsiders and civil rights agencies, but in reality hold no authority, policy making or enforcement powers.

Institutional racism or discrimination is also present in the campus life of universities and colleges. It ranges from all the points expressed above but has special features particular to campus life, i.e., admissions policies, allocation of student funds and services (by the administration or the student governing body). It can develop and exist in much grosser forms by groups of white supremists who practice violence and symbolic terror (burning crosses, verbal harassement, racist graffitti, etc...) on Minority Nationalities. Then there is the attitudinal manifestations of racism as exhibited by the faculty, administrative staff etc.

The struggle against all these manifestations of institutional racism is in essence a struggle against discriminatory treatment and hence a struggle to reform the institutions' practices and policies. A struggle to reform racism is not aimed at the annihilation of an extremely ravenous enemy of the life and security of minority nationalities, but is an attempt to dull its sharp teeth, to make the racist accomodate the presence of others in sharing the economic and educational resources available in the society and on the campus. The vast majority of Black student struggles against racism on campus are of a reformist character. Although this type of struggle is reformist it can produce some positive results. Some concessions can be won from the institutional administrators. These struggles are necessary because they ease the cultural shock experienced by Black students and form as rallying points for fighting for political and economic demands, and generally make the life of the Black students on campus more copable.Unfortunately, these concessions are temporary and can be maintained only on a consistently declining scale over a period of time. Much courageous, brilliant, and dilligent work goes on to maintain what little was won in the past. Indeed the fights become harder as the purse shrinks. In struggling to maintain these concessions, anti-racist activists and student leaders need as much help and assistance as possible, but they must also understand that many of the forces they struggle against are beyond the control of their most vocal and visible opponents. These are the forces of the American and world capitalist system;modern racism cannot be defined isolated from the dominant economic system.

THIRD WORLD ORGANIZATIONAL FAIR

Thursday, September 11,1980 in the Campus Center The office of Third World Affairs sponsored a meeting geared for the third world community. Its intentions were informative and supportive of the Third World Organizations. Mitchell Smith a senior was the spokesman for the affair. There were short informative dialogues given by organizational representatives, explaining their groups functions and need for new enthusiatic recruits.

Tony Crayton, co-ordinator of the Office of Third World Affairs spoke. His primary emphasis centered around the dedication regarding participation in our community. After an intensive speech on how the system is effecting us as a people and all people he concluded by presenting to the audience a beautiful flag which consisted of the colors RED,BLACK, AND GREEN.(with Red and Green in the foreground and a Beautiful Black Star). Red stands for the blood of our people;Green for the rememberance of the motherland, and black for the souls and power of our peole.

Due to the fact that the system doesn't appreciate Third World unity we as a people seemed to be fading away from our proud heritage. This must be changed.

The highlight of the day was a guest speaker buy the name of Leslie McLemore, Congressional Candidate from Mississipi. His speech left a profound impression on the attentive audience that attended the Fair. His message to the community was the fact that all of us (students) in the university are coming from our communities (hometowns) to experiment with our ideas and goals. What we learn from our experiences is taken,at the time of graduation, to wherever we desire to begin our journey of independence and contribution. Mr. McLemore stressed the fact that we should bring our learning experiences and knowledge back to our Black communities to help our people surpass to blinded path of self-destruction this system is presently putting us in.

My personal regard to the issues:

1.We the Black community are away from home.

2.We must reserve in our minds why we are here. To achieve academic excellence and experience in dealing with people.

3.And with our achievements-take it home and develope them.

In this "dog-eatdog" society, I find man will kill family for money. We must learn to set our priorities and place our value of life on love.

We, the participators of this community thank you for your support.

RALLY FOR SETA

September 13th marked the second year anniversary of the death of Seta Rampersad. Seta, a 20 year old Black woman from UMASS was found dead in a South Deerfield motel. Those of you who are familiar with the case know the facts; however,according to the law, the subsequent inquest revealed nothing. The obvious discrepancies in witnesses' testimonies established nothing. Evidence of contusions, bruises and lacerations on Seta's body proved nothing. No charges have been brought against anyone, no sure cause of death established. And the case has been closed.

It reminds one of an incident that occurred in Boston earlier this year. On July 15th, Levi Hart, a 14 year old Black youth, was killed by rookie patrolman Richard Bourque, whoclaimed to have shot Hart accidentally while arresting him for alleged car theft that morning. An autopsy later revealed a skull fracture, caused by a blow from a blunt instrument, according to a state pathologist. Although the inquest report supported the likelihood of Bourque's lying, a Suffolk grand jury had already moved not to indict him. In response, last week the Hart family filed a $42 million suit against the killer, the police department and the city.

The Seta Rampersad case is similiar. On last Thursday afternoon around 50 marchers filed through the streets of Northampton in a memorial protest of her death. At Kowalski Park, several speeches and personal statements eulogized Seta, all questioning the veracity of the accounts of the circumstances surrounding her death. A candlelight vigil took place that evening at the Captains Table. I was personally disappointed with the small turnout for the rally. Understandably, classes and other appointments kept many would-be supporters away. However I cannot help but blame many others for initial non-interest and apathy in the case. Unfortunately, this isolated incident is not the first of local attacks on 3rd World persons:

In 1975 two Black UMASS students, Earl Brown and Craeman Gethers, were railroaded for the alleged robbery of a McDonald's even though no positive i.d. was made.

In the fall of 1977 a Black woman from UMASS, Jill Dickensen, was found beaten and seriously injured,her injuries resulting in partial paralysis.

In the winter of 1978, Jose Pontes was found sitting in his chair in a Southwest dorm, dead. Police alleged he hung himself(while sitting in the chair). According to Aquila Ayana, the new 3rd World woman's advocate-programmer at Everywoman's Center, a civil suit is being raised against three probable witnesses for negligent homicide. The suit will not be carried through unless the complacency is discarded and some protest is heard. It is obvious to me that the blatant injustices of the legal system will at some point directly confront you or I---whether you be of the working or middle class, whetheryou are 3rd World, gay, Black, white, or a woman. The reality of repressive acts such as this are EVIDENT. So let's see some outrage now. In the words of a brother at the rally,"...We may all be the victims...and it can happen to any one of us, any one of us at all

EDITORIAL

TO THE READERS OF NUMMO NEWS

NUMMO NEWS, a Third World newspaper, was formed in 1972 as a result of the systematic exclusion of oppressed people from the media in the United States. All one has to do is turn on the radio, television, or read a magazine to further substantiate this. The need for Nummo News is a result of the distortion of the imagery of Third World people, by the nation's media.

However, the system has effectively perversed the nation's media to such an extent that a college campus is only one of the few sanctuaries where the thoughts and perceptions of people from all over the world can be viewed, for the good of all, without being tainted by the ignorance and corruption that plagues much of the outside world. Today; Third World people are breaking away from the patterns of yesteryear, and forming a philosophy of their own. This philosophy comes from the souls of a people who represent two-thirds of the worlds population. NUMMO is one voice for millions of people who are demanding economic, social, and political equality. In defense of this philosophy, Nummo will not look to others for information concerning ourselves; for if we did, we would continue to be miss- informed and highly miss-educated.

Those who will read NUMMO will find that it is designed to enrich the intellectual, cultural, and socio-political conciencenessof its readers. For those who do not understand, NUMMO is the pen which the reader can possibly burst the dark bubble of fantasy with which he or she was brought up to believe. However, only the reader can use what we provide to burst that bubble. For those who nonchalantly discard NUMMO, they may later find their bubble burst...but by then, it may not be with a pen.

The staff of NUMMO NEWS will provide for its readers news, and news analysis from the viewpoints and perspectives of Third World people living within, and outside of the United States.

The staff of NUMMO wishes you a good year, and good reading .

WHO IS AN ARAB•

Who is an Arab• The Arab is no different from anybody else. He is deeply disturbed by the various challenges of our time. In he is part of the world. But to be part of the world is no longer a geographicand demographic reality. "Belonging" in ,the world has come to have a more significant meaning, It includes the Arab's response to the challenges, the manner in whichhe understands the world and the manner in which the world understands him. The cross-currents of ideas, ideologies, interests, and purposes allow neither a uniform Arab understanding of the world nor a uniform world understanding of the Arab. The Arab is the identity of those who are either, (A) citizens of the Arab state, (B) one of the millions of Palestinian refugees, (C) the inhabitants of an Arabterritory not free from colonial rule, and, (D) those who opt by free choice to belong to an Arab stste after normal conformity to the basic legal requirements of the state. These four main catagories exclude, of course, those of Arab origin who choose to settle in foreign territories and freely choose to belong racially to the Arab stock who have chosen to identify themselves and their poserity with the Arab destiny. In this definition of the Arab, the racialist image of the Arab is rejected and thenonracial character emphasized.

The Arab is not a term identical with a Muslim, because the elementary reality is that not every Arab is a Muslim and the great majority of the Muslims in the world are not Arabs. This is emphasized here because the secularand nonracist dimension of the Arab image are repeatedly blurred and distorted.

Having attempted to correct the distortion, it is important not to blur the image. The fact that the term Arab constitutes a majority of the Arab-population is what provides the Arab nation with its Arab heritage and culture. That this majority has been able to accept, accommodate, and assimilate different racial groups does not mean loss of its own color but its enrichment and ultimately the humanization of the Arab nation.

It is also necessary to mention here that the secularity of the Arab affirms the positive impact of Islam on his formation. It is not his total involvement, but Islam is part of the Arab's heritage, culture, history and civilization, whether the Arab is a muslim or not. This fact again testifies to the fundamental irrationality of those who seek to close religion in obscurantist and selfinterpretations. The Arabs consider Islam to be a revolutionary breakthrough, enabling them to mix, interact and associate more genuinely and constructively.

When the term Arab is defined in a rational and modern manner it is rather surprising that such an elementary issue should have been shelved for so long. It is argued; however, that not all those who proclaim their Arab identity agree with such a definition. That is true, but this definition radiates from a set of values which must be struggled for and which must find acceptance among the vital elementsof the racist or theocratic interpretation of "an Arab". The Lebanese or the Egyptian must declare his identity as an Arab and act as part of the vanguard which matches with these values and Nummo es el periódico de la comunidad tercermundista en UMass y el area de los cinco colegios. A pesar de que el mismo aparece incluido en las páginas del Collegian, Nummo es un periodico que se produce y edita independientemente del Collegian.

Nummo es el resultado de esfuerzos y lucha por parte de la comunidad afro-americana en UMass. Aunque este periodico siempre ha tenido una orientacion tercermundista el mismo antes se consideraba (por sus lectores) mas bien como la voz de la comunidad negra. Fue un sincero deseo de unidad y cooperacion lo que indujo a estudiantes negros, latinos y asiáticos a transformar a Nummo en la auténtica voz tercermundista en el area de los 5 colegios. Es el proposito de Nummo servir y defender los derechos de la comunidad tercermundista.

Los latinos como miembros de la comunidad (mundo) tercermundista tenemos nuestro medio de comunicación en Nummo. Eco Latino es la sección que se dedica a America Latina y el Caribe. Entendiendo el poder o alcance de este medio de comunicación nosotros queremos usar el mismo como vehículo para lograr la unidad social, cultural y política entre todos los iembros de nuestra comunidad.

Eco Latino es una sección bilingue con artículos relacionados con eventos sucedidos o por suceder en la comunidad hispana. Tambien Eço Latino contiene artículos de orientación cultural, poesías, y noticias en el aspecto politico de America Latina y el Caribe.

Son muchos los potenciales y alcance de NUmmo y Eco Latino; mas para lograr lo maximo necesitan de ti. El periodico precisa de personas que escriban articulos (conseguirlos o editarlos). Precisan tambien de personas interesadas en trabajar en el emplanaje, diseño y reproduccion fotografica. Te invitamos para que nos prestes tu participacion en cualquiera de los aspectos de la produccion del periodico. No se requiere que tengas experiencia en la produccion de un periodico para trabajar con nosotros. Solamente se requiere el deseo de aprender y colobarar en cualquier aspecto de la produccion. Nos puedes visitar en la oficina del Collegian los sabados y te ayudaremos a aprender.

Queremos señalar que existen posibilidades de pago para los que tengan work-study y quieran dedicar parte de su tiempo al periodico. Los que no tienen work-study pero quieren colobarorar se puede ganar creditos academicos. Si estas interesado(a) puedes llamar a Carlos Valdes al 549-6068 o a Gertrudis Garcia al 253-5589. Ellos te orientaran sobre el particular.

Recuerda que aunque no trabajes directamente en el periodico puedes lograr que tus articulos, poemas, dibujos, fotografias o cualquier contribucion aparezcan en estas paginas. Si tienes algo que quieres compartir con la comunidad tercermundista puedes depositarlo en el B.C.P o en New Africa House, salon103. Nosotros nos encargaremos de recoger tu contribucion (articulos, etc.) y lo publicaremos en el proximo numero de Nummo.

Plan de actividades para este semestre

Antes que nada queremos dar la bienvenida y saludo tanto a los nuevos estudiantes como a los antiguos compañeros. Queremos ampliar nuevamente nuestros lazos con otras organizaciones hispanas en los Cinco Colegios, con el Programa Bilingue Colegial (BCP), y con todos aquellos hispanos del area interesados en colaborar en las actividades de interes que llevaremos a cabo. Como habiamos decidido el semestre pasado, vamos a trabajar para el mejoramiento los medios de difucion (comunicaciones). Es tambien nuestra intencion hacer el mejor uso posible del dinero con que cuenta la organizacion y de otros recursos economicos que nos puedan facilitar otras organizaciones establecidas ya en UMass para presentarles a ustedes programas que realsen o acentuen nuestra identidad latina.

Para este semestre nos hemos propuesto exhibir dos peliculas de largo metraje; la primera para recaudar fondos (pelicula para publico en general, cobrando entrada), y la otra para beneficio cultural y educativo. Para el 16 de octubre en el Fine Arts Center, llevaremos a cabo una produccion en conjunto con otras organizaciones; presentaremos un concierto con Lucesita Benitez y doce musicos bajo la direccion y arreglos de Pedro Rivera Toledo. Esta produccion promete ser un exito. A finales de octubre AHORA, junto a otras organizaciones de los colegios auspiciara la actividad folklorica-educativa:'Peña Folklorica Latinoamericana'. Esta actividad incluye musica, poesia, teatro y comidas tipicas.

Esta actividad tiene el proposito de envolver al publico de una manera informal: caracteristica especial que distingue una peña, actividad muy conocida en paises sudamericanos. Otra de las actividades culturales que estan programadas para el mes de noviembre es, La Semana del Caribe. Este proyecto durara de tres a cuatro dias y constara de poesia negroide,una conferencia mayor con un escritor conocido y una o dos presentaciones musicales de folklore caribeño. Por ultimo, AHORA planea llevar a cabo un programa oficial de la organizacion en la estacion radial WMUA. Este programa incluira las ultimas noticias de importancia en nuestros paises y nuestros intereses estudiantiles.

Tanto este medio noticioso como el periodico Eco Latino y el programa radial Concepto Latino (Lunes 7:00 a 10:00 pm, WMUA 91.1 FM) debemos aprovecharlos...son nuestros medios. Los compañeros Carlos Valdes y Gertrudis Garcia estaran a cargo de la seccion Eco Latino la cual sale cada lunes como seccion dentro del periodico tercermundista Nummo. Los jueves es la fecha limite para entregar material literario o ilustrativo para nuestro periodico.

WFCR

Goldfarb's dismissal possible

Se considera el retiro de Goldfarb

The struggle over Hispanic programming on the Five College public radio station WFCR-FM which began last November has continued through the summer. Que Tal Amigos, the nationally-recognized Hispanic program, has been eliminated from the air waves, and the Coalition for Public Involvement in Public Radio has been fighting to get a suitable replacement on WFCR. The Coalition has gone up against the racism and unresponsiveness of the WFCR manager and governing board.

The Hispanic community and its supporters must stay on guard. A new development has come up: General Manager Robert Goldfarb, who has consistently acted in opposition to Third World programming, may be out of a job when his contract runs out on Nov. 1.

He is employed by UMass and it has told him that his contract will not be renewed. However, the chairman of the WFCR governing board has said that the decision is not final. At any rate, Goldfarb has apparently obtained organized support from certain groups within the WFCR listening area who would like to block his dismissal. (One of the demands of the Coalition when it occupied the Chancellor's office last April was that Goldfarb be fired.)

It is important for us to continue to organize in support of Hispanic programming. There will be public meeting of the Western Massachusetts Broadcasting Council (the WFCR governing board) this afternoon at 5:30 pm in the Springfield Civic Center. Next week there will be a general meeting of the Coalition and it will be announced in these pages. There is a lot of work to do. For more information call 549-6068. In next week's Nummo there will be an article detailing the events surrounding the issue of WFCR.

La lucha para restaurar la programacion hispana en la estacion radial publica WFCR-FM que comenzo en noviembre pasado, continuo durante el verano y ahora sigue en pie. El programa hispano Que Tal Amigos ha sido eliminado y la Coalicion para la Radiodifusion Publica ha estado luchando para conseguir un nuevo productor de programacion hispana, enfrentandose al racismo e insensibilidad de los administradores de la estacion.

La comunidad latina y los que la apoyan deben moverse. La noticia mas reciente es que posiblemente el gerente Robert Goldfarb, quien ha usado su posicion en WFCR en contra de la programacion tercermundista, se quede sin trabajo cuando su contrato se termina en noviembre.

Goldfarb es empleado de UMass y la administracion de esta le ha informado de que su contrato no sera renovado. Pero al mismo tiempo, el presidente de la junta directiva de WFCR ha dicho que la decision no es definitiva. De todos modos, Goldfarb aparentemente ha conseguido apoyo organizado de parte de ciertos grupos entre los oyentes de la radio, que quiren bloquear su despido. (Una de las demandas de la coalicion cuando organizo la ocupacion de la oficina del Canciller en abril, fue que se despida a Goldfarb.)

Es importante que contuemos a organizarnos en defensa de nuestros derechos. Habra una reunion publica del Western Massachusetts Broadcasting Council (la junta directiva de WFCR) hoy a las 5:30 en el Springfield Civic Center. Necesitamos tener una presencia combativa en esa reunion. La proxima semana habra una reunion general de la Coalicion y sera anunciada en el proximo numero del periodico. Hay mucho que hacer. Para mas informacion llama a 549-6068. En el proximo numero del periodico tendremos un articulo detallando los sucesos del problema con WFCR.

WHO IS AN ARAB•

accepts the implications of this definition. The Lebanese ok the Egyptian should address the whole Arab nation and not bargain as a separate entity for a more favorable accomadation within the Arab national framework. When he has determined his identity as an Arab, he then shoulders an Arab responsibility and is involved in the totality of the Arab situation. He has every right to mold Arab developements and to participate in shaping the course of their evolution.

The second operative term that requires definition is nationalism. I am not going to attempt any definition in the real sense, as the term has been the topic of discussion and analysis for many decades. My concept of nationalism is that it is a movement and not an ideology. As a movement, it seeks to liberate; as an ideology, it becomes closed and egocentric. As a movement, nationalism is transitional and and functional; removal of foreign control and unification of a divided nation. As a purpose in itself and also a fulfillment. Nationalism as a movement is basically egalitarian and deeply involved in the human situation; as an ideology, self involvement is total and "distinctiveness from the other" is a matter to be cherished and glorified. Nationalism in this context is an enrichment of the internationalism mankind yearns for, while nationalism as an ideology is a factor disruptive to world order.

This definition of nationalism is necessitated by the fact that certain groups in Lebanon and in Egypt justify their antipathy to Lebanon's and Egypt's Arab identity on the basis that such a need for an identity has become ridiculous because "nationalism" has been surpasses by wider loyalties to internationalism. These groups seek to offer a more sophisticated escape from the issue of identity in their countries or fail to distinguish between the functional and ideological logic of the term "nationalism".

Internationalism in the case of Lebanon cannot and should not mean a dilution of its Arab identity. It should not become an excuse for a romantic mysticism that ultimately isolates Lebanon from the rest of the Arab world and, on the other hand, isolates Lebanon from any social revolution taking place in third world countries.

There is no escape from the fact that religious sentiment is an important factor in the formation of political attitudes in Lebanon. The confessional base of the Lebanese policy has created powerful vested interests which cannot be easily divested from control and influence. Strong financial and banking groups preferred this political condition and feared the consequences of its replacement. The absence of a national educational policy and the multiplicity of The absence of a national educational policy and the multiplicity of educational systems prevented the emergence of a united intellectual group. Memories of religious strife which is still erupting in certain areas, and are fed by those who benefit from confessionalism remain a potent, though diminishing, force. In addition, the religious division happens to correspond broadly to the class division in Lebanon. This intensifies the division and renders the predominantly bourgeois Christian population more responsive to change the Committee to End the U.S. Blockade against Cuba is calling for emergency demonstrations across the country and in Puerto Rico to protest and condemn the brutal assasination of Felix Garcia Rodriquez by the Cuban right wing terrorist group calling itself "Omega 7"

PROTEST AGAINST CUBAN ASSASINATION

In New York the demonstration will take place this afternoon. Protest actions will be held in other cities including Philadelphia, Washington D.C., Boston, San Francisco and San Juan.

We DEMAND that the U.S. government take immediate action to end all Cuban terrorist violence.

Since the triumph of the Cuban Revolution, 21 years ago, Cuban terrorist networks have been functionally virtually unchecked in the United States and Puerto Rico.

In addition to this assasination, "Omega7" has taken responsibility for numerous bombings and attacks, as well as two other murders·

--of Carlos Muniz, a young Cuban living in Puerto Rico,

---of Eulalio Negrin, a leading member of the Cuban community of New Jersey.

(Both Muniz and Negrin had been working for the reunification of Cuban families and the release of political prisoners through dialogue, as opposed to violence and intimidation)

The existence of Omega 7 and other such highly organized agents of murder and destruction goes against every norm of human decency and is an offense which no one in this country should tolerate. Cuban right wing terrorism is a threat to us all since targets include commercial airlines, theaters and concert halls which host Cuban musicians and artists, community centers, and peoples homes as well as diplomatic missions.

Although U.S. Intelligence is capable of solving the most complex of crimes, the Cuban terrorist network has been allowed to carry out its activities for many years, despite the fact that most of its leading members are known to the f.b.i.. The lack of a vigorous government campaign against Cuban terrorism can only be interpreted as complicity, a sign of condoning such behavior.

the Committee to End the U.S. Blockade against Cuba, representing community, human rights and political organizations, demands that the U.S. government immediately apprehend the self-confessed murderers of Feliz Garcia Rodriquez, Carlos Muniz, and Eulalio Negrin.

We urge the public to express their outrage by sending letters to Jimmy Carter and U.S. Attorney Benjamin Civiletti.

Water crisis costs: not a drop in the bucket

By J. ADAM BAILEY
Collegian Staff

This semester's unexpected water shortage vacation cost the University of Massachusetts an estimated $213,000, according to George Beatty Jr. Vice-Chancellor for Administration and Finance.

Included in the estimate is the cost of reimbursing students four days rent and meals, Beatty said. There is also an estimated $7,500 in overtime pay for physical plant workers who were forced to work over the weekend, according to George A. Norton, executive officer of the Physical Plant.

The water supply is stable but still serious said Amherst Town Manager A. Louis Hayward.

Water in the storage tanks was "at the 61 to 62 foot level at 6:30 a.m. yesterday," Hayward said.

The Pelham and Hill reservoirs are still going down, and there hasn't been enough rain to replenish them, he added.

"There's no problem, we're maintaining an adequate supply," said Stanley Ziomek, superintendent of Public Works.

The hardest hit parts of campus, the Orchard Hill and Southwest Residential areas reported no problems according to Heads of Residence in both areas.

A report on why the shortage happened is expected to be released at the end of this week or early next week, Hayward said.

Lenox, Mass. is also experiencing a water shortage. The town is spending $170,000 to get water from the surrounding towns of Pittsfield, Stockbridge and Lee, according to an Associated Press report.

Language and budget cuts to limit Pres.' office

By STEVE DENSMORE
Collegian Correspondent

A University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees member said yesterday cuts of nearly $800,000 and "restrictive language" in the 1981 budget will severely limit the functional ability of the President's Office of the University.

Trustee James T. Krumsiek said, "the amount of stafff has been curtailed significantly — there won't be enough bodies to do the work."

The President's Office remains in charge of a wide range of administrative duties, such as collective bargaining, policy implentation, and legal activities until April 1981, Krumsiek said. At that time the newly formed Board of Regents effectivly takes control of the state's higher education system.

Th Board of Trustees had originally requested funding of $1,300,000 for the president's office. But the Massachusetts State Legislature cut funding for the office to $498,p0p and added certain "restrictive language" to the 1981 fiscal budget which does not allow supplemental funding from any other source.

Krumsiek has submitted a motion for consideration at the next meetino of the Board of Trustees October 1. The motion asks the President of the University to "correspond directly" with, among others, the Governor, the President of the State Senate, and Speaker of the State House of Representatives and that he advise them on the serious nature of the budget problems.

Section two of Krumsiek's motion states, "...a central President's Office for this University, and one which is fully funded and staffed, is essential if the Commonwealth is to have a quality state-wide public university system."

Krumsiek's motion also argues that "restrictive legislative language" was added to the budget bill "without any notice whatsoever and without any satisfactory explanation..." to anybody.

Th motion states the Boardcannot supplement the inadequate funds offered by the state legislature with outside funding already "at its disposal " because of the restrcitve language.

County positions up for grabs

By JOE BARRETT
Collegian Correspondent

The candidates for seven county positions in Hampshire County will be determined today as Primary Day gets underway.

Rep. James Collins (D-Amh) said this election is an important one for the area.

"Being so far from Boston, these county positions have an important role in determining our area's future," said Collins.

Two hotly contested races are the two and four year County Commissioner posts.

"The office doesn't get much publicity, but it is a very important position for people's day-to-day lives in the area," said Collins. "The issues of regional planning, solid waste management, energy conservation and others all affect us daily, and the county commissioner is responsible for seeing that these and other issues are dealt with."

Collins also said the county commissioner would be responsible for corrections in the Hampshire County jail system.

Paul R. Dineen, Robert J. Garvey, and Grayden A. Destromp are the candidates for two-year county commissioner positions. There has been a vacancy for a two-year county commissioner post since former Commissioner David Musante became Mayor of Northampton. Patrick M. Goggins, William W. Gonski, Jr. and David P. Sullivan are all seeking to fill the two-year position.

Rep. James Collins (D-Amh)

Graydon Destromp of Granby is up against two incumbents for the four year position.

Incumbent Paul Dineen is seeking his third term as Hampshire County Commissioner. He said he believes in home rule and county government, "which works well here," Dineen said.

Dineen said a cooperative effort is needed to dispose of solid waste and create energy from it. He does not believe in sanitary landfills. He also said the state should pay $6-$8 per square foot for court facilities in the area, saying the $1.95 (per square foot) offered by the state is "inadequate."

Incumbent Robert Garvey of Amherst was elected as a County Commissioner in 1976, and is seeking his second term. Garvey proposes to establish a county-wide police communication network because the hill towns in the area are currently not connected to the networks.

A certified appraiser has recommended $8 per square foot for the land the court will be built on, four times what the state has offered.

Garvey has the endorsement of Representative Collins, who calls his record "progressive."

Patric Goggins and William Gonski, Jr., along with David P. Sullivan, all of Northampton, are contesting the two-year county commissioner post.

Goggins sees the problem of solid waste disposal as being the "single biggest problem facing Hampshire County in the 80's. Goggins, a University of Massachusetts graduate, wants to see the problem handled regionally, as it would be more cost-effective for the towns involved, he said.

William Gonski also would like to see problems solved on a regional basis.

"With inflation at 18 to 20 percent, it only makes sense," he said.

While the state takeover of the courts has eased caseloads, Gonski said the cost of keeping up the courts has risen considerably. He said he has "second thoughts abut the state takeover of the jails."

David Sullivan has been Northampton City Auditor for 24 years and will retire from the job soon. He wants to stay active in local politics he said and sees the county commissioner's job as one that he could devote all his time to. Sullivan is opposed to the state takeover of the courts, since the management becomes more impersonal, he said. He also wants to end existing budget waste problems.

John Olver and Collins are unopposed for their State Senator and State Representative offices.

Collins said the County Sheriff job is an important race, because the current jail dates back to the precivil war era.

John F. Boyle of Northampton and John D. Ashe of Amherst are contesting the sheriff race.

Stanley J. Kozera, the incumbent from Hadley will run against Raymond J. Kochin of Northampton for the position of Registrar of Deeds.

Mass. state primary is nearly a sleeper

BOSTON (AP) — Today's primary election in Massachusetts would be the dullest in years were it not for last minute involvement of Cardinal Humberto Medeiros, the Roman Catholic archbishop of Boston.

The size of the state ballot runs in 12 year cycles, and there won't be another one as short as this for another 12 years, according to the state secretary's election division.

There are no statewide contests, and many local offices are not on the ballot. Congressional races top the ticket, and on the Republican side, there are only eight primary races — one for Congress, five for legislative seats and two for county commissioner.

The turnout was expected to be very light, except in the 4th and 5th congressional districts where the Massachusetts Catholic Church hierarchy has turned the Democratic primary into a referendum on abortion, and, consequently, a test of its own influence.

A parich letter written by Medeiros and published last week by the archdiocesean newspaper, attacking pro-abortion politicians and people who elect them, was read in churches throughout the districts Sunday.

The targets are incumbent U.S. Rep. James M. Shannon of Lawrence in the 5th District and Barney Frank of Newton in the 4th.

Abbie Hoffman

Bail-jumper ex-Yippie indicted

NEW YORK (AP) — Abbie Hoffman, who surrendered this month to face a drug charge from which he fled six years ago by jumping bail, was ordered held in jail overnight yesterday after being indicted — this time on a bail-jumping charge.

It also was revealed that the Internal Revenue Service had placed a levy on any earnings from a newly published book by Hoffman, 43-year-old founder of the Youth International Party, or Yippies.

Justice Milton Williams, who had released Hoffman without bail after he surrendered Sept. 4 on cocaine-selling charges, stated no reason for ordering him jailed on Monday.

Assistant Dist. Attorney David Cunningham said in court that Hoffman had been idicted on a bail-jumping charge, which carries a maximum penalty of four years in prison.

Turkish officials to be tried

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — Turkey's new military rulers will set up special courts to try hundreds of politicians and suspected terrorists rounded up since the bloodless coup, top military sources said yesterday.

The country's third-and fourth-ranking political leaders will be among those tried, but ousted Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel and main opposition leader Bulent Ecevit probably will only be barred from politics, the sources said.

They also said the ruling National Security Council, made up of the country's five highestranking generals, may not relax its grip on the country for more than a year, although the generals plan to name a civilian Cabinet by early November.

King's holiday ad is misprint

BROOKLINE (AP) — In the latest issue of a Jewish weekly newspaper, ther are many advertisements wishing readers a Happy New Year for Rosh Hashanah, but only one wishing them a Happy Passover — — which falls in the spring.

That lone ad is sponsored by Gov. Edwards J. King.

"It was a mistake," lamented James Kahn, who founded the paper in 1945, said

"It was a mistake," lamented James Kahn, editor and publisher of the Jewish Times, which has a 10,000 circulation.

Kahn, who founded the paper in 1945, said someone on the staff accidentally took an advertisement from the wrong pile of re—used ads.

Law benefits pregnant workers

BOSTON (AP) — State workers who take a maternity leave will no longer lose vacation credit as a result of a new law soon to be in effect.

Currently, employees off the state payroll for more than 30 days lose a year toward their vacation credit, according to Joanne Hughes, spokeswoman for the Local 509 of the Service Employees International Union.

The new law, which takes effect Sept. 28, overrides the existing provisions in the state contract.

Indians get money, advice

AP — About 600 Klamath Indians began picking up their shares of $81 million of federal money yesterday after getting advice on how to hang on to the proceeds of their hard-won settlement of a government land dispute.

"We think that investment this time will be the wisest ever," said Don Dodson, research coodinator for Southern Oregon Indian Research.

Secret talks may free hostages

(AP) — Iran's Parliament prepared Monday to open debate on the American hostages amid renewed calls for a U.S. apology and spy trials. A major Canadian newspaper said that secret negotiations for release of the 52 Americans have been under way for three months in an effort to solve the crisis before the U.S. presidential elections.

President Carter, speaking in Corpus Christi, Texas, said recent statements by Iranian officials "might very well lead to resolution" of the 10—month—old crisis soon. It was not clear whether Carter had been informed by then of Iran's reiteration Monday that the United States must apologize for past actions.

Omission of an often—stated apology demand from a list of conditions Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini announced last Friday had raised hopes in some quarters that the chances had improved.

But Speaker of Parliament Hashemi Rafsanjani and two influential religious leaders said the regime has not dropped its demand that the United States apologize for past policies toward Iran — — a demand Carter has rejected in the past.

Iran's Parliament, which has authority to decide what becomes of the hostages, is to begin its debate Tuesday or Wednesday, according to Iranian news media.

In a front—page editorial Monday, the Islamic fundamentalist Ettelaat daily newspaper called for trial of the hostages.

Islamic militants who seized the United States' Tehran embassy and its American staff last Nov. 4 have called the embassy a "spy nest" and demanded the Americans be tried as spies.

President Abolhassan Bani—Sadr has said he opposes such trials, but the Parliament, or Jamlis, is dominated by fundamentalist Moslems opposed to his moderate views. Khomeini's demand list also had failed to mention spy trials.

In his Texas speech, Carter said he would not engage in public negotiations.

La Presse, a left—of—center French—language newspaper in Montreal, Canada, carried a report Monday that secret talks between the State Department and former Iranian Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh were conducted on the basis of a document prepared by European intermediaries. It said Khomeini favors the plan.

La Presse was first to report Canada's rescue of six Americans from Tehran. Embassy officials had hidden the Americans in their mission for months after the U.S. Embassy seizure, then got them false papers and spirited them out of the country in January.

The State Department, reacting cautiously to the Canadian report, did not comment directly on it.

But press officer Jack Touhey recallled past statements that we have been exploring any and all channels which might help to effect the release of the hostages."

Touhey added: "We are working through intermediaries wherever we thought this might be helpful."

Muskie says no talks with Iran

WASHINGTON(AP) — Secretary of State Edmund S. Muskie acknowledged yesterday that despite formation of a new government in Iran, the Carter administration has been unable to open direct negotiations for freeing the 52 American hostages.

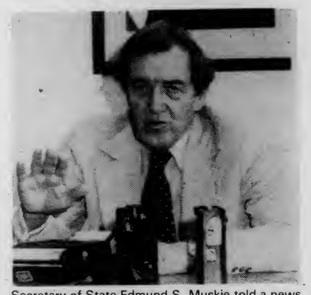
Wearing a yellow "free the hostages" emblem in his lapel, Muskie told a news conference at the State Department that none of the administration's feelers through third parties has panned out.

"We have a number of channels open to try and communicate messages of one kind or another," he said. "One never knows when one of those suggestions takes root and blossoms out in the kind of contact that results in negotiations.

"But that link has not yet been made."

Calling for a cautious assessment of statements by Iranian leaders, Muskie said "it would be a mistake to raise expectations" of progress toward a solution of the hostage crisis. The Americans have now been helk prisoner by Moslem zealots for 318 days.

Muskie's call for caution contrasted with a statement by President Carter hours earlier that recent remarks by Iranian government leaders "might very well lead to resolution" of the 10—month—old hostage crisis in the future. Speaking at a town meeting in Corpus Christi, Texas, Carter said: "Now finally there is an elected Congress called the Majlis, a prime minister, a speaker of the house and a president in Iran. They are making statements that might very well lead to resolution of this problem in the future."



Secretary of State Edmund S. Muskie told a news conference yesterday that despite recent developments in Iran no direct negotiations for the release of the 52 American hostages has been planned.

Klan's aftermath still smoulders

Cross Burning

HARTFORD (AP) — A 20-foot cross set afire late Monday night on the median of Interstate 91 Rocky Hill was one of two cross burnings reported by state police just one day after a weekend of Ku Klux Klan activity.

Police said they received a report of the interstate cross burning at 10:04 p.m. Local firefighters put out the fire.

Police were withholding further details as they continued their investigation.

Earlier, a 5-foot wooden cross was found smoldering on the front lawn of a Windam home at 3:45 p.m., police said.

Officials said no one was home at the time the cross was lighted, but that the homeowner came home to find the cross still smoldering.

State police refused to identify the family.

Windham is adjacent to the town of Scotland, which was the scene of two Klan-sponsored rallies and cross burnings Saturday and Sunday.

Wizard Arrested

SCOTLAND, Conn. (AP) — A Ku Klux Klan imperial wizard, arrested on a weapons charge during this past weekend of rallies and cross burnings, yesterday had his court appearance postponed for 15 days.

Bill Wilkinson, 37, the imperial wizard of the Louisiana-based Klan faction called the Invisible Empire of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, was charged Sunday with carrying a dangerous weapon in a motor vehicle.

He was one of 12 people facing charges in the wake of Klan rallies and cross-burnings, the first such public activity by the racist organization in Connecticut in more than 50 years. His appearance in Superior Court in Willimantic was postponed to Sept. 30.

Police said they found a loaded .45-caliber automatic pistol in Wilkinson's suitcase, which was in the trunk of a car driven by a Klan sympathizer Sunday afternoon. A Superior Court judge, acting Friday after the Klan said armed guards from the South would be at the rallies, had banned the carrying of guns in the eastern Connecticut town of Scotland during Saturday or Sunday.

Awareness sought by impaired

By Francine Mintz
Collegian Correspondent

Increased public awareness of handicapped peo ple's needs and problems was the rallying point for the first fall meeting of the Handicapped Students Collective (HSC) Monday night.

Blind, deaf, and mobility handicapped, people are members of the coliective.

As a Recognized Student Organization, the HSC receives over $2000 for use in various functions. Last year's activites included a coffee house, renting a table for literature in the Campus Center, and a Handicap Awareness Day,where a presentation of sign language and mime depicted social problems faced by the handicapped.

Amy Hasbrouck, a sophomore Journalist Studies major,is the one returning member of last year's collec-tive. Hasbrouck, who is legally blind, said the main objec-tives of the group are support and advocacy. Such a group enables handicapped students to discuss shared problems and their possible solutions, according to Hasbrouck.

Advocacy for the group would entail research on state and Federal accessibility laws and lobbying efforts to make sure they were followed through on campus.

Some problems faced by visually handicapped students include: D.C. menus of small print and hard-to-discern bus destination signs. Also mentioned were the lack of curb cuts (for those who are wheelchair bound), and inefficient-notetaking services for students who cannot take notes.

The meeting, which drew 10 new members andtwo representatives of the Handicapped Students Affairs Office,was held to encourage students to voice specific problems they feel need to be resolved, according toHasbrouck.

Paul Appleby of the Handicapped Student Affairs Officesaid he would like to see HSC "become a cohesive groupand continue with what the group has done last year."

The Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy, (SCERA), was represented by two people oftheir Outreach Team. SCERA co-sponsored the meeting inan effort to form The Handicapped Students Affairs of SCERA, which would look into some of the legal rights and social aspects of handicapped students.

Two motorcycle-car accidents occurred within 24 hours of each other at the University of Massachusetts. Yesterday at 2:30 p.m. a motorcycle driven by Matthew Ryda was cut off by a car driven by Mohamed P. Hamdani outside Whitmore Administration Building. The collision occurred when Hamdani made a left hand turn out of the right hand lane on Massachusetts Ave. No one was seriously injured.

The drivers involved in the other accident, which occurred at 9:45 p.m. Sunday, also escaped injury when a car driven by Elaine Sandoe pulled out onto Fearing St. just missing a motorcycle driven by Bradley Webber. Police said wet pavement may have caused Sunday's crash. (Staff photo by Cheryl Senter)

Library bricks won't drop down says new study

By LARRY COX
Collegian Correspondent

The chance that entire brick panels will fall from the University Library is slim, states a report by an engineering firm which conducted an inspection of the structure last fall.

Should the pieces fall, the report states, the surrounding concrete plaza would be able to support them.

The report, published last January, but unavailable for public inspection until last Friday, recommends a number of preliminary repairs for the building but also explains that major renovations will still be needed after the minor work is complete.

The inspection and subsequent report was done by the consultatnt engineering firm of Simpson, Gumpertz, and Heger, Inc. of Cambridge. The report was sent to University officials and to Studart Lesser, director of the Massachusetts Bureau of Building Construction (BBC). Both parties, refused to release the document when a member of the Student Center for Education and Research Advocacy (SCERA) requested a copy of it.

Renee Landers, Supervisor of Public Records in Boston ruled the report was a public document and must be released to the public within 10 days. Both University officals and the BBC, held the document beyond the 10 day deadline. It was released after the public records office instructed Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti to take legal action against Lesser if he did not release the study.

In July the State Legislature appropriated $2.5 million for "repairs and renovations" of the tower, part of which is slated to be used for the repairs recommended by the report. It is not known when the outline repairs will begin.

Water supply sufficient but dropping

By SARAH ROLL
Collegian Correspondent

Despite very low levels in three Amherst resevoirs, the town's water supply tanks have maintained sufficient operating heights over the past week said Amherst Selectmen at their meeting Monday night.

Selectmen said the findings, which they received last Friday from Town Manager A. Louis Hayward indicated the Hills and Atkins resevoirs were continuing to drop, and the Hawley resevoir was too low to measure.

They said the water emergency is still in effect and conservation measures were vital.

The Lawrence Swamp well, which will supply about 1.6 million gallons of water a day, will be operational by this weekend for testing, not for feeding the town's water syste, Selectmen said.

In other business, the board approved a suggestion by several Town bicyclists to paint special riding lanes while road construction is being done downtown.

Selectmen also approved a motion to extend cable television service to about 160 homes in the Orchard Valley section of town.

Work on the cable extension is expected to begin in about three weeks and be completed in two months said a Pioneer Valley Cablevision spokesman.

The board also approved a liquor license for Branigan's restaurant on Northampton Road.

Workers picket to continue progress

By JIM F. MAHONEY
Collegian Staff

For the second consecutive week University Staff Association members picketed the University of Massachusetts administration building to show support for their contract demands.

Negotiations with the University went well this week, said staff spokeswoman Penny Schwartz. The union gained some valuable demands, she added.

"The union gained some valuable demands."
—Penny Schwartz

Negotiations were bogged down by a debate over language protecting employers from arbirtrary transfers, Schwartz said. The employees want to be respected in their positions and not just moved around, Schwartz said.

Representatives from various student and faculty groups marched with the USA members. Their presence served to aid the USA in its show of force, said Thomas Laurent, a member of the USA executive board.

The mood of the afternoon demonstration took on a festive air as folk guitarist Tom Juravick joined the picketers and led them in singing various anti-administration songs.

The picketers, who gave up their lunch hours to stage the demonstration, toted placards and signs under grey, overcast skies, stating their opinions and demands. About 100 people participated in the march which began at 12 noon and ended at 1 p.m.

Laurent led the group by chanting slogans through a bull horn calling for the administration to bargain in good faith and for the various other demands to be met.

"We have a crisis committee in case of a breakdown in negotiations," said Laurent.

The Union, which represents clerical and technical workers, also wants a 37 and one half hour work week, parking fees abolished and summer work hours.

Foreign Objects pose tongue-in-cheek

Foreign Objects
Rahar's
Sept. 14

By MARY KINNEAVY
Collegian Staff

A rock 'n' roll delight has been hovering around the area for the past couple of years, determined to prove that music can be fun, and everything else is secondary.

Foreign Objects made a convincing case Sunday night at Rahar's, playing to a weeknight audience, most of which was gone before they finished. Their loss. The FO's aren't the type that wind down at the end of an evening. They keep going strong with topical satires and good dancing music.

Shunning the labels punk and new wave ("People think you have to wear spiked heels and pins"), Foreign Objects prefer "rock 'n' roll." And they deliver some of the highest energy music around—original, witty and fun. Not the monotonous canned "New Wave" that's coming from so many bands lately, amateur and professional.

"We try to maintain a humorous outlook," says drummer Steve Ed Kirby, "to make the audience enjoy it. We don't take ourselves seriously. Most of what we do is tongue-in-cheek."

As it should be with songs like, "I Want You Dead," "Nixon Now More Than Ever," and "They Saved Hitler's Brain." You get the point.

Not taking themselves too seriously seems to be the secret ingredient lacking in less appealing bands.

I was taken in from their first tune, "Buy A Car" about Amherst-type alternative hitchhikers ("You know, the kind that hitch a ride from the Campus Center to Faces of Earth"), to their last, a cover version of the Monkees' "I'm A Believer."

Their cover songs are revamped FO style, including the loudest "(There's A) Kind of Hush" you're likely to hear, even if The Trembles do a remake.

On stage Foreign Objects can be identified as Bill Perks, lead songwriter, singer and rhythm guitarist; bassist John Paul Lemay; Howard W. Campbell Jr. keyboards; Noodles Romanov, lead guitar (so they get a little carried away); and Steve Ed "Rock" Kirby, drums. All from this area, they've been together as a band since February '79.

A recurring theme in their music is professional wrestling, now becoming a rock 'n' roll fad. Songs dedicated to the sport include "Rock 'n' Wrestlin' Roll," incidentally one of their best dancing songs, and "Wrestling's Real": "Some people think that wrestling's fake / But I know wrestling's real." Even their trademark (the Hawaiian Aloha shirts they wear) is an idea taken from famous wrestling manager, Fred Blasse.

Though Foreign Objects have a forthcoming four-song EP, "World At War," they don't aspire to widespread fame.

"We just want to get signed by a label, make a record, and if it gets put in the cut-out bins, that's fine," says Kirby. "The chances of making it are too slim to set those expectations." As for the EP, "All we want to do is make enough money to do it again."

If making it means ruining them, none of us want that. But catch 'em while you can, just in case. Keep an ear out for them and other local talent. You never know what lurks in your own backyard.

With respect to Graham Parker, we're waiting for the FO's; we know that they're there!

Play moves many

By ABBE BJORKLUND
Collegian Staff

Smith College began its fall theatre season on Saturday with a one-time performance of "Letters Home" a play about the life of famous writer and poet Sylvia Plath.

"Letters Home" consists of a monologue dialogue between two characters: Sylvia Plath and her mother, Aurelia. Every word of the script is taken from the book, "Letters Home," a collection of more than 600 letters written by Sylvia Plath to her mother. The book was compiled by Aurelia Plath to clarify some of the myths surrounding her famous daughter's life and death.

The play was written by Rose Leiman Goldemberg and edited by Aurelia Plath. The original Broadway cast, that performed at Smith College, consisted of Doris Belack as Mrs. Plath and Mary McDonnell as Sylvia.

The actresses skillfully captured the communication, love, and intimacy felt between the mother and daughter. Mary McDonnell forcefully showed the transitions in Sylvia through thirteen years, from entering college at Smith in 1950 until Sylvia's suicide in 1963 at the age of 30.

Portrayed as a very intelligent, sensitive, and passionate woman, in her junior year Sylvia is devastated by the insensitivity of the world during a stay in New York City when she is guest editor at Mademoiselle Magazine for a month.

Soon after she is locked into a depression due to her "drab and meaningless existence". She is finally brought out of it, not by the love and support of her seemingly helpless mother, but by her psychiatrists at the McLean Hospital (a mental health facility in Belmont).

Doris Belack as Mrs. Plath and Mary McDonnell as Sylvia Plath in a one-time performance of "Letters Home," a play about the life and death of Sylvia Plath, at Smith College on Saturday, September 13.

Sylvia returns to school and becomes a successful writer. The play and Mary McDonnell's captivating performance bring you through Sylvia's carousel of emotions: love for her mother, school—girlish joys of dating, passionate devotion to her poet husband, Ted Hughes, the joy fulfilling her "woman's role" of making babies, conviction of her identity as a "great writer", and the burdens of the lonely existence that finally leads to her suicide.

The play does not spell out the reasons for her depressions or her suicide, but allows the observer to interpret Sylvia's own words and one's own compassions for her human condition that required so much love and caused so much pain.

The total involvement of the actresses in their performance of this beautiful and moving production was evident in their tears at the conclusion of the performance, which inspired a standing ovation from the audience.

Drunk driver

Michael T. Murphy, 18, of 29 Beechwood Drive, South Dartmouth, was arraigned at Hampshire County District Court in Northampton yesterday on charges of drunken driving and leaving the scene of a property damage accident.

Murphy was arrested early Sunday morning in a parking lot off Eastman Lane shortly after his vehicle was described by witnesses as the one which knocked over a concrete lamp post on the corner of North Pleasant St. and Butterfield Terrace., police said.

Eighteen-year-old transports alcohol

Donna M. McDermott, 18, of Mount Vernon St., Arlington, was arrested at 4:44 p.m. Saturday on a charge of transporting alcohol. According to Massachusetts law one must be 20 years old to transport alcohol.

McDermott was allegedly pushing a shopping cart filled with various types of liquor down University Drive in the company of four other women.

Police said McDermott was the only person actually committing a crime.

She was arraigned yesterday at Hampshire County District Court in Northampton.

Disorderly person

Amherst police arrested Arthur E. Cross, 22, of The Village Inn on Amity St. at 1 a.m. Saturday for being a disorderly person.

His arrest followed a complaint about a quarrell in progress at the Village Inn. The suspect was involved in an argument with his wife, police said.

Cross was held on $1000 bail and arraigned yesterday at Hampshire County District Court in Northampton.

Revealing Debates

The League of Women Voters has finally extended a gracious invitation to John Anderson to participate in their presidential debates, thereby setting up one of the more potentially interesting political events in years.

Debates are always great fun to watch. Who can forget President Ford's startingly well thought out declaration that eastern European nations are autonomous and not subject to Soviet domination in his 1976 debate with Jimmy Carter? A truly bonehead statement, it went a long way toward convincing the American electorate that Chevy Chase was indeed accurate in is Saturday Night Live characterization of Ford as a catatonic half-wit, and helped to bury Ford's further presidential ambitions (until this year, when he nearly haggled himself back into power as "co-president," an absurd concept that the Republicans stole from the Mike Douglas Show).

The 1960 debates were also rich in idiocy. A twitching, mousey Richard Nixon was easily blown away by that charming rogue, John F. Kennedy, whose all-around cool made Nixon's nervous mannerisms and abundant nose hair seem repulsive. Right then we should have realized what a fop the man was but, to his credit, he managed to get himself elected anyway eight years later, proving that even the most funny-looking and pea-brained of Americans can be president if they have enough money.

In 1980, the Republicans offer us yet another sayer of stupid things: Ronald Reagan. Reagan has gotten himself into quite a bit of trouble these past few weeks with questionable statements that have helped erode his once-enormous advantage over his rivals. Perhaps the 69-year-old is finally feeling fatigued from the arduous campaign; perhaps he is just not very intelligent. One must admit that Reagan did quite well in the debate among Republican nominee hopefuls in New Hampshire. But even then, he didn't say much, and besides, it was like Snow White debating the Seven Dwarves.

President Carter proved in 1976 that he could debate without making a jackass of himself, a tremendous advantage against Ford. He is a marvelously bright man armed with an engineer's ability to memorize facts and details. He is compassionate and sensitive, and a good husband and father. However, he is an awful president. It will be very difficult to take anything he says seriously, given his unprecedented record of broken campaign promises and silly television ad campaign.

John Anderson looks just like Dennis the Menace's father and has a wife named Keke. Were that not the case, he would have an excellent shot at the presidency. He's the most interesting of the three and quite appealing to young people and liberals. A solid showing in the debates might bolster his chances enough to scare Carter and Reagan out of their rhetorical doldrums and force them to actually say something meaningful. That is no small achievement.

Carter, tower of jello that he is, has said all along that he refuses to debate both his challengers until he has had a chance to go one-on-one with Reagan. Understandably, Anderson and Reagan are miffed by this. The League of Women Voters has offered the President all sorts of compromises, including a series of two-man, round robin debates, but the wimp refuses to budge. Still, I feel that the three-way debates will materialize. The American public will get an opportunity to witness all three candidates locked in fierce verbal and psychological battle. The intelligence, nerve, savvy and character of each will be examined by millions of viewers and dissected by thousands of critics, newsmen, and political professionals. With any luck, they'll agree to call off election day and try again next year.

Radiation and not dry toilets problem at V.Y.

To the Editor:

The recent evacuation of the UMass campus due to the water crisis probably surprised and irritated the some 10,000 students who were forced to leave. Mismanagement, poor planning and lack of intelligent foresight on the part of town and University officials can be blamed as causes of the crisis.

Fifteen miles away in Vernon, Vermont another potential crisis looms before us every day. Using the Connecticut River as its waste water receptacle, the Vermont Yankee nuclear power plant has been in operation for the last 10 years. Shutdowns, accidents and crises have been cluttering its operating history for ten years also. Although Vermont Yankee has not delivered us a Three Mile Island or an accident warranting evacuation, the potential exists every day. An accident could happen and the need to evacuate would be upon us all too suddenly. Radiation and not dry toilets would force an upwards of 80,000 residents and students from the Amherst area. Panic and fear instead of irritation and hassle would accompany this evacuation scenario.

The Student Coalition Against Nukes Nationwide would like you to join them in investigating the dangers at Vermont Yankee and at the 71 other nuclear plants now in operation.

Mismanagement of available energy resources, poor planning in the design of nuclear plants and severely limited foresight in the area of nuclear waste disposal has left us with an unmanageable and dangerous energy crisis.

Financial aid for a 'generation of debtors'

To the Editor:

The higher educational system in this country is churning out something more than students with degrees. It's also churning out a generation of debtors. Those students eligible for financial aid received one of two letters this summer: one stating that their Basic Educational Opportunity Grant (BEOG) funds were being cut or, due to severe lack of funds, some 2,000 students would receive nothing. This means more students are forced to look to bank loans for relief of their financial burdens.

Many people counter, "What's wrong with educational loans?" What's wrong is that they are comprising a larger and larger share of student aid (at UMass a seven-fold increase in the last three years). This comes at a time when graduating students are less able to pay; the unemployment rate increases all the time and is not expected to go down over the next two years. All the while "fiscally conservative" politicians are demanding an end to the loan program because more students are declaring bankruptcy and defaulting on the loans!

What is afoot at this point in time is a shift from government support of the right of working people to a higher education, to a policy of education for only those who can afford it. (How many of us will be able to pay off $10,000 when we graduate?) This year, under the guise of seeking a balanced budget, President Carter instituted a $130 million cut in the BEOG funds. This rhetoric of a balanced budget doesn't hold much water when we view his plans for a $90.2 billion increase in military spending over the next five years (already at a whopping $158.7 billion). The only "balancing" we see is to tip the scales away from socially-needed programs and in favor of defense related profits.

This same shift in priorities is directly related to the overall cuts in the University's budget. Again, on the state level, we see cuts in all the social services (hospitals, jobs, public transportation, education, food stamps) while businesses are given huge tax breaks with no laws requiring them to stay in the state.

Is there any hope for this bleak picture? A united effort to fight for those programs which reflect social priorities is needed. We can get more money for education and other services not by raising taxes but by closing corporate tax loopholes and by calling an end to the unnecessary arms buildup; spending which, in an era of nuclear weaponry, serves to increase the threat of war and to divert valuable resources.

Arrests and torture systematic in Chile

To the Editors,

Last Tuesday's New York Times reports that "arbitrary arrests and systematic torture have increased dramatically in Chile in the last two months." The secret police, the article continues, have arrested up to 2,000 people since July 15 and tortured them by methods such as electric shock and near drowning.

The torture wave is only the latest in a series of repressive developments since the U.S. assisted the Chilean military in overthrowing the democratically elected government of Salvador Allende seven years ago this week. The Popular Unity government headed by Allende from September 1970 to September 1973 brought about a series of economic and social changes aimed at improving the lives of Chile's working people. Among other changes, minimum wages rose by 66 percent while unemployment dropped to four percent.

Because the Popular Unity government was socialist and nationalized several U.S. corporation's Chilean holdings, the United States C.I.A. responded with direct intervention: As the Church Committee of the U.S. Senate later admitted, the C.I.A. among other things funneled millions of dollars to support disruptive actions and fund reactionary radio and TV stations. They also directly encouraged Chilean military officers to abandon the Chilean constitution and overthrow the elected government.

Since the coup, conditions have deteriorated disastrously for the majority of people. Children's malnutrition stands at epidemic levels. But in the last year increased trade union and underground political organization have revived the strength of the popular resistance. Our active support for this effort to make the transition to a new democracy is critical.

Angry and pissed-off over loss of 'potential'

To the Editor:

I'm mad, I'm angry, pissed off, bullshit and any other adjective that can be used to define a feeling of frustration with the administration of this potentially prominent university. Potential—keep that word in mind. It's going to crop up again in this letter, remember what it means: "The inherent ability or capacity for growth, development, or coming into being," as defined by the American Heritage Dictionary.

The Theater Department had one of the few opportunities that are afforded to many academic theaters and that was a shot at national prominence which was yanked away by this University's ignorant and insensitive administration. This department, my second home, was going to have the former chairperson of the Theater Department at Tulane University, Millie Barringer, as its chairperson.

To state very briefly what Millie did with the Tulane program was simply to take it from a state of near extinction to one of national recognition, thriving with creativity and abundant theatrical life. And as an aside, according to Millie our facilities are better than the ones at Tulane. Millie had done all she could possibly do at Tulane without building a new facility which would have taken a minimum of ten years. Here there was even more potential to start building upon; fully professional and modern facilities along with directors, designers and dramaturgs who teach their crafts as sensitively and creatively as they practice them.

The reason, as you may have guessed, why Millie could not serve as chairperson was money. I don't know how much she wanted or what was offered to her. It is, however, going to cost this university more without her and I mean that in actual and potential terms.

Since Millie could not serve, someone had to and this summer the role of acting chairperson fell to Professor Doris E. Abramson who has since had to resign the position for health reasons. The duties of the chairperson have thus been delegated to various faculty members, cutting down on their potential for doing theater which is alive, memorable and unique and upon the student learning their craft.

But we will survive this. Survival is the constant struggle of the theatrical craftsman. That the show must go on is more than theatrical rhetoric or cliche. To go on is the only means to survive.

Their respective opponents,conservative businessman Robert F. Hatem of Lowell and Arthur Clark, conservative mayor of Waltham, take the opposite view.

Frank, who is Jewish, is seeking the seat being vacated by Rep. Robert F. Drinan, the Jesuit priest who is retiring from office on orders of the pope.

Frank is a liberal state representative from Boston's Back Bay who moved to Newton to run for Congress. He is counting on the heavy Jewish vote in the large Boston suburbs of Brookline and Newton at the eastern end of the district, which, nevertheless, is predominantly Catholic.

Shannon is Catholic, and the vote in his North Shore district is heavily Catholic. He and Frank have refrained from criticizing the cardinal, but Frank has blasted Clark and one church leader for alleged "smear and distortion" of his record on Beacon Hill.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy andDrinan, two of the nation's leading liberal Catholic Democrats, have campaigned for Frank and Shannon — — Kennedy asking voters to consider other issues and Drinan rejecting pressure from church colleagues to reconsider his endorsement of Frank.

SEE HOW THEY RUN

The Pompous Promoter

Maureen Sullivan

Ladies and gentlemen! Come 'round, as I, the Pompous Promoter, shall dazzle your greymatter with feats of strength and skill unimagined in all the world!

To my left, dear spectators, gawk at the amazing bar bouncers, those muscular majesties of pure dexterities! Cast your eyes upon those hands, those same hands that have physically exiled more than 200 slobbering sots in the course of one, yes, one evening! Watch their determination as they heave over that blue line there upon the stage Sots 201 and 202! Myyyaaaahhhh Godshhhddd! Did you see that, ladies and gentlemen? Didn't you marvel at the way Sot 201 just flopped to the floor 50 feet away? Don't worry about him, folks. He's so drunk he can't feel a thing...

Whazzat? Well, isn't that cute. The little boy over here is wondering where the football game is. My son, forget about the violence, forget about those overpaid plastic men resembling our hairy and gruntling ancestors! This is what you want, my son and these fine, intelligent people before me tonight. Violence does not exist here, just the pure fun of sport, the merry fun of competition.

Which brings us to the next marvel to wonder, my curious seekers of physical exertion. Gaze to the diving board and to those two standouts of bravery about to risk possible life and limb for your entertainment. These two bulky blocks of manhood have upon them costumes of fire which shall ignite once our divers hit the board and let the air's friction rub against them.

It's like the Fourth of July up there! Mahhhhh Gohhhddddd! They hit the water all aflame and smoking. Are they – yes they're all right! One more example of incredible courage and fortitude which you, my fine friends, have demanded and have received.

What? Are you back? What do you mean, whatever happened to the hockey show? Violence, my boy, violence unsuited to young tots like yourself. Yes, yes, very unhealthy for children. They might become delinquents when they grow up, if not for your demands for a cleaner, more fun look at sports and its unusual moments. Never mind the leagues, never mind those professionals on the field and in the broadcast booth. What I offer is for you; it's mad for you!

I ...oh, it's you again. Go away, boy, you bother me...no, I don't have the college shows anymore! Those organized displays of violence and sometimes of boredom never sold out for me, but for certain programs which came dearly to my attention and your pocketbook. I harbor no offense to these programs, but, my viewers, they are no longer to your liking. You prefer the individual acheiver of sport, not the organization and its pursuit of profits. As for those who accuse this Promoter of offering trash and then wonder well, what is sport, I shall answer with this: What is sport but for the Games People Play?

Netwomen edge Vermont, 5-4; easily defeat McGill, 9-0

By ANTONY KUNDERT
Collegian Staff

The women's tennis team got off to a good start this past weekend winning their first two matches. Their first win was over the University of Vermont and the other was an unscheduled match against McGill University in Montreal.

There was good unity on the team . . . everyone is now confident after this weekend.

—Beal

The weather at UVM was anything but conducive to tennis. Pouring rain and temperatures in the fifties forced the matches to be played indoors. With the limited court space, the tennis match took an incredible seven and a half hours to complete.

Despite the bad weather and the time element, the UMass players endured, to take a 5-4 match victory over the Catamounts. Six singles matches and three doubles were played. UMass' number one singles, Barbara Mills, won a tough match, 6-2, 6-3, against UVM's Cynthia Yates. In doubles play, two of the three pairs won. An outstanding match was turned in by Paula Natale (number five singles), who was able to win in three sets and thus break the 4-4 match tie and give UMass the victory. The junior varsity also won their match against UVM by a score of 3-2.

On Sunday the netwomen moved on to Montreal for a match with McGill University. In a surprisingly easy victory, UMass took all nine matches. No one was more surprised than coach John Beal who said: "We were expecting a tough match with McGill since they beat Vermont earlier, but almost everybody ended up winning easily." An excellent match was played by number one doubles team, Caroline Tarbell and Cathy Burke, winning 7-7, 6-3. "It was the best match they've played since last spring," said coach John Beal.

Sports notices

On Tuesday-Thursday meet in the pool. If there are any conflicts or problems contact Coach Valerie Turtle at 545-2845 or 665-7920.

All women interested in playing ice hockey this coming season, please call Alan at 256-0506. Intercollegiate schedule is planned.

Women's ultimate frisbee is now forming. Interested women should go to practice at the Southwest horse shoe weekdays at 3:30.

"Biking Away", a Valley Health Plan Community Discussion for beginning and experienced cyclists, will be held on Saturday, September 20, 10:00 a.m. – 12:00 noon; Farley Lodge, University Drive, Amherst (north of the UMass stadium). This free program will include a discussion of bicycle maintenance and repair, health benefits, trip planning, safety and more. A short bike trip will follow, so bring a lunch and beverage. For more information call Paul Davis or Karen Larson at the University Health Center or Amherst Medical Associates.

Rugby practice will be held at 4:30 Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. Anyone interested is encouraged to come out. For further information call 256-6171 and ask for Paul, Dave or Bruce.

The NAIADS synchronized swimming/water ballet club will hold its try-outs from Sept. 10 thru Sept. 19, every weeknight, at 6 p.m. at NOPE pool. Experience in the sport is not necessary only an ability to swim and a desire to try something different. The club is open to everyone – be adventuresome and take the plunge!

First Hang Gliding Club meeting will be tomorrow night at 7 in room 911 Campus Center. All new members are welcome and urged to attend.

Intramural bowling leagues start September 22. Sign up at the bowling alley in Boyden gym or call 5-2239.

PRIMARIES

Liberals take early lead

BOSTON (AP) — U.S. Rep. James M. Shannon and liberal state Rep. Barney Frank, both targeted in a church-sponsored anti-abortion campaign, took early leads over conservative opponents in Democratic congressional contests in yesterday's Massachusetts primary.

Last-minute involvement by Cardinal Humberto Medeiros, Roman Catholic archbishop of Boston, turned the Democratic races in the 4th and 5th Districts into a referendum on abortion and a test of church influence.

In the 4th, Frank, who has a liberal voting record in the Legislature, led Waltham Mayor Arthur J. Clark 12,458 votes, or 54 percent, to 10,304, 45 percent, with 35 of 143 precincts reporting.

The names of other Democratic candidates who withdrew remained on the ballot and accounted for the outstanding 1 percent.

Frank took a substantial lead in the first returns, from Brookline, a Boston suburb with a large Jewish population that he was expected to carry. The contest was much tighter elsewhere, and Clark easily carried his home city.

In the 5th, the anti-abortion ire was aimed at Shannon, who led Lowell businessman Robert Hatem 5,187 votes, or 67 percent, to 2,555, or 33 percent, with 23 of 179 precincts reporting.

In western Massachusetts' 2nd District, Democratic Rep. Edward P. Boland of Springfield easily won renomination over two challengers.

In the 7th Congressional District, north of Boston, Rep. Edward J. Markey easily won renomination over James J. Murphy, a perennial candidate who has run as an independent in the past.

Local voters go to the polls

By JOE BARRETT
Collegian Correspondent

Thirteen point eight percent of Amherst's registered voters turned out yesterday in the Hampshire County Primaries.

In Amherst, at least, Robert Garvey and Paul Dineen were the big winners for the 4-year Democratic County Commissioner nominations for slots on the November ballot. Final results from the remainder of Hampshire County were not yet tabulated at press time.

Garvey picked up 1140 votes, while Dineen received 443.

Graydon Destromp was the loser with 136 votes.

In the contest for the 2-year Democratic County Commissioner nomination, David Sullivan defeated William Gonski 202 votes to 172.

John F. Boyle defeated John Ash for the County Sheriff nomination. Boyle chaulked up 768 votes to Ash's 357.

John Olver, with 1015 votes, and James Collins, with 1083 were nominated for the Democratic State Representative slot. Both ran unopposed.

Edward O'Brian won the Eighth District Councillor Democratic nomination with 671 votes, while Helen Poppy Doyle won the Democrats' nomination for the First District Congressional Representative spot, with 707 votes.

In the Register of Deeds primary, Stanley Kozera defeated Raymond Kochin 837 to 234.

On the Republican side, Sylvio Conte took the First District Representative nomination unopposed, with 280 votes.

Dianna Flynn won a successful sticker campaign to get a place on the November ballot against Collins. She received 45 votes in Amherst.

Abortion Vote:

Cardinal issues letter to catholics

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

Boston Archbishop Humberto Cardinal Medeiros urged Catholic voters not to regard abortion as a matter of private morality in a strongly worded open letter issued last Thursday in Boston telling them to consider the abortion positions of candidates in yesterday's primary election.

Waltham Mayor Arthur J. Clark, a Democrat in the 4th district, and Lowell businessman Robert Hatem, a Democrat in the 5th district, both anti-abortion candidates, are expected to gain votes because of Medeiros' letter.

The letter was read at Sunday masses in the Boston area and distributed at the doors of the numerous churches in special reprints of the front page of The Pilot, the official newspaper of the Boston Archdiocese.

Medeiros called abortion a "horrendous crime and deadly sin" in which legislators and voters share in the guilt if they make abortion possible, he said.

State Rep. Barney Frank of the 4th District and U.S. Rep. James Shannon in the 5th support Medicaid funding of abortions and oppose the human life amendment, the backbone and goal of many anti-abortion candidates and organizations.

Henry Luthin, legislative director of Mass. Citizens for Life, said the church has a right to step in. He said, "the Cardinal has a right to free speech like anyone else, and also has certain obligations to perform as a spiritual leader."

Luthin said the Mass Citizens for Life Political Action Committee has endorsed and given funds to both Clark and Hatem. "If a pro-life candidate wins, they would actively work for a human life amendment to the constitution." Therefore the choice of candidate is important to pro-life forces, he said.

Father Thomas Dupre of the Springfield Chancery (church officials' office) said Medeiros' letter was not circulated in Western Massachusetts and he has not seen the letter in its entirity. But, he added, "Cardinal Medeiros was reminding his people, if you believe in the sanctity of the right of the unborn, you cannot ignore that in the voting booth."

The impact to both sides of the abortion issue are clear. U.S. Rep. Robert Drinan supported Medicaid funding for abortion and opposed a constitutional amendment banning abortion. Whoever takes his seat will have an impact on abortion votes.

In July, the Supreme Court upheld the Hyde amendment, named after Henry J. Hyde (R – N.Y.), banning Federal Medicaid funding for abortions. Each state, however, is still allowed to fund abortions if they choose.

According to Nancy Holte, a counselor at Boston Planned Parenthood, "Most abortion votes are very close, so this is a powerful seat (in the 4th district). The election constitutes a loss of a gain to the abortion cause," she added.

A recent state amendment to take effect Oct. 6 requires physicians performing abortions to obtain the pregnant woman's "informed consent" at least 24 hours in advance. Women under 18 must receive consent from both parents or petition superior court to judge her maturity in making the abortion decision.

The Family Planning Council of Boston has filed two injunctions to delay implementation of the amendment. Dr. Richard Kauff, medical director of Amherst Medical Associates, which serve UMass, said "The law makes the acquisition of abortion more time consuming before the procedure is actually delivered," he said. But, "we are prepared to comply and have the consent forms ready."

G. Gordon Liddy to speak to UM students in SUB

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

G. Gordon Liddy, the controversial mastermind behind the Watergate scandal that eventually felled President Richard M. Nixon, will be appearing in the Student Union Ballroom of the University of Massachusetts of Tuesday, Sept. 23, at 8 p.m.

Howard Goldman, chairperson of the Distinguished Visitors Program, which sponsors the event, said Liddy's appearance is the first of fifty nationwide, following the release of a controversial interview in the October issue of Playboy magazine.

Goldman said Liddy will appear in the SUB, which holds about 1000 people. Additional public address speakers may be provided outside the ballroom to handle an expected overflow crowd. There will also be a "lengthy" question and answer period and admission is free, Goldman said.

G. Gordon Liddy (file photo)

The appearance will be open to UMass students only, he said, and student I.D.'s will be checked at the door.

Goldman said Liddy is being paid $3,000 for the appearance. That amount includes travel expenses, he said.

Liddy, 50, a New York native, served as a staff assistant to President Nixon and later headed the so-called "plumbers" unit, the administration's covert activities organization. He later served as general counsel to the Committee to Re-elect the President and is credited with directing the infamous Watergate break-in.

Liddy was convicted and given a 20-year prison sentence for his part in the Watergate conspiracy, but was later pardoned by President Jimmy Carter.

Liddy holds bachelor of science and doctor of law degrees from Fordham College. He also served two years as an Army officer and went on to spend five years as a special agent of the FBI. At the age of 29, after six commendations for outstanding service, he became one of the youngest supervisors in the FBI.

Following his tenure with the FBI, Liddy practiced international law in New York, unsuccessfully ran for Congress and then joined the Treasury Department as a special assistant to the secretary and legislative counsel.

Most recently, Liddy's autobiography, WILL, appeared, for a time, on best seller lists.

Goldman said he expects Liddy's appearance to be controversial, but hopes to bring in a speaker of opposing viewpoints.

"I personally don't like the guy, but maybe we can balance it by getting Daniel Ellsberg to speak," Goldman said.

Ellsberg, a noted writer, had his office and his psychiatrist's office ransacked by Liddy's "plumbers" group.

Goldman also said DVP had originally scheduled feminist Germaine Greer to appear next week, but scheduling problems forced the cancellation of the program.

Amherst PD release stats for August

By BILL HALLISEY
Collegian Staff

Statistics released by Amherst police yesterday for August, show no significant change in overall criminal activity compared with August of last year, and a drastic decrease in traffic violations.

Motor vehicle offenses for August were down 84 percent with 49 infractions filed in 1980 compared to 303 in 1979. Police said the disparity was due to an unavoidable change in departmental policy.

As of June 30, a two year grant from the Governor's Highway Safety Bureau for the appointment of a full-time Highway Safety Officer in Amherst was discointinued due to insufficient funds, police said.

Citing persons for motor vehicle offenses was the only responsibility of the Highway Safety Officer and, although the system was effective, police said neither the state nor the town was willing to continue funding it.

Accident suspect arraigned on charges of student death

By J. ADAM BAILEY
Collegian Staff

James Wasielewski, who allegedly struck and killed University of Massachusetts student Napadol Charukultharvatch, 23, of Bangkok, Thailand last Saturday was arraigned Monday on charges of operating a vehicle to endanger, operating under the influence of alcohol, failure to stay in the right lane, speeding, and vehicular homicide.

Wasielewski's attorney, Sebastian Ruggeri of Greenfield, asked Franklin County District Court for a show—cause hearing. The hearing will take place "early next week," Sunderland Police Chief Charles Smiarowski said.

Wasielewski's pre—trial hearing will be on October 6, Smiarowski said. He was released on bail to his parents, Smiarowski said.

In another fatality this weekend, Paul Cuddy, 63 of 56 Warner Road, Northampton, was killed, when a car driven by David Bruno, 23, of North Reading allegedly hit Cuddy's car on Route 201 near an area called "the lookout post," according to Pelham police.

Bruno was allegedly involved in two other accidents within 24 hours of hitting Cuddy, Amherst and Pelham police said.

After the accident Bruno was taken to Cooley—Dickenson Hospital in Northampton with a possible fractured jaw and concussion. He was released early yesterday afternoon according to hospital officials.

Bruno is being charged with vehicular homicide and a variety of other motor vehicle law violations, Pelham police said.

Bruno's arraignment has not been set, according to Pelham police.

Budgets conflict over SATF audit

By TORI JONES
Collegian Staff

The Board of Trustees recently approved $16,000 of SGA funds to support an audit of the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF). However, only $10,000 had been budgeted by the students. This is one of a number of fiscal problems to be dealt with, said Al Wallace, SGA Treasurer.

At the June 19 meeting of the Committee on Audits it was agreed that students would be "given an opportunity to review the format or scope of the audit in the proposals under consideration to ensure that the particular concerns related to the Student Activities Trust Fund are met." This was stated in a letter sent yesterday by Wallace to those involved in the audit process.

However, at the following meeting, The Committee of Audits decided to hire the consortium of Peat, Marwick, Mitchell and co.; Stewart, Benjamin, and Brown, P.C.; and Watson, Rice and co. for the audit. The package was submitted to UMass President David Knapp without students being given the chance to review the audit format, as was promised, according to Wallace.

"I was never told of the auditing meeting or given copies of the bids put in," said Wallace.

If students had been consulted, it is doubtful that Peat, Warwick, Mitchell and co. would have been hired, he said.

They have already performed 17 audits on campus, said Wallace, including last year's audit, therefore their bid would not be reduced or competitive. The firm wants $16,000 to do the audit this year, a 70 percent increase from the $9,000 they charged last year.

Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs, Dennis Madson, said the extra cost was not as important as the quality of the firm involved, but he does not know where the extra $6,000 will come from. He blamed "communication linkage breakdown" for Wallace's absence at the second Audit Committee meeting, and said that the whole process should begin earlier next year, so that everyone has a "more direct and clear knowledge of receiving the bids."

Graduate Senate to choose sec'y

By RUTH HAGBERG
Collegian Correspondant

The seven nominees for Secretary of the Graduate student Senate were announced at the Graduate Student Senate's first fall meeting Tuesday night.

The secretary, who will execute the senate's administrative duties, will be chosen in an election at next week's meeting of the Graduate Student Senate.

Three people were chosen for the election committee which will determine election procedures within the state. The three are Rick Cordullo, Jose Trejo, and Chris Dede.

Senate president Jack A. Delmond said that for the first time, the graduate students will be allowed to sit in on committee meetings of the graduate council, a committee of the faculty senate. Also for the first time there will be a graduate student representative on each of these committees.

A record of the budget and expenses for Fiscal year 1980 up to September 15 was given to those attending by Michael Pazyra, GSS treasurer. He brought up the need for starting a finance committee and opened the floor for nominations. The nominations will be finalized next week. The availability of two work study positions was announced at the meeting. One position is for an office assistant and the other for a bookkeeper. Also, at the Everywomans Center, a graduate student is wanted for the position of child care supervisor. No funding has been provided for the position so far, but it is possible for the position to be an internship.

After what president Jack Delmond called a "smooth running summer," the Graduate Student Senate looks forward to another productive year.

First Impression

When I first arrived at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst, I just stood in a state of bewilderment! Coming from a small town, East Point, near Atlanta, Georgia. The campus looked huge to me, in fact, UMass is twice the size of my hometown.

However, bewilderment was not only because of the size of UMass, but also as a result of all those preconceived thoughts that tend to fill anyone's mind when going into a new environment. If anyone remembers back as far as their freshman year in college, wondering what if no one likes me?, what if my courses are too hard? and just "What Ifs" in general. As I'm getting settled, I'm beginning to see that people aren't so horrible; Bostonians aren't really arrogant and snobs, and I will make friends. Also that my courses are not reasonably hard. In fact most of the people seem really warm and friendly, especially my black brothers and sisters. They all seem ready and willing to lend a kind word, give directions and even be of assistance.

Now the campus appears half the original size and the thought I had of being lost in the crowd; which is composed of 26,000 students, seems less likely. "Thanks", of course to the Committee for Collegiate Education of Black Students (CCEBS) who have directed me to courses and programs that will help me most. Such as Black Affairs. I was the editor of the Future Business Leaders of America paper at my High School, and my major is Journalism.

I feel I'm going to like UMass! The proportion of Black students to white students isn't going to make much difference, because the Black population seems to be tightly woven together. I've seen from pictures and heard from verbal accounts of mass turnouts for the Third World Picnic held every year. Also the fact that over 90 percent of Black students on campus are members of CCEBS.

For the most part, the majority of my fellow freshmen feel as I do about UMass. Most of them have not had any problems and don't forsee any. But all commented that "We've only just begun".

I interviewed 85 percent of the brothers and sisters who are freshmen, Judie Johnson of New York and Darryl Ruffun of Lynn, MA gave the following responses to the following questions:

Q: What do you think about the CCEBS program as far as assistance with choosing classes and helping you find what you need on campus?

Judie: "Not familiar with CCEBS."

Darryl: "They hooked me up at orientation. So far so good."

Q: Do you think UMass is a big campus and will have everything you need as far as courses?

J: "It's not as big as I thought. It has everything I need."

D: "Ya."

Q: What is your opinion about the brothers and sisters who aren't freshmen as far as directions, information and friendliness?

J: "Very friendly, which I'm not used to being from New York. Since we're so few, everybody sticks together, I've noticed."

D: Helpful and friendly, you know to me.

Q: Have you had any problems with students in your dorm or on campus?

J: No.

D: Not yet.

Q: How do your instructors seem so far?

J: They seem to know what they are talking about, which is different from my high school. I understand them really well.

D: Alright I guess so far.

Q: Do you feel prejudice in the air from any student or teachers?

J: No not at all.

D: A little bit, I have to say I do.

Q: Do you forsee any problems?

J: No.

D: No.

As we are few being freshmen, so are we as Black people. An education is only one part of the experience we will encounter. Socializing is another very important aspect. "Surely we won't display the same prejudices on other Third World Students as others have done to us!" We must unite! But in a orderly and proficient manner.

DuBois Dedication Ceremony

Amherst, MA.—The W.E.B. DuBois Papers, a collection representing work of the country's major black leader and scholar, will be dedicated at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst Friday and Saturday, Sept. 19 and 20.

The collection, which includes more than 130,000 pages of letters, manuscripts and other items, is the major single source of Du Bois material. It was acquired in 1973 from Du Bois' widow, Shirley Grahame Du Bois. The dedication climaxes a six-year effort by UMass to preserve, organize and catalogue the collection and to put the majority of it on microfilm for access by scholars and researchers.

Dedication events will include a series of workshops Friday and a dedication ceremony at 10 a.m. Saturday in the Campus Center Auditorium. The speaker will be Dr. Lerone Bennett, Jr., author and editor of Ebony magazine.

The workshops, to be held Friday in the Campus Center, will be by panels of faculty and black affairs specialists from UMass and other institutions. One on "Du Bois' Contributions to Black History" and one on "Du Bois on Sociology" will be held at 2 p.m.; one on "Du Bois and Africa" and another on "Du Bois and the Education of Black People" will be held at 4 p.m.

At a banquet Friday evening in the Campus Center, the address will be by Dr. Herbert Aptheker, historian and author of several books on Du Bois. An exhibit of items from the collection will open Friday at noon in Campus Center 163. It will run from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday.

A Massachusetts native, born in Great Barrington, in 1868, Du Bois was scholar, political activist, sociologist, teacher, diplomat, playwright, poet, novelist and journalist. His active life extended from the late 19th century to the 1960's, and his involvement in civil rights, black artistic movements, the peace campaign and Pan-Africanism led to his world-wide recognition as a major figure of the century. His prophecy, made 80 years ago, that "the problem of the twentieth century is the problem of the color-line" has been demonstrated as true both for this country and internationally. He died in Ghana in 1963 at age 95.

Of the 130,000 pages in the W.E.B. Du Bois Papers, 100,000 are correspondence, including exchanges with such world figures as Booker T. Washington, Albert Einstein, Mahatma Ghandi, W.C. Handy, H.G. Wells, William James, Jomo Kenyatta and Martin Luther King, Jr.

The collections also includes literary manuscripts, novels, poems, plays and pageants; article drafts and manuscripts, plus manuscripts of over 300 different speeches, and newspaper columns and other journalistic manuscripts.

The opening of the collection "will provide researchers with the opportunity for a full and complete re-examination of the historic significance of Du Bois in American and international life," according to Du Bois project archivist Robert McDonnell.

The dedication committee is headed by Dr. Esther M.A. Terry, UMass associate provost, and includes Dr. Randolph W. Bromery, who was UMass chancellor in the 1970's and headed the effort to acquire the papers.

Workshop participants: "Du Bois and Sociology," Dr. Edwin D. Driver of the solciology department at UMass/Amherst; Dr. G. Franklin Edwards of the department of sociology at Howard University; Dr. Ewart Guinier, emeritus professor of Afro-American studies at Harvard; and Dr. James Turner, director of the Africana Studies and Research Center at Cornell.

"Du Bois and the Education of Black People," Dr. Hollis R. Lynch of the Institute of African Studies at Columbia and Dr. Meyer Weinberg of the UMass School of Education. "Du Bois' Contribution to Black History," Dr. Irene Diggs, emeritus professor of history at Morgan State University; Dr. E.J. Josey of the New York State Library; and Dr. Sidney Kaplan of UMass/Amherst.

"Du Bois and Africa," E. Amatei Akuetez of the Ghana Embassy; Dr. John Clarke, head of Afro-American studies at Hunter College; and Dr. E.S. Reddy, director of the Centre Against Apartheid of the United Nations.

With the beginning of a new year, the University has taken on many new characteristics internally as well as externally. Many departments find themselves with new personnel and faculty, and the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students (CCEBS) is no exception. The fresh, new face warming the halls of the New Africa House is that of Doris Arrington, the new academic advisor to the class of 1984.

A native of Bridgeport, Connecticut, Arrington did her undergraduate study at the University of Connecticut and graduated in 1977 obtaining her BA. She continued her education at Springfield College and graduated with a masters of education (Med.) degree in 1978 in Student Personnel.

Particularly interested in the higher education of Third World people, Arrington says such an appeal lead her to CCEBS. Yet her duties run deeper than academic counselling. "Though CCEBS' major function is as an academic support group, it has evolved into a system which takes on many other responsibilities, ranging from academics to housing to personal counselling."

So what are her feelings about the 105 new CCEBS students? Her face beams with enthusiasm at the asking. "They're very aware academically! They're already asking questions pertaining to their majors and the like. Also, they are very diverse in their selection of majors, not like five or six years ago when the majority of us were geared toward the Social Sciences or Education; There are a number of business, engineering, pre-med, chemistry, food science, and other science oriented majors among this class. Finally, despite entering at a difficult time, both financially and residentially, the class of '84 was able to rise above this. They have the potential of becoming a very close-knit class."

Her only goal and advice to her class are to insure the combined efforts of CCEBS and the University to see to it that every class member graduate, and the her first year students are able to establish a comfortable balance between their academics and their extracurricular activities. "It's part of the whole educational experience."

Arrington's immediate plans are to take some courses in the School of Business. Her long term goals may call for a career change to which she states, "I've become more of a business-minded person."

Upon the close of the interview, Arrington expressed her thanks to the people of the black community for all of their support, especially in helping her as coordinator of the freshpersons orientation. To Ms. Doris Arrington, the community says thank you and welcome!

No Return to Cuba

MIAMI (AP) — In a statement hailed by U.S. officials, the Castro government warned Cuban refugees yesterday that they made "a one-way trip" to the United States. It said those who hijack planes to return home face "drastic penal measures" and could be extradited.

"The scum have become disillusioned. Thousands have had bitter experiences in the Yankee paradise and now want to come back to Cuba," the Communist Party newspaper Granma said in a front-page article which was read over Radio Havana and monitored in Miami.

Cuban authorities had previously said hijackers would be prosecuted, but yesterday's statement gave a stronger warning, of "drastic penal measures" or "return to the United States to be judged in that country."

It was the Cuban's closest step yet toward cooperation since the current spate of nine hijackings to Cuba — nearly all blamed on homesick refugees — began on Aug. 10.

U.S. officials earlier had complained that Cuban authorities weren't providing information on the hijackers' fates, thus encouraging rumors among Cuban exiles here that hijackers were being released to their families.

Secretary of State Edmund Muskie, in a statement issued in Washington, said the United States "welcomes the decision just announced by the Cuban government" and called it "a positive step" in combatting terrorism.

The Cuban newspaper article rejected U.S. efforts to organize a "reverse airlift" for the dissatisfied refugees among the some 123,000 Cubans who have come to the United States since President Fidel Castro opened the port of Mariel in late April.

"It is necessary to reiterate that those who abandon the fatherland have no return: they went on a one-way trip," the article said. "At this time, none of them would have a house or a place to live, nor a job, if any of them really wanted to work. Besides, the Cuban people unanimously oppose their return."

Editorial/Opinion

Horatio Alger v. human failure

It is so hard to forget what a grandmother tells you. My own put me on a chair a long while back, I remember very well, and in a flash of her aging eyes said "If you don't try, you'll fail. It is so important for a young man to be resourceful. So use what you have been blessed with! Try." Then, quite softly, "There are so many deadbeats around. But you won't be one of them." She wanted me to know that I was growing up.

Yet buried deenly in her great concern, and this I discovered much later, was one of the greatest fallacies American society has ever produced: a subtle and harmful connection between human failure and laziness. But the connection was made way before my grandmother's time; this connection stretches far back in American history, and was very important in the rugged individualism of the Antibellum days. It is something that has always been with Americans, as equally present in the old Horatio Alger stories as with the inocous beer commercials of today. It is an attitude that says "go for the gusto" (and if you do, you can't fail). It rings in everyone's ears.

But there was something of importance in what my grandmother said. She is right, I feel it in my heart that everyone must try to the best of their ability, always try, at least to help themselves, and perhaps others less fortunate. But problems will never cease. My grandmother used to work for the state, and she would come home at night with stories about her fellow workers, those with secured lifetime civil jobs, and of how they didn't work, because they never, legally, could be pushed. They didn't try. They were lazy. Much resource was wasted. Yet it was obvious to her, too, then, that it was not only the people, but the state's system bureaucratic that failed.

The system does fail, or at least it has holes. It is so important to grasp this fact. From here you can move to accept that there are, and will be tomorrow, lazy people—more importantly, however, to a realization that even more are unlucky. Then, when the connection is made, as it always is, between the welfare system and human failure (i.e., laziness) you can say that it is, in most instances, dead wrong. You can say, "even more people are unlucky. Don't blame the victim."

In America the victims are getting blamed. The welfare system is one example where it has always been better to blame the individual, to call him or her lazy, and a good for nothing, than attack the country's economy that failed to employ them. It is better for the country to blame the victim, because if this wasn't the case a fear would rise out of the truth that something very large has gone bump in the night. In the United States everyone cannot "go for the gusto." There is not enough to go around. Not enough beds, houses, work, and sometimes, even food.

Sadly, things always filter down from the top. The unlockiness, the insensitivity, and the lying in this truly American go-for-the-gusto economics reached the lawn in front of the Whitmore building the other day. The UMass sky jumping club had shown up, making its semesterly appearance, trying to solicit funds and new members with a jump show, landing between the cars on the oval driveway. Unfortunately, something went wrong with one of the jumpers, and he landed awfully hard. Bystanders heard a bone cracking one hundred feet away. A leader from the jump club, with a megaphone said, "Oh, he's all right. Just a sprained ankle. Yes. Just a sprained ankle, if that. Why don't all of you stay around. More jumps are coming, in about five minutes." Yet it was too late. They had seen enough and wanted to leave. The bump in the night was a bang on the ground. A man was bent below the knees.

An ambulance came and took him away. Perhaps it was a harbinger.

Paul's Confusion Part Three

By ERIC JANZEN

Paul's drowsy recollection of his dream broke under the torrential pull of duty; he was almost never late for class. Jumping out of bed, Paul stumbled over still unpacked boxes of books toward his desk, grabbed an opened envelope and ripped it apart strewing most of its contents around the room. A letter-sized sheet of green computer print-out remained in his hand.

"Ah! Here it is!" he exclaimed. He often talked—even shouted—to himself aloud, even when other people were around him. "'Economics 333: Economics of American Nastiness,'" Paul read to no one.

"What?" asked Peter, one of Paul's roommates, sticking his head into Paul's room. "Sorry," (Paul was nude) "I heard you talking..."

"Uh, that's OK," Paul chirped, his voice cracking. "I got an economics class this morning." But Peter had already left down the hallway toward the kitchen.

In only a few minutes Paul had dressed, collected his notebooks and papers, and stood in the doorway panning the kitchen in search of something to eat quickly before rushing off to class. Peter, frying eggs, watched him and asked, "Want some eggs?"

"Thanks but I'm in a hurry—thought I'd grab some toast or something," Paul replied.

"When's your class?" Peter asked.

"Nine o'clock," Paul answered.

"So's mine," Peter said viewing the frying pan, smiling a little smugly.

"I don't want to be late for the first class," Paul said turning his head, pretending to be distracted by a slamming door downstairs.

"If you're early, you're anxious; if you're on time, you're compulsive; if you're late, you're hostile," Peter recited, carefully turning over two eggs. "What's the class?"

Paul darted over to a row of shelves, got two pieces of bread and, putting them in the toaster-oven, answered, "Economics. Something to do with American economic history."

"Nastiness. Professor Rower's course. A socialist critique," Peter said, pronouncing socialist in a deep voice with a fairly accurate Russian accent, Paul thought.

"Yeah, I heard he was a socialist," Paul said animately.

"Who isn't? I mean, unless you're in the Business Department. Among students who've bothered to think about it, hating capitalism has all the novelty of tennis. That's all socialism is: hating capitalism. It's not a solution, it's just a very long, involved criticism," Peter said sitting down at the kitchen table. "Economics lectures put me in a trance like a fistfull of Valium. If it lasts more than fifteen minutes, it's alienation of labor."

"I disagree," Paul said too loudly; more quietly, "Socialism does offer solutions. It says things should be organized so that wealth is evenly distributed, that the profit motive doesn't encourage social and economic equality..."

"Right. That logically follows from hating capitalism. Socialism is all the things capitalism isn't:' equality, cooperation, etc. But socialism, if you look at how it functions in the real world, has just as serious problems, like cumbersome bureaucracies and inefficiency and suppression of free speech," Peter said. "Those problems might be worse."

"So why bother doing anything, there's no real difference between capitalists and socialists, right?" Paul said, as always too defensively.

"A capitalist is someone enamored of existing evils, as distinguished from a socialist, who wishes to replace them with others," Peter said dropping his plate into the sink, his mouth full of toast and eggs. "I don't know. I eat my breakfast and go to class. That's what I do about anything," he said. "Catch you later." Peter clumped down the stairs. Paul pulled his toast, now cold, out of the oven and followed after him.

Fire Marshall says 'No danger during crisis'

To the Editor:

Mr. James M. Garrity, President of Chadbourne dormitory, wrote to the Collegian last Tuesday and claimed that the UMass administration endangered all dormitory residents' lives during the water emergency because there was no fire protection. Mr. Garrity has been misinformed.

Upon confirmation of the water problem on campus and the surrounding neighborhood, the Amherst Fire Department summoned to duty additional personnel, and utilized 21,000 gallon water tankers to augment their normal pumping apparatus, which carry an average of 400 gallons of water each. By providing their own independent water supply, the Fire Department guaranteed the availability of adequate water for firefighting purposes. Additional police patrols and firewatch teams were instituted and circulated throughout dormitories.

The University does not house students in "firetraps." All dormitories meet or exceed Commonwealth of Massachusetts Building Code Regulations under which they were constructed. Extensive use of concrete and steel in student room design assures that ceilings, walls, and floors will not contribute combustible materials to a fire situation. Student room doors are designed to withhold flames for more than an hour.

UMass is one of the few major universities in the country to have smoke detector protection in each student sleeping space in the dormitory system. Also, numerous fire extinguishers are located strategically in each dormitory for use on minor fires. All dormitories are equipped with building fire alarm systems, monitored on a 24 hour basis.

A trained, University Fire Inspector conducts building inspections to seek out fire hazards and violations of state fire prevention statutes, and directs these items to the appropriate University department for corrective action.

The University provides fire safety education and fire extinguisher training sessions for all members of the University community upon request.

The University tests fire protection and suppression equipment, such as fire extinguishers, fire alarm systems, sprinkler and standpipe systems, fire pumps, laboratory emergency drench showers, and fire hydrants to assure operation of this vital equipment, if required for a fire emergency.

The University conducts fire evacuation drills in all dormitories, academic buildings, day care centers, and the Health Services complex to familiarize all occupants with the sound of the fire alarm system and to acquaint them with emergency exiting procedures.

In addition, the University has undertaken an ambitious and costly fire protection improvement program to upgrade dormitory fire alarm systems, install sprinkler protection, and provide smoke control inside buildings during fire emergencies.

The Administration has supported our efforts to provide a more fire safe environment at this University. They have been criticized unjustly, and were not gambling with the lives of the live-in student population should a fire have occurred.

You, as dormitory residents, can provide for your own fire safety by using common sense in your everyday activities, and by exerting peer pressure on the small minority amongst you who pull false alarms, or activate building smoke detector systems maliciously.

Last year, most of our 492 fire alarms on campus were for false alarms. False alarms waste thousands of dollars that could be utilized to improve the quality of your education at this institution. It ties up fire apparatus needlessly, when they may be required at a real fire emergency elsewhere. And most importantly, it desensitizes dormitory residents towards the importance of the fire alarm warning signal. Remeber—the time you fail to properly respond to the fire alarm signal may make the difference between life and death.

I hope you will join with me, and together we can assure a fire safe academic year to come.

Sincerely,
Keith E. Hoyle
Fire Marshal

Crying wolf is no 'prank'

To the Editor:

Tuesday night while walking behind Whitmore my friends and I heard hysterical screams coming from the side of the Fine Arts Center. Immediately we ran towards the yells to investigate. What we found were two men and one woman very drunk laughing at their "prank".

If the problem of rape and assault are to be solved on the UMass campus two things must be emphasized:

1) We must not fall into the "cry wolf" state of mind. Any and all screams which sound more than just tom-foolery must be responded to immediately.

2) Those who pull such childish "pranks" must realize they are putting themselves and the entire UMass women's community into jeopardy.

Sincerely,
John Hudson

An Olympic epilogue

By NANCY PARKS
Collegian Staff

With a dream coming true four years early, it was a bitter disappointment for Judy Strong when the US Women's Field Hockey Team did not compete in the Moscow Olympics.

Hoping to make the 1984 Olympic team Strong was very surprised to have made it through all three camps that the women were required to go through.

She was even more surprised and thrilled to hear from the committee that she had been accepted as a member of the 1980 Olympic Team.

So one can understand the hurt and disappointment Strong felt when she found out that President Jimmy Carter decided to boycott the Olympics.

Originally Strong had intended to play basketball at UMass, she even had a scholarship to the school.

But during a summer development camp in Springfield for field hockey, Stron met Pam Hixon. It was the summer before Strong's freshman year and also the year Hixon was to start as the new coach.

Strong was not sure she really wanted to play field hockey but Hixon persuaded her to try out for the team because of her obvious talent for the sport.

Strong played a good game her freshman year and pretty soon she found herself headed for Springfield to try out at C-camp with a recommendation from Hixon.

Fifteen women are picked from C-camp to go on the the next camp, B. Strong was one of those picked.

B-camp was held at Pennsylvania State University and there Strong competed with 90 other women for a chance at proceeding to the final and deciding camp.

Of those 90 women 35 are picked to go on to A-camp, where the women have to put out their most and hope for a spot on the Olympic team.

Strong was picked and off she went to Colorado for the final try out at A camp.

Strong came home after A-camp having been told that she would hear from the committee through the mail. Two days after she got home Strong received a letter from the camp—she had made it.

"I was shocked, I couldn't believe it," Strong said. "I had a dream to go to the 1984 Olympics, but I never thought things would happen so quick and I'd be heading for the 1980 Olympics."

The women started out immediately with a summer tour in Europe. They played club teams in Holland, Germany and Scotland, playing sixteen games; winning thirteen, tying two and losing one.

It was in Holland, while the Olympic Team was playing in an Easter Tournament, that they heard it looked like they would be able to compete in the Olympics after all.

Judy Strong (File photo by Ben Marsden)

What hurt the most was coming home to the US with their hopes up to be told something totally different.

"I couldn't believe he would do something like that," said Strong. "You get one chance to go, and someone takes it away from you."

Strong has learned to funnel her disappointment and hate into her game. She is playing harder and stronger and her main goal now is to play well in the October tournament, a tourney held in the US.

It will be the first time the US will see its Olympic field hockey play in the US. The first game will be held at Boston University on October 15, from there the team will travel to Baltimore and Philadelphia.

After that Strong will heald out for C-camp and a try at the 1981 US Women's Field Hockey Team.

"I could just never quit, I really enjoy playing," said Strong. "I just don't think politics and sports should ever mix."

A matter of time

Russ Pirkot seemed surprised that the question was even asked.

"Crazy?" he said. "No, I'm not crazy."

Russ Pirkot steps out of airplanes. He is not crazy.

"Have you ever dreamed of flying?" asked Pirkot, secretary of the UMass Sport Parachute Club. "I think everyone's had that dream. Well, skydiving the realization of that dream. When you reach terminal velocity, you're going about 120 mph. There's nothing like it."

Russ Pirkot steps out of airplanes.

Kevin Cullen

The club jumps at Turners Falls. Charlie Behonowitz owns the land on which they jump.

Is Charlie Behonowitz crazy?

"No, he's not crazy," Pirkot says. "He just lets us jump on his land."

Last Thursday, Russ Pirkot stepped out of an airplane. The airplane was 5000 feet in the air and he fell for 15 seconds before he pulled a rip-cord. Russ Pirkot hit the ground going 25 mph and fractured his ankle in two places.

Russ Pirkot is not crazy.

"I feel pretty good," Pirkot said last night from the infirmary, to where he was transferred from Cooley-Dickinson Hospital on Thursday night. "I'm going home tomorrow (Wed.). I have to go back to Cooley-Dickinson on Thursday. They're going to knock me out, take off the cast, examine it, and then I'll either get a smaller cast or they'll put a pin in my ankle."

Russ Pirkot is not crazy.

Russ Pirkot is amazed at the amount of media coverage he received. After all, he said, he only broke his ankle.

"Some friends of mine read about my accident on the obituary page of the Quincy Patriot-Ledger," Pirkot said. "A Springfield paper had a story saying I fell out of plane at 1000 feet. Another said I was an associate professor at UMass. I liked that one."

Most of Pirkot's discomfort has been in his back, as a result of lying in one position for so long.

"It's been a hell of an experience," Pirkot says. "I've met some nice people in the infirmary. We have two broken ankles, three mono's, and one psychotic. We're gonna have a party next week."

Will Russ Pirkot ever step out of an airplane again?

"Oh, hell, yeah," he says, "It's just a matter of time, until my ankle is okay. The more you jump, the more you're aware of what can go wrong. But you also know how to get out of trouble.

"This isn't the kind of thing to keep me from jumping," Russ Pirkot says. "I'm not crazy."

Gridders' asst. coach optimistic

By SHARON PANNOZZO
Collegian Staff

There's a new face on the UMass football staff this season. It belongs to Bob Karmelowicz, the offensive line coach. In July, Karmelowicz officially became a member of this coaching staff, filling the vacancy created when Coach Ken Conatster left.

As an outstanding offensive tackle for the University of Bridgeport in the early 1970's, he received All-New England, All-East, and All-American recognition. Karmelowicz began his coaching career at Milford, Ct. High School following a brief stint with the Bridgeport Jets of the Atlantic Coast Conference.

His first contact with the Minutemen football program came in April of this year, when he was hired as a consultant for the Spring football camp. "I was very impressed with the football program here at UMass," said Karmelowicz. "The defensive play was also very physical." Karemlowicz described the UMass coaching staff the finest in New England, and as one of the best in the Northeast.

Before coming to UMass, he retained a similar position at Arizona State University, a perennial Division IA powerhouse. "There are some differences in the quality of players here and at A.S.U. The main distinction lies in the players' size and quickness." Karmelowicz feels that some of his players here could play anywhere in the country.

Overall, Karmelowicz feels that his offensive line has potential. "It's a matter of executing effectively," he said. "I'm giving the players options on offensive line calls. If they make the right decisions I expect that we will be very successful."

Karmelowicz will discover very soon the true strengths of his offensive line. Saturday the Minutemen open the season against Villanova.

Netwomen squeak past Tufts

By ANTONY KUNDERT

The women's tennis team defeated Tufts University 5 matches to 4, in a contest that went right down to the last set. This raised the netwomen's record to an impressive 3-0.

The match was played on the Boyden courts and was the first home match. Despite some wind, it was a good tennis day and the games went smoothly.

It looked like it was going to be an easy match for UMass, as the early scores roled in. The first to finish was Barbara Mills, with a convincing victory in the number one spot 6-2, 6-0. Then came the number four seed Sue Lochiatto who won 6-2, 6-3. Paula Natalia crushed her opponent 6-0, 6-0. The number two doubles, Sally Fryberger and Helen Najarian rounded out the early finishers with a 6-1, 6-0 win.

"We were in the zone," (they had good concentration), commented Sally Fryberger on their games.

Needing only one match to take the contest, UMass lost the next four matches to tie the score at 4-4. At this point, Elizabeth Sullivan was in her third set against a very tought competitor.

"She was very consistent and made me really work for each point," said Sullivan of her opponent. But work she did, winning her match 6-3, 4-6, 6-4, to give the netwomen their third straight victory.

"The team played up to their potential but Tufts is definitely a weaker team than last year's," coach John Beal said. The team members were really happy over the win. "We've never beaten them, never, in fact we've always gotten killed," said Mills. Natalia said, "Everybody was dying to beat Tufts, everybody's psyched."

The netwomen play Smith College this coming Thursday at 3 p.m. on the Boyden courts.

Senate appoints Attorney General

By DON STARUK and KENNETH ROSS
Collegian Correspondents

By a narrow vote, the Undergraduate Student Senate elected an Attorney General in its first meeting of the fall semester last night.

The Senate elected Dana Collier, a member of the Legal Services office governing Board last spring, by a vote of 26 to 6 with seven abstentions.

A two-thirds vote of the Senate was needed to elect the Attorney General.

The election sparked a heated debate in which co-Presidents Richard LaVoice and Richard Moran expressed the need to fill the office quickly and stressed the qualifications and experience of the candidate.

"She's qualified, we've got to get moving on this. The points that have been raised (against the election of Collier) are undocumented and unsubstantiated," LaVoice said.

The Attorney General is a Presidential Appointment which is then confirmed by the Senate. The office runs the student judiciary system which handles cases involving student discipline and student complaints.

Those opposed to the appointment objected to its hurriedness and questioned the candidate's competence.

Senator Michael Cohen said Collier had been "uncooperative with the Student Judiciary. She has been in the seat (over the summer) even though she has had no right to be there. She is basically the presidents' puppet. The presidents have been negligent in appointing an acting Attorney General over the summer and now they're trying to ram this down our throats."

Co-President Rich Moran said he was relieved over the vote.

A lot of the dissension arose because it was the first meeting; there were a small number of Senators present; and they were not expecting the appointment to happen so soon. I think that a lot of those who abstained would proabably have voted for her at a future date. I'm very happy with this. I feel she is a superior candidate."

Collier, a junior social thought and political economy major said she was "pysched" about her appointment.

"I'd like to bring th office more credibility. My purpose is to get students involved in the judiciary, and I'd like to strengthen the Attorney General's office," she said.

In other business the Senate also set Senate election dates for October 6th and 7th. The dates met with some opposition because they fall on a Monday and Tuesday and could cause apathy among voters after a weekend break. The vote passed overwhelmingly however.

The Senate also appointed Jeff Krunig as SGA controller. The duties of his office are to maintain the Asset and Mail System of the Senate as well as an assistant to the finance committee.

DVP seeks Arts Council funds

By J. ADAM BAILEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Distinguished Visitors Program may receive $1,000 from the Arts Council to help bring actor James Whitmore to UMass on October 16.

The $1,000 request was approved yesterday by the Arts Council's program committee, which will recommend to the full council the approval of the funding. The full council was scheduled to meet and vote on the proposal this morning.

The original DVP request was for $3,500, which was reduced to $2,000 when the Council said no to the original request, said DVP Chairperson Howard Goldman.

When Goldman told Whitmore's agent how tight the money was, he lowered the original price from $6,500 to $5,500 which includes the speech, air fare, limousene, hotel accomodations and any other expenses, Goldman said.

The $1,000 will "bring the total down to $4,500," Goldman said.

DVP hopes to make $2,000 with student ticket sales, and maybe break even with ticket sales to the general public, he said.

Goldman said that only $8,000 remains in the DVP budget, because $3,000 has already been alloted for the G. Gordon Liddy appearence next week.

Assassins' bomb kills Somoza

ASUNCION, Paraguay [AP] — Exiled Nicaraguan leader Anastasio Somoza was assassinated yesterday by a squad of killers who ambushed his automobile in a crossfire of bullets and bazooka fire on a quiet city street, authorities reported. Somoza's driver and an aide also died in the miliatry-stlye assault.

Paraguayan police said all nine or so assassins escaped, but they believed more than half were wounded in a gunfight with Somoza's bodyguards.

News that the ex-president was dead set off wild celebrations in Nicaragua, where government officials claimed the "freedom forces" of Paraguay carried out the assassination.

But Somoza associates here said they suspected Nicaraguan revolutionaries.

The 54-year-old Somoza was ousted from power in July 1979 in a revolution led by leftist Sandinista guerrillas. His family had ruled Nicaragua, with U.S. support, for more than 40 years.

His bloody end came in a country where he arrived 14 months ago in search of "tranquility." In recent weeks, however, the ever-defiant, West Point-educated Somoza vowed anew that he would "return and conquer Nicaragua."

The devastating attack by automatic weapons and a bazooka rocket left Somoza's white Mercedes demolished, a witness reported.

An Asuncion radio station said the stocky ex-president was hit by some 25 bullets that "virtually shredded" his body.

According to accounts by witnesses and police:

Somoza set off from his luxurious villa shortly after 10 a.m. for the 10-minute ride to central Asuncion, either to go shopping or to carry out his regular exercise program downtown. He was accompained by his driver, a bodyguard and an unidentified companion who sat with him in the rear.

Another car followed, carrying two bodyguards and a driver.

At an intersection seven blocks from the U.S. Embassy, a blue Chevrolet pickup truck suddenly roared up, and its occupants opened fire with small arms. Immediately, a machine gun opened up from a nearby house, and a bazooka rocket struck the Mercedes.

The bodyguards in the trailing car leaped out and fired back at the attackers.

Police said they believed as many as seven of the assailants were wounded — as many as five of the six or seven in the house, and one or two of the three in the truck.

Those in the truck sped off, later abandoning the truck and switching to another car. Those who fled the house commandeered a passing auto and escaped.

Prof. examines assasination in Paraguay

By JAMES F. MAHONEY
Collegian Staff

Yesterday's military-operation-style assasination of Anastasio Somoza in Paraguay will probably have no overwhelming repercussions on either the Nicaraguan or the Paraguayan governments, a University of Massachusetts professor said last night.

Howard Wiardi, a professor in the University of Massachusetts political science department, said that history had already passed Somoza by, and his political impact in Nicaragua was all but gone.

"Somoza's time had come and gone," said Wiardi. He has been out of Nicaragua for more than a year and he probably just wanted to find a "quiet little country to 'retire' in to," he said.

The noises Somoza had made about returning to the country were nothing more than a defeated dictators customary final vows, said Wiardi. "I doubt he was serious about going back," he said.

No group has claimed responsibility for the well planned killing, including small arms fire, machine gun fire and bazookas, although many small guerilla organizations are highly active in Paraguay.

"Guerilla groups in Paraguay have been trying to overthrow Gen. Stroesner (dictator of Paraguay) for nearly 20 years," said Wiardi.

It is possible, yet unlikely, that a Sandinist (the ruling body in Nicaragua) group did the killings through one of these Paraguayan guerila organizations, Wiardi said.

Wiardi also said the Nicaraguan government had tried for the past year to have Somoza extradited back to Nicaragua through legal means. The Paraguaian government had refused to honor the extradition notices.

The Sandinist wanted to put Somoza on trial for his crimes against the Nicaraguans, and more importantly to get hold of

Accusations anger Brzezinski

WASHINGTON — Zbigniew Brzezinski, President Carter's national security adviser, hotly denied yesterday that he was acting as "a political troubleshooter" when he advised Billy Carter to back off a business deal involving Libya.

And he reacted with anger when the truthfulness of his testimony before a special Senate judiciary subcommittee was challenged by Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C.

Brzezinski said he was telling the truth and accused Thurmond of making "highly improper insinuations."

In his rare public testimony, Brzezinski told the investigating senators that when he learned from a U.S. intelligence report in late March that Billy Carter was trying to work out a Libyan oil deal, he telephoned Billy and urged him to do nothing that would damage U.S. foreign relations or the president.

Saudis say oil to keep flowing

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Saudi Arabia announced yesterday it will continue to flood oil markets until at least the end of the year, dashing hopes of militant members of the world's oil cartel seeking higher prices.

"We will keep our level of production as it is" for the entire fourth quarter, Saudi Oil Minister Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani told reporters before a final meeting of oil ministers from the 13-nation Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to discuss current prices.

The Venezuelan and Iraqi oil ministers said they expected no price changes from the meeting and Yamani said militants would have to lower their prices before Saudi Arabia would raise its.

Saudi Arabia charges $28 a barrel for its crude oil, and argues this is closer to real market demand than the $37 charged by Libya and Algeria.

Initiative aims to free hostages

In a new initiative aimed at freeing the 52 American hostages, the United States has proposed a commission to examine Iranian grievances about past U.S. actions in Iran.

Iran's frontier war with Iraq intensified Wednesday and President Saddam Hussein of Iraq announced he was abrogating a 1975 border accord with Iran because of "continuing violation of the agreement by the Iranian rulers."

U.S. officials confirmed Wednesday a disclosure by Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr that a new American proposal had been received for an inquiry commission to be set up if it was linked to release of the hostages, now in their 319th day of captivity.

Frank, Shannon win election despite opposition from church

BOSTON (AP) — The Archbishop of Boston and other abortion foes retreated to map strategy Wednesday after a pair of liberal politicians overcame vehement opposition of the Catholic Church in the 1980 Massachusetts primary.

In an election that lured fewer than one-in-four registered voters to the polls Tuesday, Massachusetts enhanced its national reputation as a state that repudiates dogma.

Cardinal Humberto Medeiros' widely disseminated late campaign message in opposition to unidentified politicians who support tax money for abortion either backfired or was simply ignored in the pivotal 4th and 5th Congressional Districts.

No less a political star than Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, making his first foray into Democratic primary politics in his home state in more than a decade, declared that the winners — the targets of anti-abortion ire — "stand in the proud, progressive tradition of Massachusetts."

Kennedy himself effectively stood in opposition to his own church by endorsing two candidates who support abortion rights.

In the 4th, where the Vatican ordered Rep. Robert F. Drinan, a Jesuit priest, out of politics, liberal state Rep. Barney Frank of Newton beat conservative Waltham Mayor Arthur Cark, 52 percent to 46.

In the 5th, incumbent Rep. James M. Shannon defeated Lowell businessman Robert Hate, 54 percent to 46.

Both Democratic nominees face Republican novices in November.

"It's unclear whether we'll ever know," said Frank's brother, David, when asked if Medeiros made a difference.

"It was really a wild card."

"Other issues were more important than abortion," said the nominee, a glib Harvard graduate who represented posh Beacon Hill in the Legislature and moved to Newton for the campaign. "I started the campaign on economic issues, but passions became inflamed."

"I lost on a nonissue," lamented Hatem, who opposes abortion but apparently didn't want to base his campaign on it.

Otherwise, there was little to spark voter interest. It was the shortest primary ballot in 12 years, with no statewide contests.

Turnout was heavy in the 4th and 5th districts, but overall it aproached the record low of bout 23 percent in a 1972 primary.

A batch of senior state lawmakers were retired by the voters. The losers included the dean of the Legislature, Rep. Michael Paul Feeney of Boston whose career began in 1939, and the oldest lawmaker, Sen. William X. Wall of Lawrence, 76.

Rugged campaigns are expected in the southeastern 10th Congressional District, where Democrats nominated state Sen. Robert E. McCarthy to try to unseat veteran GOP Rep. Margaret Heckler in November, and in the North Shore's 6th, where GOP newcomer Tom Trimarco won the right to face Democratic Rep. Nicholas Mavroules.

Democratic primary winners for Senate nominations Tuesday included:

Berkshire, John Barrett III, North Adams.
Second Bristol, Mary L. Fonseca, Fall River.
Bristol & Plymouth, William Q. MacLean Jr., Fairhaven.
First Essex, Walter J. Boverini, Lynn.
Second Essex, John G. King, Danvers.
Third Essex, Sharon Pollard, Methuen.

Catholic paper defends cardinal

BOSTON (AP) — The official Catholic newspaper in Boston yesterday defended Cardinal Humberto Medeiros' right to speak out in favor of political candidates who oppose abortion and said he will continue to take controversial stands.

Medeiros raised the biggest issue of the Massachusetts primary campaign when he implied in a front-page letter in The Pilot that Catholics would be committing a moral sin if they voted for candidates who favor legal abortions.

The editorial, prepared for the newspaper's Friday edition, accused social activists of welcoming the cardinal's opinion only when it agrees with their own.

"It is obvious that the marketplace of ideas and political action does not welcome the promulgation of Christian ideals and insights," wrote the Rev. John Grant, editor of the newspaper.

Medeiros' letter last week was interpreted as an endorsement of Robert F. Hatem, who challenged Rep. James M. Shannon in the 5th Congressional District, and of Waltham Mayor Arthur Clark, who ran against state Rep. Barney Frank in the 4th District.

Hatem and Clark, who oppose abortion, both lost in the Democratic primary Tuesday.

The 4th District seat is being vacated by Rep. Robert Drinan, a Jesuit priest who did not seek reelection under orders from the Vatican.

Judge closes file to environmentalists

BOSTON (AP) — Environmental advocates have been setback in trying to build a case showing that political interference prevented fishing waters off New England from being declared a "marine sanctuary."

U.S. District Court Judge John J. McNaught, in a ruling announced yesterday, refused to let the Conservation Law Foundation and the Massachusetts attorney general's office examine confidential Commerce Department files on the Georges Bank decision.

Douglas Foy, a Foundation attorney, told McNaught last week he suspected that internal agency memos and other documents would show White House and congressional intervention on the sanctuary matter.

He claimed that the Office of Management and Budget, as well as certain congressmen, pressured the National Oceanic and Atomospheric Administration, a Commerce agency, to refuse the status for the New England offshore area.

Ted Maynard, a Foundation spokesman, said one of the congressmen allegedly involved was Rep. John B. Breaux, D-La. He said Breaux told NOAA that its budget would be cut if it blocked oil development along the bank.

Sanctuary status would have required the Interior Department to take more environmental precautions before opening up the offshore region for oil and gas drilling.

After the ruling, Interior auctioned some drilling rights along the bank and plans a further sale.

The documents in question have been turned over to McNaught and remain in his custody. Further arguments on the validity of the sanctuary denial are scheduled for next month.

Vital issues: land energy and business

By LARRY COX
Collegian Correspondent

This fall the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group will confront and investigate a number of local issues including consumer, environmental, and energy problems, said Elise Jacques, student organizer of MASSPIRG at the University of Massachusetts.

MASSPIRG representatives Judy Coombs, Ken Ward, and Susan Birmingham, along with executive director Douglas Moreton, outlined plans for the following projects: a communities-housing research project; a water conservation study; action to help pass the Mass. Bottle Bill in the Mass. State Legislature; investigating local toxic waste dumping grounds and their effects and problems; the continuing efforts of the Campaign for Safe Energy; a voter registration drive; and discussions dealing with the drinking age and draft registration.

The most immediate projects about to get under way are the invetigations into the recent water crisis in Amherst (and a report on possible conservation measures) and the hazards of local chemical waste dumping grouds.

The recent crisises caused by chemicl dumpings around the country have prompted MASSPIRG to investigate similar incidents in the Amherst area. These incidents are caused when chemical corporations dump toxic wastes in open, unenclosed lots or dumping grounds, said Moreton.

These chemical dumping grounds have caused various health and respiratory problems, or as in the recent Love Canal crisis, the chemicals find their way into nearby water supplies, forcing area residents to evacuate their homes, Moreton said.

A number of Northampton residents have called MASSPIRG to issue complaints about a possible city ordinance which would allow a local company to dump "non-toxic" wastes into a city-built dumping site, according to Ken Ward.

Residents do not know, however, what company is planning to unload the chemicals, but they have learned the dumping site is to be lined with polyvinal chloride, a highly carcenogenic chemical. A MASSPIRG investigation will start soon, said Ward.

Video films forthcoming

By CATHERINE CLABBY
Collegian Staff

University students will have the chance to film and produce their own video programs and broadcast them on campus at cost within sixty days, the Cable Vision Council announced yesterday.

The council will broadcast programs dealing with "campus events, social themes and educational aims on a regular basis," council member Martha Casey said.

The council will provide equipment and training in cooperation with the Union Video Center to student organizations and community groups, Casey said. Four video outlets, located in the Campus Center and Student Union buildings, are already complete.

"We want to provide an alternative to the usual crass mass media," John Furbish, a second council member, said.

The production and broadcast of a video tape will cost an individual or organization between $10 and $100 dollars, Furbish said.

Organizations or students interested in gaining experience with video equipment or having their event filmed and broadcast must bring a proposal to the council before it can be approved for production, Furbish said.

"We will broadcast anything that is not offensive to the University community's standards," Furbish said. Pornographic materials, explicitly sexist subjects or libelous tapes will not be produced or broadcast, he said.

Broadcast priority will be given to student organizations and events housed in the Campus Center/Student Union Complex, Casey said, because the system is being set up by the Campus Center Board of Governors and the buildings are in its jurisdiction.

Four completed video outlets are located in the Student Union Lobby, Cape Cod Lounge, Student Union Ballroom, and in the Hatch Lobby, and will broadcast one tape simultaneously.

The council will establish a library of tapes, Furbish said. Student made films and pre-recorded video shows will also be broadcast.

'Last Call' features issues of interest

By LAURIE ZUCKER
Collegian Correspondent

Students are invited to participate in a weekly television magazine, "Last Call," being produced by the Union Video Center.

"Last Call" will feature informed reporting on issues of local importance, such as the water crisis. The public will be invited to call in, and question speakers. Feature shorts of interesting people, novel events, on the spot interviews, musicals and other happenings will be included. Students are invited to submit their own short tapes, or bring their ideas to the Union Video Center. UMass student Peter Erickson will host the program.

The Union Video Center was created in 1975, and is funded by the Undergraduate Student Senate.

The center has produced a variety of programs of community and national interest. Last year, a distinguished Visitors Series, was featured with such diverse guests as feminist-activist-singer Holly Near, Francis Crow on Nuclear Power, and many Third World singers and musicians. CCATV, Amherst's Community Cable TV Center, has run center-produced tapes, but production manager Mark Gunning says, "Our biggest problem is distribution."

The Union Video Center is a student-run organization, and use of the equipment is free. Workshops are offered in all phases of audio-visual production to Five-College and Continuing Education students. There is a fee for workshops.

"Last Call," still in the making, will eventually be aired on Channel 3 in Amherst; look for listings in the Advocate and Collegian. Short tapes, independent projects, and interested people are welcome.

Roof construction planned for Student Union building

By MARK L. CURELOP
Collegian Staff

The barrels may soon be removed from the Student Union Building, as well as the drips of water that strike unsuspecting passers by when construction of a new roof begins.

Design Project Engineer William P. Mitnick said the Cambridge firm of Simpson, Gumpertz and Heger Inc., who also did work on the UMass Library, bid too high for roof construction consideration.

Mitnick said the new consultant will provide the design specifications for physical plant architects. He said physical plant workers will also do the construction although no beginning date has been set.

"This will save the University a lot of dollars," Mitnick said.

The new roof is part of a "planned capital program", said Campus Center Director Bill Harris. A planned capital program is when the state legislature approves such work for building repairs.

"It's been part of the program for three years," he said.

Mitnick said that due to last year's winter thaw more moisture seeped into the layers of the roof.

Former Vice Chairperson of the UMass Building Authority Evan Johnston said there are two roofs on the Student Union — the original which was built in 1955 and a built up roof added during later years.

Johnston said an oddity of the building is that there are five sections to the roof.

The consultant will tell what type of roof is needed for "four of the five areas," said Mitnick. The roof over the Student Union Ballroom is reportedly in good condition", he said.

The dates for construction have not been set because University offices are seeking consultant and contractors for the job.

The specifications by Physical Plant workers can not begin until the consultant is chosen, said Mitnick.

This summer, minor repairs were done to the South side of the roof above the Undergraduate Student Senate and Recognized Student Organization Offices.

The general contractor for the job was Ciaca Construction which subcontracted the drain and flashing installation to Tech Roofing and Waterproofing of Agawam.

David P. Radebaugh of Tech Roofing said that seven new drains were put in, but the flashing could not be completed because of the condition of the roof.

"It's not practical to repair," Radebaugh said. "The conditions are such that conclusions are to replace the roof," he said.

Johnston said the roof should be replaced before the ceiling work is done within the Student Union Building. Acoustic ceiling tiles were replaced this summer in the building due to water damage.

"We may have the best specifications for the job," Mitnick said, but added, "the firm may not be the best."

Closure of greenhouses due to falling glass fragments

By CHUCK KILFOYE
Collegian Staff

Glass fragments falling from window panes affixed to three of the Durfee Conservatory greenhouses have forced the closure of the buildings.

"Basically these buildings were condemned about two years ago," said conservatory Technical Assistant Joseph Sloane. "The spans are collapsing and forcing the panes of glass out of their frames."

University of Massachusetts Physical Plant workers have put up signs alerting pedestrians to the potential danger of falling glass in the area.

The three structures, known as buildings 9, 10, and 11, were constructed around 1930. They were orginally used as "teaching houses" by the School of Plant and Soil Science until approximately two years ago when the University was forced to close them because of structural flaws, Sloane said. "They're not much use to us now because they leak water in the winter time," Sloane said.

"Last Monday we replaced most of the broken windows, we usually replace about six to eight a week. However, in stormy weather we may replace as many as 25 a week," said Sloane.

"You wouldn't believe the cost for replacing those windows," said George Norton, Director of the UMass Physical Plant.

"There are two types of glass needed to repair those windows. The first is a straight piece which runs about $5, add two workmen for an average of three hours, and that cost comes to $23. The second type of glass is curved and currently costs $75, then add labor and it's $93 to repair one of those windows," he said.

University plans are unclear about what to do with the three condemned buildings, Norton said.

"The last time I talked to the State Bureau of Building Construction about those greenhouses was in July of 1979," said Dr. Allen V. Barker, head of the Plant and Soil Science Department, "that was about preliminary design and deferred maintenence. Now I guess it's just a matter of time before the BBC get around to setting up bids and awarding contracts."

"There was a rumour last summer the University was going to tear the greenhouses down," said Sloane, "I guess we won't know for sure until they show up with the wrecking ball."

HEARD THE LATEST?

Tech Hifi is having a sale.

Have you heard Tech Hifi is having a sale? It's our annual back-to-school event, with discounts on complete systems and individual components.

If you want to hear the latest in quality stereo equipment, Tech Hifi is the place.

And this week, the latest is on sale!

$269

Tech Hifi's $269 system delivers quality sound you'll enjoy hearing, year after year. It features brand-new TDC 2A loudspeakers. These acoustic suspension models offer surprisingly rich, detailed sound. They're driven by a popular Technics SA-80 stereo receiver, with 15 watts per channel (8 ohms, 40-20kHz., @ 0.3% distortion). The automatic, multiple-play turntable is a B*I*C 20Z, with smooth belt-drive and a quality Pickering cartridge.

$379

With our $379 system, you'll hear lower bass and greater volume capability. The loudspeakers are Philips 420's. They're a computer-vented design. So you get both deep bass and high efficiency. The receiver is Pioneer's best-selling SX-580, with 20 watts per channel (8 ohms, 20-20kHz., @ 0.3% distortion). Your records will sound great on JVC's top-rated LA-11 belt-driven, auto-shutoff turntable. It comes complete with an Audio-Technica AT90E cartridge.

Here's high technology at a low Tech Hifi price. Our $799 system has a rave-reviewed Toshiba SA-850 quartz synthesized digital receiver with 50 watts per channel (8 ohms, 20-20kHz., @ 0.03% distortion) and 12-station preset tuning. It powers a pair of new, top-of-the-line Advent 5002 loudspeakers. The turntable is a sophisticated Sony PSX-20, with quartz-locked direct-drive, automatic operation, and a light-tracking Audio-Technica 100E cartridge.

Quality Components on sale this week:

Advent New Utility loudspeakers (each)	$99
Technics SA-202 30 watt per channel receiver	$149
Onkyo 630D top-rated cassette deck	$279
B*I*C 20Z automatic multi-play turntable w/cartridge	$59
Kenwood 1030 deluxe 3-head cassette deck	$269

Tech Hifi backs what you buy.

When Tech Hifi has a sale, you get more than good prices – you also get good guarantees. Everything on sale this week is backed by our 7-day moneyback guarantee, 3-month exchange guarantee, 1-year loudspeaker trial, and all the other famous Tech Hifi guarantees. You'll get them in writing, right on your sales slip.

A serenading piano anchors indefinitely on a parking lot

By HILLARY NOKE
Collegian Correspondent

WANTED—Experienced piano movers to move heavy upright up one flight of stairs. Call Aliza.

Aliza Langenauer, a UMass junior and devoted musician, purchased a piano two weeks ago. That piano, in addition to the many other problems encountered at the start of school, has produced a unique dilemma.

Langenauer's solution is also unique. She plays the piano in the parking lot to the delight and disbelief of her neighbors.

"My roommates and I found the piano at a tag sale on a local farm," said Langenauer. Her neighbors failed in their attempt to carry the piano up the three flights of stairs to her apartment and to Langenauer's disappointment, the piano remained outside, a $60.00 memorial to the sidewalk.

"I covered the piano with plastic, left it outside and did not play it for two days," said Langenauer.

"When we did find movers, they were just too expensive. They wanted to charge me $114.00 to move it. It was just too much money for me," she said.

"I got the piano because with it I don't have to go into school and practice," said Langenauer. She became increasingly frustrated and said, "I got to thinking that this is my piano and I should get to play it anyway."

Langenauer solved her dilemma when she stepped outside one day last week with a chair and books of music, uncovered her piano and began to play.

Neighbor, Maxine, upon hearing the music, held a telephone receiver out of her second floor window enabling her caller to hear Langenauer play. "It has been hundreds of years since I have been serenaded outside of my window," Maxine told Langenauer.

Surrounded by many curious persons, Langenauer continued with her practice sessions.

"I am happy to be meeting all of my neighbors because of this piano," she said.

"She is a very devoted pianist and singer," said Gayle Young, on of Langenauer's roommates. "In the evenings I hold a flashlight so she can read her music," said Young.

Aliza has had 12 years experience with the piano. Having studied in Israel under German, Russian, and French instructors, Langenauer is currently studying under Nigel Coxe of UMass.

Aliza is involved in the UMass Music Theatre Guild, a piano ensemble, the UMass Chamber Choir, Vocal Jazz Ensemble and the Madrigals Singers, another UMass group.

Editorial/Opinion

Lines, lines—everywhere lines

Harold didn't know where he was, but he knew he wasn't at UMass anymore. A multitude of naked, motionless bodies stood in front of him in one perfectly straight row, and at least as many were behind him. No one dared move for fear that they would lose their place and have to return to the end of the line. As Harold pondered why he was there in the first place, and the only one in jeans and a t-shirt to boot, he realized that he was sinking into the earth. My God, he panicked, I'll lose my place! I'll never find out what I'm doing here!

Harold woke up suddenly, only to find that he was indeed at UMass, and he was indeed on a line, and although he had only dozed off for a moment, a rambunctious coed had accidentally shoved him out of turn, and he would indeed have to return to the end of the line.

Deborah Wayne

At this school there is a line for every occasion. There are lines to pick up that over-enrolled course you desperately need to graduate; lines to drop that advanced physics course you swear you never preregistered for; lines to purchase that itsy-bitsy, inconsequential item at the Campus Center Store; lines to buy a bus ticket to Boston because the dorms have mysteriously closed; lines to choose between soybean loaf and liver and onions at the D.C.; lines to purchase that overly expensive hardcover at the Textbook Annex that you won't be able to sell next semester because the professor is changing the book.

How ironic that an advanced society such as ours demands that we wait longer for something we really don't want than for something we do want. The line was therefore invented to at least keep us in a civilized formation. Personally, I find it frustrating to stand in one place for indefinite periods of time, but my friend Melvin claims that he recently waited on one line at Whitmore for three hours to change his major, and had a blast.

"What did you do for three hours," I asked.

"Hey, it was great! I pondered the meaning of life, straightened my head out, got my act together, met this dynamite woman, and asked her to join me at a commune in Kansas. Everything was real cool until it was finally my turn. When I told the lady behind the desk what I wanted, she told me I was on the wrong line and I should go to CASIAC."

Poor, naive Melvin was introduced to the Whitmore "get-to-know-your-campus-quickly" runaround, easily the biggest line of them all. Administrators (those who stand behind desks) spend many hours a day perfecting and offering us their extensive repetoire of lines. Some oldies, but goodies include, "sorry, the computers are down, you'll have to come back next month", and, "sorry, add/drop period ended yesterday, you'll have to withdraw from the University."

In conclusion, beware of the two types of lines I have discussed, or you may end up like Harold's dizzy twin sister, Edna, a true creature of habit. Edna sees a line, any line, and she'll stand in it. My advice to you, Edna, is not to doze off, or you may find yourself returning to the end of the line.

The long shot: all for dog sitting

It was two frightening weeks into my senior year and I still had no idea what I would do with my life, so I went down to the Career Counselling Office to see if they could help sort me out. The counselor was in the middle of some long distance advising over the telephone so she asked me if I would wait on "hold". This I did, but not before I had first given her a puzzled look, then I relaxed into the leathereate seat provided near her desk while thumbing through the latest issue of the Collegian. When she was done she proceeded to look me over; her eyes seemed to pass over all my belongings before they rested on my face. Then, without notice, she suddenly flipped her pencil in my direction; luckily I trapped it before the major portion of it could enter my stomach.

Seth Jacobson

"Hey! That hurt!" I have a low tolerance to graphite poisoning and surface wounds.

"I like your hands. You're PE, right? I could get you a job placement in Springfield provided you've a degree in Physical Education with some skill in computers."

"I'm an English major. What I know about computers could be put into the memory of TI51A." She was clearly disappointed in me and as she passed me a booklet I saw her frown into the cosmetic mirror on her desk.

So I sat down under the humming florescents sorting out my passions and near passions. Would I like to perform surgery on trees? Would I mind teaching six year olds how to eat? Could I perform long addition and subtraction problems without falling asleep? Yes, yes. I think I checked "very enthusiastic" for everything except chiropracticing. (I can't stand the noise of bones cracking.) She looked over my answer sheet and wasn't amused.

"You've checked everything off."

"That doesn't mean I can do any of them. I'm afraid that the only thing I'm trained to do is write a literary essay, and even that I can't do very well."

"You could be a teacher. There aren't a great deal of openings in the area, but if you're good there's always a place for you."

"That's what I'm worried about. Besides, I wouldn't make a very good teacher. I have severe allergies to chalk. I can't be put next to a blackboard.

The phone rang and she again put me on hold. It was her bookie, to whom she was placing a bet on "Howard the Duck" to place. I looked over the classified adds in the paper; someone was looking for a puppie-sitter for their seven St. Bernards. In the margin I wrote "Howard the Duck to place." In a minute she had swivelled in my direction again. Her hand floated in the direction of the file cabinets and book cases in the rear and in a flash I had a premonition of what she was about to say.

"You're going to ask me to look through those reams upon reams of job discription sheets and ask that I check off the three that interest me, right?" I showed her my presumptuous smile.

"Five. There's no reason to limit yourself."

Reluctantly, I slithered over to the menacing stacks of information. Then, as quickly as I could I checked off the first five job descriptions: acting, ant-farm maintenance, article writing, automobile maintenance, ax welding, and ax-stick making. After I handed her the sheet I caught her lips quiver in distrust.

"You didn't tell me you had a strong interest in ax-manufacturing."

"You never asked. Besides I never knew that I did until I read the job description book. It sounds really fascinating.

"Somehow, I get the feeling that your heart isn't in this. What kind of job do you really want?" I was shocked. What purpose was there in having a career counselor who couldn't even tell me what I wanted. I left her office in a huff, careening off a young woman in my teeterical rage. She called to me as I ran, but there were important things to be done that afternoon.

No thanks to the career office I found myself a job that afternoon. The only trouble is that I forgot that I was allergic to dogs, but for three-fifteen an hour who can complain?

Why Americans don't vote: The inflexible two party system

To the Editor:

*I think it's wonderful that Ed Levine (*Collegian, 9/15) is urging young people to register to vote. However, what is appalling to me is not the numbers of people who haven't registered to vote, but Levine's ignorance as to why they don't register.

Those of us with any interest in casting a vote in November will see to it that we are legally capable of doing so. The rest have their reasons, which are concrete and justifiable. Is it because they are apathetic or spoiled? Why do so few vote in any presidential election?

The fact is that most eligible voters are disillusioned and dissatisfied with today's inflexible two-party system. What does government leadership offer the average American? A Carter? A Reagan? Or even an Anderson? Seriously, do we expect men who have never known poverty, racial discrimination, sexual discrimination, unemployment, or occupational exploitation to be sensitive to the needs of people who live these realities daily?

If there is freedom in elections, why must a party that is not Republican or Democratic solicit tens of thousands of signatures every four years and then spend weeks proving their validity? Why do the two leading candidates get exclusive daily press coverage, millions in campaign contributions, private escort planes, and speaking engagements before large, influential groups?

There is a lesson to be learned from a system of representation by, of, and for the rich. And it's not that young people have no say because they don't vote. If labor unions, women, minorities, and the elderly have acquired some of the spoils, it's due to organized struggle, education, and rallying of public support, not the casting of individual votes.

Within the present structure, where choice is so limited as to be nonexistent, the voter who "cares about what is happening" is forced to concede his or her values in order to vote for the lesser evil. According to Levine, one is then allowed to "bitch about the ways things are politically," as if this means anything.

The interests of students and working people can not be defended by electing someone who "will be less inclined to vote for a measure they may not appreciate." To say that this is an irrelevant over-simplification would be extolling Levine's presentation of logic.

I urge people to register to vote, not as one person with "ultimate power," but as one person within a community of people fighting for the common goals of a free society.

Pike ad: 'sexist and offensive'

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to the fraternity rush advertisement and poster of the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity.

As a sorority member, I find the ad and poster extremely offensive and sexist. When I approached the fraternity's rush table in the Campus Center and asked them if they felt it was a sexist advertising approach, they replied, "This is the most effective way to sell our house and is a common advertising practice."

I am sure there are other equally effective methods to sell a fraternity.

I request that the brothers of Pi Kappa Alpha meet a much more important challenge, fighting to end sexual harrasment of all women, rather than perpetuating it.

Forget the Mid-East our pits smell

To the Editor:

I was watching the evening news last night and got depressed. It was not the news stories but, rather, what came between them that made me realize what miserable wretched creatures we Americans really are. As Americans we are either constipated or have diarrhea. We have aching muscles, aching feet, headaches, toothaches, backaches, and heartbreaks over psoriasis. We're plagued by greasy hair, greasy skin, greasy clothes and greasy kids' fingerprints. We're overweight, have excess stomach acid, limp hair and stiff shirts. What's more our breath, feet, armpits, genitals, air and carpets all smell bad. Sure life's not peachy in Cambodia, and situations in the Middle East threaten to bring the world to war, but could anything be more mortifying than spotty glasses or those dirty rings?

SW gov't needs student support

To the Editor:

The students of Southwest have a vital role to play in their area government—the Southwest Assembly. This assembly consists of 29 house elected representatives, eight black caucus members, six elected officers, and a large number of interested Southwest residents.

The Southwest Assembly encourages all students to participate in the policy and budgetary decisions of Southwest. We are an effective student organization with a potential force of over 5000 students. It becomes imperative that each student voices their opinion when an issue arises.

We invite the Southwest residents to attend our first Assembly meeting.

Reverend James Mavor Morell (Stuart Vaughn), r., embraces his wife Candida (Elizabeth Swain), center, while her father Mr. Burgess (Don Perkins) looks on, in the New Globe Theater's production of George Bernard Shaw's "Candida" at the UMass Rand Theater Tuesday night.

'Candida', classic comedy on love, folly, and illusion

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

The young, naive poet, Eugene Marchbanks, appeared to be made out of elastic as he overtook the stage in puppet-like contortions. Michael Arabian manipulated each humorous and swift movement, while speaking George Bernard Shaw's lavish prosaic phrases, in The New Globe Theater's Tuesday night production of "Candida".

"Candida" is a comedy based on the "eternal triangle" of the wife, husband, and lover. It is set in 1910 at St. Domini's Parsonage in a lowere middle class suburb of London. The era was tastefully captured by Alexander F. Adducci's set of gold and brown-toned furniture, lavish ruby-wine draperies and various period paintings. The set had a soft appeal, pleasing to the eye.

The characters were also appealing. Candida is a grand, alluring woman, elegantly dressed and flirty in her constant want of amusement.

Her husband, Reverend James Mavor Morell is a socialist preacher whose sermons ooze out of his every day speech. He is spoiled by constant devotion from his secretary, his wife and his followers.

Marchbanks, the shy 18 year old son of an Earl, has a mad crush on Candida and longs to steal her from the Reverend's "constant gab."

Candida's father, Mr. Burgess, is a stately man eager to exploit his factory workers and slyly in pursuit of money and, therefore, fond of Marchbanks.

Many of the characters did not have well-developed personalities. New Globe Theater Producing Director Stuart Vaughn did not effectively expand upon the pretentious

Xanadu: song, skin, and bones

By ROBERT B. CARGILL
Collegian Staff

Xanadu is "sugar and spice and everything...." much too nice.

It's got dance, song, and romance, along with beauty and an aura which emanates rather effortlessly an inordinate amount of pristine character, immaculate one-direction dimension, and a saccharine-like design, in not only set, but cast and dialogue, as well.

In short, Xanadu direly needs a potent dose of the "Magic" Olivia Newton-John so gayly celebrates in song.

This high-budget bit of "hogwash" stars Newton-John as Kira, one of the nine daughters of Zeus, who, as a lovely muse, stirs the heart of a California commerical artist Sonny Malone (Michael Beck) just as she once did to a big-band style musician played by an out-of-place Gene Kelly. Together, the young artist and the newly revitalized, not-so-young, retired musician decide to open up a disco aided by the inspiring appearance of their mutual muse. Get the picture?

Xanadu's few solid moments are a couple of its extravagant song and dance numbers: consisting of some individual dancers, one is a virtual combat between the New Wave rock music of today and the Big Band sound of yesterday, staged within the confines of the roller skating disco, Xanadu. This particular scene is replete with enough garishness in costume and style so as to practically match in intensity some of the hotter dance routines in this summer's Fame, yet Xanadu's chief failing was "Fame's" primary virtue. Whereas Fame's audience could relish the "meat" of its plot, (forcing them to become involved), Xanadu's plot is all "skin and bones;"—we are literally "starving" for some kind of integrity.

True, Xanadu is a "musical fantasy," yet not where "dreams come true," as promoted, but where moviemakers' dreams could very well die.

Olivia Newton-John is the muse who comes out of eternity to inspire a young painter (Michael Beck) in Xanadu.

Gene Kelly appears as a wealthy man remembering his lifelong love (played here by Olivia Newton-John) in a tap dance number from Xanadu.

UMass allowed guest membership in IC4A

By JANE WOLFSON
Collegian Staff

In what was called the first possible key to the reinstatement to the ECAC (Eastern College Athletic Conference), the University of Massachusetts has been offered a guest membership on a one-year trial basis back to the IC4A's (Intercollegiate Amateur Athletic Association of America), ECAC Assistant Commission Thomas Odjakian said last night.

The IC4A's, which involves only track and field and cross country, last year independently voted that Eastern Eight League schools, to which UMass belongs, would not be allowed guest memberships after their resignation from the ECAC.

Their ECAC resignation followed when they joined the Eastern Eight league and unsolvable problems developed involving scheduling and broadcast rights.

The conditions for the guest membership include the annual $100 dues as well as an additional $300 fee, the same cost as membership to the ECAC.

As with all guest memberships they will be allowed no voting privileges.

"We felt that the decision had allowed too many good athletes not to compete in the IC4A's," Odjakian said. He added that membership in the IC4A's will not be final until the schools accept the invitation.

The other schools invited to be guest members are Rutgers University, the University of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania State University, the University of Rhode Island and the University of West Virginia.

Penn State and Pitt had both resigned from the ECAC previous to the forming of the Eastern Eight. URI the newest addition to the league has not yet officially resigned from the ECAC, but will soon, according to Odjakjian.

Georgetown Athletic Director Frank Rienzo headed a committee of Athletic Directors to seek a possible solution to the problem. The IC4A committee met this week at the Poconos in New York and the decision was reached on Tuesday morning but not officially released until today, according to Odjakjian.

"I really can't understand the procedure for getting money from the council," Goldman said. "It seems like a closed committee who awards people who have worked with them before and I would like to work with them in the future," Goldman said.

Goldman hopes to bring in Dr. Daniel Ellsberg in the first two weeks in October for a talk on the "new military strategy and presidential directive 59," he said. Directive '59' encompasses the military strategy of aiming U.S. nuclear missles at the Soviet missle silos, said Judy Weiss, a DVP member.

Goldman was also thinking of an Equal Rights Ammendment debate with Phyllis Schlafley as one of the speakers.

DVP's plans for next semester include Martin Luther King and Women's weeks and possibly Gil Scott-Heron, who would talk about music and give a performance, Goldman said.

"We could use $70,000 so that we could bring in the quality speakers, like Whitmore, all the time," Goldman said.

Don't Cut Long Hair. PERM IT.

Does your long hair have the "limps?" Do you spend hours with rollers and curling irons to give it a little life, a little body, a little pizaaz? Are you thinking of cutting it, just to end the long-hair blahs?

Well, don't cut it. Perm it at our salon. Give it the long-lasting fullness and body long hair needs to look its feminine best. You can choose lots of curl, just waves, or only fullness and body.

And you'll love the perm...new Wave Lengths Conditioning Perm for long hair. It's new from Zotos, the world's leading maker of fine salon perms.

YOU KNOW, MIKE, I ALWAYS ENVIED MOM FOR RUNNING AWAY WITH YOU GUYS. NEXT TO HERS, MY LIFE HAS BEEN SO DULL.
WELL, MAYBE, BUT DON'T FORGET, J.J., SHE WAS NEARLY 40 AT THE TIME.
I KNOW, BUT NOTHING EVER HAPPENS TO ME. I'M ALREADY A SOPHOMORE AND I HAVEN'T EVEN BEGUN TO LIVE YET.
SO FAR, THE HIGHLIGHT OF MY LIFE HAS BEEN THE WEEK I SPENT IN ASPEN WITH MY LOVER, WHEN HE GOT SIGNED AND BURNED DOWN HIS BOSS'S HOUSE.
I GUESS THAT'S PRETTY TAME STUFF TO YOU, HUH?

appeared fixed, and each of his sermons employed the same inflections and gestures.

This is also true of Elizabeth Swain's portrayal of the title character. Candida lacked a flavor and style deeper than a proper tempstress, and after two acts her whining became a nuisance. Most noteworthy was the Reverend's secretary, Miss Proserpine Garnett. Anne Thompson Vaghn showed an inner motivation in her love for the Reverend. She was proper and matronly, but able to exhibit a range of emotions within her type.

"Candida" has a witty text spiced with Shaw's passages that lingered long after they were spoken.

"Candida" was paced slowly and often the timing was awkward. Yet, the importance Shaw placed on the "strength and dignity" in the love between Candida and the Reverend, and Candida's realization she is her own woman and not an "object to be auctioned off between the men" made the play withstand the passage of time.

As the production progressed the movement accelerated, resulting in a good second act and a superb finish. The third act in which each character learned a bit about "love, folly and illusion" left the audience emotionally-moved and fulfilled.

Somoza's vast financial holdings in other countries including the U.S., Wiardi said.

Before "buying his way" into Paraguay Somoza had tried to get a visa into the U.S. said Wiardi. The West Point trained dictator, had real estate holdings in Miami Beach. He was forced to leave the country by the U.S. government because of its efforts to establish a working relationship with the Sandinist government.

He said repercussions will be uncertain until the circumstances surrounding the killings are cleared up.

There is similarity between the Nicaragian situation and the Iranian situation, Wiardi said. Both countries were chasing exiled rulers trying to reclaim money and properties the rulers had bought and stored in other countries, he said.

THE PUB

Spikers to host Invitational

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Coming off a tough start at the University of New Hampshire Invitational last weekend (0-3), the women's volleyball team hopes to regain its momentum by a good showing this weekend, starting with a scrimmage against Springfield College tonight at 7:00 in NOPE gym and ending with a possible trip to the finals of the UMass Invitational at Boyden Gym this Saturday afternoon.

The Invitational, beginning Friday at 6:00 p.m., features teams from Colgate University, Brown Universtiy, Southern Connecticut State College and the University of Bridgeport.

In preparing for the Invitational, the Minutewomen have been concentrating on several aspects of their offense, such as positioning and serving. Also, according to Coach Elaine Marasco, the team has been working on the block and on service reception.

Overall, the Minutewomen are trying to get themselves going as a team, to familiarize themselves with the UMass game plan and with each other.

"On our offensive pattern, the team's becoming familiar and more confident with it," said Marasco, "last weekend, we were playing teams that played USVBA (United States Volleyball Association) teams last spring and had their game down. We have three new people and three old ones. We began early Saturday morning, we had an offense used since that Thursday (before the tournament) and the other teams were doing things that we don't do this early in the season. When you're up against that, you don't expect to do well, though we did well on defense."

"We're looking forward to playing again, we're excited about the tournament and we're coming along," she said,

Due to the Invitational, Boyden gym will be closed Friday and Saturday, while NOPE will be open on those days, as well as Sunday, the 21st.

The Invitational runs as follows:

Friday

6:00 p.m. — UMass vs. Colgate University
7:30 p.m. — UMass vs. University of Bridgeport
9:00 p.m. — UMass vs. Brown University

Saturday

9:00 a.m. — UMass vs. Central Connecticut State College
10:30 a.m. — UMass vs. Southern Connecticut State
1:00 p.m. — Quarterfinals
2:30 p.m. — Semifinals
4:00 p.m. — Finals

Larry Denaro catches a pass in ZooDisc's win over Hampshire College. UMass again defeated Hampshire 25-20. Today they host Keene State of New Hampshire at 4 p.m.

★ Leaman

"When I coached Julius, I knew at that time he was the best player in the country. What can you tell a guy when he is being offered contracts worth so much. You can tell him his school, his teammates and his coach will be disappointed. But you have to be realistic. What if Julius had broken his ankle or gotten overweight his next year? That's why I can't understand Ralph Sampson at Virginia. Here's a guy who could be set for life with the contract the Celtics were offering him and he turns it down. I wonder what all those smart lawyers were telling him?"

Leaman was asked what he thought about the future of the UMass basketball program.

"As soon as the program turns itself around and Ray can put a new product on the court, you're going to see the student body supporting the team. The Cage without a doubt is a great place to play basketball. The fans are the best in New England by far."

Leaman is now busy at work this fall with new duties. They include being the athletic director at Stockbridge, coaching Stockbridge basketball and coaching women's golf. And speaking of coaching, would he ever consider another stint in major college basketball?

"I'm a lot closer to coaching at this time than last year. I've had offers to coach at Oklahoma State and Florida but turned them down. Each day has been a little easier for me but I have to be happy with myself inside. I'm still tired of coaching."

What is probably the most unique quality about Jack Leaman is his personal philosophy. He is a caring, sensitive man who wanted the best for his team and his school.

"College athletics are becoming too professionalized. College should be more personal. College sports are an amateur function. I've always said athletics are a means to an end, not the end itself."

Well said, Jack.

seniors, make up the first three single seeds, although their exact order may fluctuate from match to match. Seeds 4-6 will be filled by a senior and two sophmores, Matt Modlish, Nick Julian, and Greg Sanders.

For the three doubles set-ups, it will be Mackertich and Modlish at #1, Huetteman and Strapman hitting #2, and Julian and Sanders at #3. Rounding out the squad are two sophmores, Paul Jaffe and Mark Jelinas, and four freshmen, Craig Turner, Neil Westerman, Steve Westerman, and Mike Harrelson. So that's eight returning players and four freshmen on a team that because of having no recruiting, scholarship money or equipment, is considered one of the finest walk-on teams in the East.

This is the third year coaching for both Williams and Miller. Both are U.S.P.T.A. teaching pros and Williams is ranked as the #5 playing pro in the U.S.T.A. New England Region. Bob Miller, showing true colors to his alma mater, graduated from UMass in 1967 and played on the tennis team. ("I really stunk.")

The two years they've coached UMass, the team has reached the New Englands' in the springtime, but has bowed out short of the Championship. The Ivy League teams are just too tough. This year UMass and Amherst are co-hosting the New Englands.

With a brand new season set to commence, they are hoping for a strong showing from the players. The first home match is Wednesday September 24 at 2:30 vs. New Hampshire on the courts next to Boyden gym.

Following a 1-1 performance in the Sumner Joyce Invitational Tournament in New Hampshire, the UMass men's soccer team will open its home season this afternoon at 3 p.m., taking on the University of Bridgeport at Boyden Field.

"We have had a good week of practice," reported UMass Coach Russ Kidd. "Our situation looks good and everyone is healthy. I think that we are going to have to shuffle our people more, as we are hoping to tighten up defensively."

Bridgeport comes into Amherst with a 1-1 slate, having defeated Sacred Heart 4-2 while losing to number one (New England) ranked UConn, 5-2. The Purple Heart's goal total against the Huskies was the highest achieved by any club this season.

"Basically we're still in a floundering position," said Bridgeport Coach Fran Bacon. "We have a couple of quality ball players and a few transfers, but we haven't really gelled yet. These next two games (UMass today and the University of Long Island on Saturday) will be an indicator as to the kind of season we're going to have."

Bridgeport will open with senior co-captains Stig Kjaeloe from Denmark and Marty Rackham, who has amassed a total of three goals in the club's two games.

One questionable spot for the Knights, however, is the goalie position. Junior Chuck Kniffin was injured in the Sacred Heart game, and is a questionable starter this afternoon. The probable starter for Bridgeport will be freshman Steve Rosenberg, who played the full 90 minutes against UConn. Rosenberg's big disadvantage is his height—5'9" to Kniffin's 6'3.

The Minutemen will open with a lineup similar to the one used in last weekend's tourney. UMass got tremendous efforts from Dave Harrington and Clovis Ferreira, both of whom played outstanding two-way soccer.

Netmen at Duquesne to start season

By CLAY BORGLUND
Collegian Correspondent

The 1980 UMass men's tennis team, all 12 members and 2 coaches, arose at 5:30 a.m. this morning while most of us were happily counting Z's or fastidously dreaming our worries away. The reason for such an early arousal time for them, was an 8:15 supersaver flight out of Hartford, Conn. bound for the City of Champions; Pittsburgh, Pa. Besides being the home of the Pirates, Penguins, and Steelers, Pittsburgh also houses Duquesne University, host of this year's E.A.A. tennis tournament.

UMass is one of eight teams attending this court classic and it is their first match of the year. Coached by Steve Williams with assistance from Bob Miller (co-owners of the Amherst Tennis Club) they will face the likes of teams from Duquesne, West Virginia, Rutgers, George Washington University, and Rhode Island. After this tournament they return home to a schedule of eight matches in the next three weeks, including five matches in an eight day span.

With the exception of the E.A.A.'s which is run on a bracket type point system, all their contests will have six single matches followed by three doubles. As it looks now, the team's line-up sounds like this; Neal Mackertich, Mark Huetteman, and Sergio Strepman, a sophmore and two

Leaman recalls

He sat in the reserved bleachers last season at the Cage for every game. Shouting encouragement to new players as well as old ones, he was and still is the epitomy of the UMie fan. Some fans at the games who heard him must have thought it strange that he would still be so energetic and enthusiastic after what had happened to him. After a brilliant and sometimes stormy 13-year reign as head coach of Massachusetts basketball, Jack Leaman was back at the

Jonathan Hamilton

Cage yelling again.

"I help Ray (head coach Wilson) in every way I can. He and I have had a 20-year friendship starting back when we played together at BU. A friendship that long should never end just because of what happened."

Why would Leaman leave after so many successful campaigns as head mentor? Sure, he had that disastrous 5-22 record last year. But he could rebuild the team again, couldn't he?

"I had thought of resigning three or four years earlier but after sitting down with people and talking about coaching, I decided to stick it out. But at the end of my last season, I felt that I had nothing left to give to coaching. It bothered me in the last five or six years that student athletes were being influenced by the high salaries of pro ball. I found them not being realistic with themselves when it came to judging their individual talents."

Leaman went on to explain that in some twenty years of coaching, only ten of his players were able to make a living off the game. And of those ten only one was able to reach the very high echelon of a million dollor contract. One knows who this man is, none other than Julius Erving, the only doctor nowadays that makes house calls.

Knapp criticizes reorg.

By DEBORAH COUGHLIN
Collegian Correspondent

President David C. Knapp said yesterday that "the University of Massachusetts is no longer independent, but an institution joined with 27 diverse colleges in a single public system." Knapp explained the recent reorganization of state public higher education at the opening fall session of the University Faculty Senate.

Knapp said "the system centralizes all authority over and responsibility for higher education in the Commonwealth — both public and private — in a single Board of Regents."

As a result, Knapp said, the University trustees are more of a management rather than a policy board.

The University has lost the power of having fiscal autonomy — which it fought to acquire in the early 1960's, Knapp said. He also said the new Board of Regents does not have fiscal autonomy either. Consequently, he said, "all of higher education has moved back into the age of detailed legislative and bureaucratic control from which it was deliberately set free two decades ago."

Knapp said the roles of the Board of Regents and the Board of Trustees now overlap because of the hasty drafting of the legislation.

"How and whether the system will work remains to be seen.", he said. But he also said he is confident the members of the Board of Regents are honest and open — both to redefining their exact authority, and to recognizing each state institution for its own individuality and needs.

Knapp said the reason for this reorganization is that those involved in higher education are viewed to be unrealistic in planning their budgets.

"Higher education, as such, generally enjoys political respect," he said. "Unfortunately, however, we — as institutions — have left the impression that we are more interested in preserving the status quo than in adapting to the future."

In other business Professor Jones, the chairman of the rules committee, announced approval for an extended deadline for adding and dropping courses until Sept. 19, because of the water shortage, he said.

Doyle makes bid for House

By JOAN McKENZIE
Collegian Staff

"I hope when people talk about me, they say she's not only an aggressive female, she's a woman concerned with the high cost of living," said Helen "Poppy" Doyle, Democratic candidate for Congress in Massachusett's first congressional district, which includes Berkshire, Franklin and Hampshire counties.

Boyle spoke before a small group last night at the Bangs Community Center in downtown Amherst.

Doyle, a resident of Ashfield, hopes to defeat U.S. Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Springfield, who has held the office for 22 years.

Doyle attended a White House function Wednesday, during which she spoke with President Carter and Carter's Special Assistant on Women's Issues, Sarah Weddington, she said.

"I told the President about my campaign for Congress and said I was pleased with his support of women's issues and hope he will continue his efforts in this area," she said.

Doyle, who is in favor of medicaid funding for abortions and gay rights explained her position on many issues, and how she differs with Conte.

"I am the mother of eight children. Each time I chose to go through with a pregnancy it was my choice. I am in favor of women's reproductive freedom," she said.

Doyle said that Conte often votes in efforts to enhance his own personal gain. An example, she said, was Conte's vote in favor of medicaid funding for abortion, an issue he is publicly against.

"In September 1979, Conte voted in favor of a bill that would increase pay raises for congressional members. Taxed on to that bill was legislation to appropriate medicaid funding for abortions," said Doyle.

According to Doyle, Conte moved to close debate on the floor, so that the bill would be voted on. Conte voted in favor of the bill which would increase congressional pay and appropriate medicaid funds for abortion.

"When it came down to his own personal gain, Conte was more interested in assuring his own pay raise than the issue of medicaid funding for abortion," said Doyle. "He will take care of himself before he takes care of his constituency."

Congressional hopeful, Helen Doyle.

Doyle pointed out other contradicitons. "When Conte heard I was pro-choice, he moved legislation through Congress so Family Planning would receive funding. That action is totally against his position. He will never again lobby for those issues" she said.

Doyle said that she met with staff member of Family Planning to make them aware of Conte's positions. The organization was aware of Conte's position but could not support her unless she favored a constitutional ammendment prohibiting abortions, Doyle said.

"I told them 'you received approriations this year that you will never receive again'" Doyle said.

Doyle said she supports Senator Kennedy's National Health Insurance Plan and supports nuclear disarmament and cuts in military defense spending.

Student missing

By JAMES F. MAHONEY
and TOM FAISON
Collegian Staff

About 60 people searched Mt. Tobey yesterday for a missing University of Massachusetts student whose mother said he was "angry" because he was dropped from all his courses.

UMass police, ROTC personnel, Wildlife and Fishery staff and dormitory residents searched for five hours for Anthony J. Thomas, 20, a resident of McNamara Dormitory and Lincoln, Mass. The search was started after Thomas' parents told authorities that neither they nor the missing student's roommates had heard from their son since Sept. 7.

UMass police Chief Robert Joyce said several articles of clothing, including a pair of brown corduroy pants and a knit wool cap, were found near a wood lean-to in the area searched but were not believed to belong to the missing student.

Jane Thomas said when her son, a Chemical Engineering major, left for school 10 days ago he was upset at not being able to get into any of the courses for which he preregistered.

"The word I'm using is angry because he was unable to get any of his courses at the University," Thomas said. He felt he was unable to deal with the system."

University police have issued an advisory and description of Thomas to surrounding communities. Thomas is described as a white male about six feet tall, weighing about 165 pounds and as having dark hair. They asked the other communities to forward any information to the Dickenson Hall headquarters.

Joyce said the search effort was started at Mt. Tobey because Thomas and his girlfirend had been known to frequent the area.

A search party was organized after University police officers had conducted interviews with Sylvan Residential area residents. All off-duty police officers were called in yesterday morning to aid in the seach party efforts.

Police started the search in the Cranberry Pond vicinity and then expanded out over the area surrounding the mountain.

President Carter points to a reporter to take a question during his nationally televised news conference last night in Washington. (AP LASERPHOTO)

Carter denies charge

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter, who called Ronald Reagan to task for using the words "states rights," denied yesterday he was accusing his Republican opponent of "running a campaign of racism or hatred."

"I do not think that my opponent is racist in any degree," Carter said.

In a news conference dominated by the presidential campaign — and particularly Carter's conduct as a candidate — the president said he felt he had been running a race that "is very moderate in its tone."

The question emerged as a major element in the general election campaign characterized in recent days by charges and counter-charges between the Carter and Reagan camps on the twin subjects of civil rights and appeals for black votes on Nov. 4.

Reagan, in a two-sentence response distributed by his press secretary, said the news conference was "Jimmy Carter's desperate attempt to fill the empty chair at Sunday night's debate."

"It is time for Mr. Carter to stop hiding in the Rose Garden and participate in open debate where I can have the opportunity to refute his false and partisan version of his record."

Carter's refusal to take part in the debate Sunday night between Reagan and independent presidential candidate John B. Anderson in Baltimore received only brief attention at the news conference, and Carter said he had accepted three invitations to face Reagan alone, without Anderson.

From the first question to the last, Ronald Reagan, and Carter's recent criticism of him, was the central theme.

In Atlanta Tuesday, Carter told a partisan audience of black Southerners that the campaign has seen "the stirrings of hate and the rebirth of code words like 'states rights' in a speech in Mississippi, in a campaign reference to the Ku Klux Klan in the South."

"Hatred has no place in this country. Racism has no place in this country," Carter said at the time.

But on Thursday, the president said of Reagan:

"I do not think he's running a campaign of racism or hatred. I think my campaign is very moderate in its tone. I did not raise the issue of the Klan nor did I raise the issue of states rights. And I believe it is better to leave these words, which are code words to many people in our country who suffered from discrimination in the past, out of the election this year."

At another point in the nationally broadcast news conference, his 59th since taking office, Carter said that political challengers can launch the "most enthusiastic attacks" on an incumbent president and it is accepted as a "normal course" of a campaign or else ignored. An incumbent's response, he said, "is immediately given the highest possible notice as an attack on one's challenger."

Workers set up lights for television cameras in preparation for the Presidential Debate in Baltimore Sunday. President Carter declined an invitation to join in debate with John Anderson and Ronald Reagon.

Waste "superfund" debated

NEWARK, N.J. — Congress is debating creation of a "superfund" to clean up toxic dumps, but some experts say the money will go into a bottomless pit unless major corporations stop condoning illegal dumping.

"Most illegal dumpers would be out of business in weeks if industry didn't demand cut-rate prices and ignore illegal disposal methods," says William Carracino, former president of Chemical Control Corp. of Elizabeth.

Some Environmental Protection Agency officials agree that there is corporate connivance in illegal dumping, but say it is difficult to prove.

A bill under consideration in the U.S. House of Representatives this week calls for creation of a $1.2 billion fund — with $900 million coming from taxes on the chemical industry and $300 million from the federal treasury — to clean up abandoned, hazardous chemical dumps during a four-year period. Legislation in the Senate Finance Committee proposes a six-year effort and a $4 billion fund.

Mental health centers cited

BOSTON — The nation's federally funded community mental health centers have drifted from their mission to help seriously ill patients, according to the president of the American Psychiatric Association.

"The community mental health movement has devoted much of its effort to finding solutions for problems of poverty, racism, sexism, delinquency, divorce and school dropout rates even though evidence that we have magical powers to solve such problems does not exist," Dr. Donald Langsley told a meeting of the APA members.

He said the nation's 750 community mental health centers "have drifted far away from their original purpose." The centers were established in 1963.

Langsley, a psychiatry professor at the University of Cincinnati, complained that "the centers has been reduced to that of prescription signer while the number of psychologists working at such centers has doubled and social workers have increased by 50 percent."

Langlsley blamed the shift on "co-opting of the centers by community boards."

AFL-CIO endorses Carter

BOSTON — The Massachusetts State Labor Council, following the lead of its national AFL-CIO organization, has endorsed the Carter-Mondale presidential ticket.

The council's Committee on Political Education, which issued the endorsement yesterday, criticized Republicans in Congress for failing to support worker-oriented legislation. It cited such programs as food stamps for strikers, Medicare, job safety inspections and the oil windfall profits tax.

However, Council President Arthur Osborn said the 500,000 member alliance remains non-partisan, supporting Republicans in Congress, Silvio Conte of Pittsfield and Margaret Heckler of Wellesley.

The COPE unit already has endorsed all incumbent Massachusetts congressmen seeking re-election.

In the 4th District, it supported Waltham Mayor Arthur Clark, who lost the Democratic primary to liberal Barney Frank.

Judge specifies age of jurors

GREENFIELD (AP) — A young person's right to trial by a jury of peers means jury pools must not be packed with elders, a 47-year-old state appeals court judge has ruled.

Judge Frederick L. Brown, in overturning the 1979 manslaughter conviction of 20-yearold Mark Bastarache of Turners Falls, ruled this week that Franklin County's jury selection system has been producing a pool of potential jurors that is disproportionately old.

Brown's ruling could jeopardize other Superior Court convictions, according to Bastarache's defense attorney.

Thomas Lesser of Northampton said Thursday that the non-random selection system, ruled unconstitutional in the decision, is used by all but three of the county's 24 towns to choose potential jurors.

Lesser said most town selectmen choose jurors on an individual basis, according to subjective standards. "They tend to choose people they know and think would be fair. But since the selectmen tend to be older, so do the jurors," Lesser said.

District Attorney Thomas Simons said his office was reviewing the case and would decide "very soon" whether to appeal the case to the Supreme Judicial Court.

Assistant District Attorney Stephen Kaplan, who prosecuted Bastarache, said the decision was "very important. It will call for sober reflection, as it involves a most important principal of constitutional law."

Lesser called the decision "...the first time there has been solid recognition of young people, 18 to 34, as a class."

He said a 1978 case in Maine was somewhat similar — U.S. v. Butera, in which the U.S. First Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that "the young are a cognizable class and can't be excluded from jury pools."

Two years ago Bastarache was charged with murder in the death of 35-year-old Dwight Wilbur of Turners Falls, who died from head injuries three days after a fight with Bastarache outside a bar. Judge Raymond Cross sentenced Bastarache to 10 years in prison.

Lesser said that with younger jurors, the verdict might have been different.

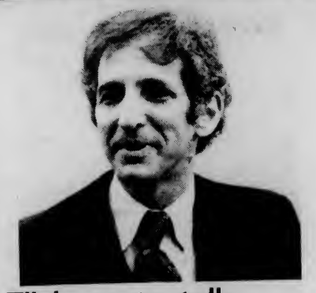
"Young people understand the culture in which the fight took place," he said, explaining that he meant "the culture of young people hanging out in a bar, shooting pool."

In reversing Cross, Brown ruled that the county jury pool selection process "systematically produced juries in which people between 18 and 34 were consistently underrepresented."

Lesser said that although more than one-third of county residents are between 18 and 34, only 18.5 percent of those in the jury pool were in that age group.

Lesser said Brown's ruling meant freedom for his client. "I don't think he can be tried again," he said.

Franklin County now apparently would have to change to the random jury pool selection process used in federal courts and by the county towns of Whately, Shutesbury and Conway.



Judge Frederick L. Brown, a Massachusetts Appeals Court judge, has ruled a young person's right to trial by a jury of peers means jury pools must not be packed with elders. (AP LASERPHOTO)

Ellsberg to talk

By AMY HASBROUCK
Collegian Correspondent

The Distinguished Visitors Program will invite Daniel Ellsberg to speak at the University on the tentative date of October 7.

At its weekly meeting last night, the DVP decided to allocate $1,100 to have Ellsberg speak. It was noted that Ellsberg would be a good contrast to G. Gordon Liddy who will be speaking here September 23.

Ellsberg, who worked for the Rand Corporation, and the U.S. State and Defense departments was instrumental in releasing the Pentagon Papers in 1971.

Also discussed at last night's meeting were security measures for the Liddy appearance. Howard Goldman, Chairperson of the DVP told the group that the lecture had been moved to the Fine Arts Center, which has a seating capacity of 1940. Goldman said security would be much easier there, partially because they would have to turn fewer people away.

Goldman said the DVP would try to have between 25 and 30 student security people at the lecture, and that two university police officers will be on duty at the Fine Arts Center. Goldman said that an exact number of programs will be handed out at the door, and when the programs run out, students will be asked to go home and listen to the lecture on WMUA radio, which will be carrying the speech live.

Goldman said whereas the Student Union Ballroom would have cost only $100 to $150, the Fine Arts Center will cost $470. The difference in cost is due to the expense of lighting and microphones to be provided for audience questions.

Ex-patient recovers

NORTHAMPTON (AP) — A recently-released mental patient was listed in fair condition yesterday at Cooley Dickinson Hospital and police said he was a victim of a hit-and-run driver.

Police said Anthony Gibson, 22, of Springfield, who had been released from the Northampton State Hospital two days earlier, was found lying by a road during a heavy rainstorm shortly before midnight Wednesday.

Officials at Cooley-Dickinson said he suffered two broken ankles, a broken leg and a broken pelvis.

According to police, Gibson had repeatedly sought their aid in finding a place to stay during his two days of freedom and had attempted to get himself admitted to Cooley-Dickinson earlier in the evening, but had been turned away because there was nothing medically wrong with him.

Police Lt. Eugene LaFrance said officers last saw Gibson around 10 p.m. when their efforts to get him a room through a local agency called "Networks" were unsuccessful.

Residents fear 'ghetto'

By Steve Densmore
Collegian Staff

First in a two-part series.

A group of Northampton residents is afraid that recently de-institutionalized mentally retarded individuals who are moving into their neighborhood may create a "ghetto".

Edwards Torres, a Perkins Street resident, said the Department of Mental Health is dumping patients in their area because of the cheap, available housing there.

Torres, a Perkins Street resident, said his area is becoming "saturated" with mental health patients.

The catalyst of this controversy began recently when a Northampton-based social service organization, Community Homes for Children, decided to rent a house on Perkins Street for the purpose of de-institutionalizing three mentally retarded women. The women, ages 19 to 24, had successfully lived in other community settings and proved to be no threat to residents according to David Scanlin, director of Community Homes for Children.

Scanlin explained the women would be supervised "24-hours a day" by one live-in staff member and three others who would assist during the day. He said the purpose of the program is to "give these individuals normal opportunities that people their own age experience, like going to a movie, or a fair."

The patients also attend closely supervised day classes in self-help techniques, Scanlin said.

The benefits of the program are apparent and the safety of the program to residents seems equally apparent, but Perkins Street residents feel they have enough mentally retarded patients on their street already, Torres said. Community Homes for Children is located "just around the corner" from Perkins St. and in the past two years two "halfway houses" have also taken up residence there, according to Torres.

Torres said he believes the number of vacancies and cheap housing in the area will lead to a flood of mentally retarded patients in his locality. He said the combination of patients and a proposed plan for a low-income housing development nearby may lead to the formation of a ghetto.

"There's a ghetto forming around me, I've been trying to get away from ghettos all my life-I'm sensitive to that," Torres said.

Torres said that he would not mind the three women moving in if he had a written guarantee from the Department of Mental Health stating that no more patients would be placed on Perkins Street.

But he said Hal Gibber, regional director for the Department of Mental Health, wouldn't give a written guarantee.

According to Torres the Department of Mental Health has no guidelines on what constitutes "saturation" in an area. He said he would like to take the issue to court to decide "How much is too much?"

Local donut shop held up

By BILL HALLISEY
Collegian Correspondent

A 19-year-old University of Massachusetts student has been charged in the Thursday morning attempted armed robbery of a doughnut shop in Mountain Farms Mall, Hadley police said.

William M. Grewe, 19, of 401 Thatcher Dormitory, from Chelmsford, was arrested by Hadley police at 5:03 a.m. yesterday several minutes after he allegedly tried to grab money from an open cash register at Bess Eaton Doughnuts, police said.

Bess Eaton Manager Bill Husted said the attempted theft occured when a man entered the shop around 5 a.m. and ordered a doughnut. When the waitress, who police refused to identify, asked if he would like anything else, the man reached for the cash register drawer and said, "I'll take some of these," and pointed to the money, Husted said.

Husted said the waitress, who thought the man was joking, slapped his hand away from the money, closed the cash drawer and said, "You can't have any of those."

The man showed the waitress a knife and responded something like, "Are you sure?", Husted said.

The waitress ran into a back room and the suspect fled empty-handed, Husted said.

Steve Newcomb of Amherst, the night baker at the doughnut shop, saw the man getting into a yellow station wagon in the Hampshire Mall parking lot and phoned the Hadley Police Department, Husted said.

Amherst police, on a call for assistance from Hadley, stopped Grewe in front of Eastern Mountain Sports on Route 9 in Hadley only minutes after the attempted robbery was reported, authorities said.

Police arrested Grewe and charged him first with robbery. The charge was changed to attempted armed robbery after it was learned that no money was taken, police said.

Grewe admitted to the crime and did not resist arrest, Hadley police said. He claimed he threw the knife away as he was fleeing, police said. The knife, a buck knife according to Hadley police, was not recovered.

Grewe was arraigned yesterday at Hampshire County District Court in Northampton on charges of attempted armed robbery. He pleaded not guilty and was released on his own recognizance.

A pre-trial hearing is scheduled for October 6.

Reservoirs low after rain

By J. ADAM BAILEY
Collegian Staff

Wednesday's nighttime thundershowers did little to help the water shortage in Amherst and town officials are continuing a ban on unessential water use.

"All it did was soak into the ground," Amherst College professor Dr. Philip Ives said. Approximately one inch of rain fell last night, Ives said.

The rain did raise the water levels in area reservoirs Stanley Ziomek, Amherst Superintendent of Public Works said. Hawley Reservoir went up at least 10 inches; Hill, 6 to 8 inches and the Atkins "not more than 1 or 2 inches," he said.

The average rainfall for western Massachusetts was "anywhere from one-half to three-fourths of an inch," said Roland Laro of the National Weather Service at Bradley Airport, Conn.

The water shortage will also be helped more within one or two days when the Lawrence Swamp well is put into service, Ziomek said.

"It (rain) reduced the forest fire possibility, but an inch of rain is not sufficient to make a difference," said Town Manager A. Louis Hayward. "We really need several storms with several inches (of rainto build things back up," he said.

Amherst, Pelham and Sunderland police reported no accidents or incidents were caused by the rain.

There is still a shortage, conservation efforts are still going and no rain is forecasted for a while, Hayward said.

Women Studies degree approved

By MARRIANNE E. SAVAGE
Collegian Correspondent

In the final step of an accreditation process that took nearly 3 years, the University of Massachusetts' Women's Studies Department was approved by the Massachusetts Board of Higher Education as an independent major this September.

The approval allows the department to grant a Bachelor of Arts degree to graduates separate from the auspices of the Bachelor's Degree in Individual Concentration program (BDIC).

But staff members of the Women's Studies program were not notified of the decision.

"No one told us. We found out because of a mix-up with our course numbers. When we called the Provost in reference to the numbers, he informed us of the major's status," said Arlene Avakian, a member of the department staff.

The original proposal submitted by the University Board of Trustees was approved by the Board of Higher Education without revision on September 5, 1980, according to William Venman of the Provost's Office.

The program's 80 students, 40 majors and 40 minors, will now change their majors from BDIC to Women's Studies and their diplomas will read as such.

Independent degrees will be awarded to Women's Studies graduates this January. "We are going to try to make it retroactive to last May," said Avakian. In reference to past program graduates, she added, "A lot of them really wanted a Women's Studies degree."

The department began a new curriculum this semester that requires majors to take 36 credits within the department in addition to the university core requirements.

Two new faculty members have been added to the department. They are: Dr. Lelia Ahmed, an author and specialist on women in the Middle East, and Kathy Barry, a nationally known lecturer and author of the recently published book, Female Sexual Slavery.

Notices informing the University community of the major's independent status are currently being distributed, Venman said.

BOG examines use of space

By SAM CHALFEN
Collegian Correspondent

The Board of Governors announced at a meeting last night that they are investigating five unnamed RSO (Recognized Student Organizations) in efforts to find underused space in the Campus Center/Student Union Complex.

The watch has been implemented to determine whether the groups have been violating their contracts Space Committee Chairperson Peter Lucas said. The names of the groups will not be released until Monday at 3:30 p.m., he said.

Jack Delmond, a member of the space committee, which allocates rooms in the Campus Center and the Student Union, said that the mini-review is a "study of under-utilized space" arising from a great need for additional space.

The last space study was made last spring, according to Lucas.

In other business the board unanimously passed a motion allocating $1030 to acquire a video waveform monitor for the new Cable Vision Council.

The Board of Governors is to split the cost of the waveform monitor with the Student Government Association. The monitor, termed "vital to the outcome of the cable project" by BOG Treasurer Mike Jingozian, will provide a quality output to the video system.

The Cable Video Center will provide the opportunity to student and community groups to record and broadcast programs in color through video monitors situated in the Campus Center and Student Union by the middle of November. The center will work in conjunction with the UVC.

The board also passed a motion to change the Campus Center waiver procedure form. Waivers from meeting room and food fees are available through the BOG. Completed waiver forms must be submitted to the board two weeks in advance, previously there was no deadline.

Furthermore, the board appointed Karen Sousa, a University art student, the board's display coordinator. The volunteer position includes responsibility for the display cases in the Campus Center and Student Union. The display cases will house information on upcoming events, board member Laurie Dratch said.

The board discussed and tabled an amendment to its constitutional by-laws which would require board members to keep regular attendance at meetings.

The board will hold elections October 6 and 7. There will be close to 20 seats open. "There is a lot of work for the board to do and we need a lot of people," Martha Casey, Assistant Chairperson said.

Legalize pot?

Should Marijuana be legalized?

yes	no	uncertain
90%	9%	1%

Should the possession of small amounts of marijuana be decriminalized?

yes	no	uncertain
30%	70%	0%

The above results were obtained through a recent survey conducted by the Collegian Thirty students were selected at random and asked their views on the legalization of marijuana.

Richard Evans, the counsel to the Massachusetts chapter of the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws says the term legal in the group's name indicates a controlled, taxable, product.

Evans said he wants to see marijuana distributed and regulated on a similar basis as alcohol. Legalization to him doesn't mean an unregulated open market.

Evans was in Washington this past week to present his views at a meeting of the National Alcohol and Drug Coalition. He said he was disappointed to find that the possibility of legalizing marijuana wasn't considered an issue at the meeting.

He said he witnessed various drug abuse agencies squabbling for federal grants at the meeting. Though Evans tried repeatedly to bring up the probability of legalizing marijuana he was continuously ignored by the Drug Abuse Industrial Complex, he said.

According to Evans, when he asked the senior official of the National Institute on Drug Abuse, (the largest agency of its kind), how he or his organization would define drug abuse as opposed to drug use, the official replied, "Gee, I never really thought about it."

Although members of the drug abuse agencies gave him no public support, many approached Evans saying that they would be in favor of the legalization of marijuana according to his presentation, he said.

The National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws doesn't try to encourage smoking marijuana, Evans said in a 1979 interview. They say they are working to obtain the freedom of choice through legalization. Another goal is to make marijuana available to cancer patients.

Hot off the press

Books offer inexpensive and easily-accessible entertainment. This fall's offerings include some great escapes.

Cartoon paperbacks are a perfect diversion. For those who favor the flagellation of felines, The Offical I Hate Cat Book by Skip Morrow will be published this month. For cat lovers/dog haters, Garfield at Large, by Jim Davis, is a must. The popular tough cat of the comics, Garfield is an expert in many fields including the mugging of Girl Scouts. His most notable works of late have dealt with Fat Week.

Another cartoon paperback coming out this month is And That's My Final Offer! by Gary B. Trudeau. This latest Doonesbury book offers fans the chance to reminisce over Uncle Duke's recent adventures and newcomers the opportunity to see what they've been missing.

Although you may have to wait with bated breath to find out who shot television's J.R., you can look over Quotations of J.R. Ewing for clues when October 1 rolls around. Bantam is publishing this and two other paperbacks stemming from the hit TV show "Dallas". Burt Hirschfeld, author of novels including the best-selling Aspen, has written The Ewings of Dallas. This, first in a series The Dallas Family Album, contains more than 150 photographs of the TV family and a history by matriarch Miss Ellie. A full color poster of the series' scoundrel, J.R., is also included.

Still Life With Woodpecker, Tom Robbins' latest sideways flight, is also out in paperback. Stephen (The Shining) King once more explores the unkown corners of the human mind in The Dead Zone. This fast-paced novel weights the pros and cons of being able to see into the future. King's last novel is the best selling Firestarter. This hardcover deals with a youth too hot to handle.

Books

Sultan of smut Sidney Sheldon's Rage of Angels was great for beach reading this summer and continues to top the best seller list. The book portrays a female lawyer who pitches in the big league of the business world and won't stand for any foul play.

If Amherst lacks intrigue, Robert Ludlum's The Bourne Identity takes the reader into a world of espionage.

Music for Chameleons by Truman Capote is a predictable favorite on the nonfiction list. The short installments of this gossipy fare are well suited to those who can only allot brief periods of time to unassigned reading. Also in the book is a factual crime drama in the abbreviated form of the author's most renowned style.

Coming October 7 is Crackers, by humorist Roy Blount Jr. There aren't many things to laugh about as election day creeps up on us, but this satire about Jimmy and his family may well be an exception.

This fall there will be no reason not to escape your texts into a book.

Due to illness, Roy Smeck will not appear in concert tonight at Buckley Recital Hall. A future concert date is being planned.

Jewish day of reflection

By MARCIA SCIABARRASI
Collegian Correspondent

Sunset today marks the beginning of the holiday, Yom Kippur, a day of atonement for the Jewish faith.

Yom Kippur, the last of the ten day period which began with Rosh Hashanah, is a time to reflect on the past year and to seek forgiveness for wrong committed toward others.

The most spiritual of the Jewish holidays, Yom Kippur begins at sundown with a fast, liberating its observers from the daily demand of food and freeing them from interruptions of the regular day.

The purpose of the fast, says Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, advisor of Hillel, a UMass group for Jewish students, is to make them aware what it means to go without.

Articles made of leather are not worn during this time because leather was traditionally considered a luxury item for which an animal had to be sacrificed.

Plain white clothing is worn during the services because according to Rabbi Saul, "it is a day to see ourselves as we really are and not to hide behind clothing. We are not concerned with appearances but with who we really are."

To Dana Berger, a junior and chairperson of the religious committee, Yom Kippur is a time for reevaluation, to look inward and focus on your mistakes, a time to ask yourself why you have hurt people.

The services on Friday, September 19, begin at 7 p.m. with Kol Nidrei, which is, as explained by Hillel member Joan Heffler, a prayer that observes vows of the previous year in order to prepare a clean slate for the coming year.

Saturday is a continuation of the fast and is spent in meditation and prayer. Rabbi Saul said Hillel will serve a break-the-fast meal following the services in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union Building.

Students are asked to bring their meal tickets. In addition, Jewish graduate students, undergraduates and non-students will celebrate this meal at a member's home in Amherst.

Anyone interested should meet outside the Hillel office following the service. A small fee will be required.

Yom Kippur is the second of the four related holidays celebrating the Jewish New Year.

"The festival of our joy": Succot, begins Wednesday, September 24. This joyous holidays marks the end of hidden burdens and self-examination. A harvest holiday, Succot is the celebration the Pilgrims patterned the American holiday of Thanksgiving after.

Following Succot is the Simchat Torah celebration, the "rejoicing for the Torah." This observance marks the completion of the five books of Moses which are read throughout the year and the beginning of the yearly cycle.

On October 2, members of Hillel will observe tradition by dancing with the Torah scrolls. They will complete seven Hakafot(rounds) in the campus area. The first of the rounds is done silently for those Jews who are not free to celebrate.

"Hedda Gabler" relevant

By SUSAN BARON
Collegian Correspondent

Though Henrik Ibsen's "Hedda Gabler" was set in 1890, it is still relevant now, ninety years later.

Ibsen was one of the first playwrights to treat women on the stage like real people. Hedda Gabler represents an eighteenth-century woman who feels trapped by her role as a woman and wife. The question that rises is: is Hedda the victim or the cause of her misery?

Stuart Vaughan directed and acted in the New Globe Theatre's version of "Hedda Gabler" which he also adapted. Skillfully interpreting this play, Vaughan's direction aroused both contempt and sympathy for Hedda.

When Mary Francina Golden first entered the stage in the title role, she stood poised and erect in a black gown. Within five minutes she revealed herself as passionately cold, conniving and secretive, cynically sarcastic and rudely self-centered. Hedda's new husband, George, was meek, modest, polite, naive and insecure. He epitomized the stereotypical nerd.

How can it be that the two have married? This, Mr. Vaughan and his cast suggested, was perhaps a sociological problem. In 1890, a woman needed the security of a provider.

Yet Hedda is no normal eighteenth-century woman. She is independent and witty. Her father a general, Hedda's own expectations and self-love soar. She is utterly bored marriage and in dire need of someone or something to inspire. An evil struggle to find her cause became the plot of the play.

With the mismatched marriage of George and Hedda, comedy was bound to come into the play. John Fitzgibbon played Hedda's husband in a praiseworthy and realistic manner. Witty humor was generated by Hedda's brazen manipulation of her weak husband. However, foreshadowing, suspense and irony lead to Hedda's ultimate suicide.

The New Globe Theatre's presentation of "Hedda Gabler" was creative and commendable. Any generalization made from Hedda's suicide is depressing, but Mr. Vaughan suggested the possibility that Hedda created her own problems.

The cast offered a believable representation of a difficult characterization. "Hedda Gabler" was entertaining because of its comedy and suspense.

Che Lumumba Closes

By Joyce McLaurin
(Black Affairs Staff)

The Che Lumumba School, an alternative Third World School, will temporarily close after eight years of operation. The school successfully raised funds, organized a staff, and fought for the right to teach an alternative education.

The Amherst Record quotes Jamila Gaston who has been associated with the school since 1972, as saying, "We're taking a year's moratorium to develop plans for the future, explore funding and find a new location". According to the Random House Dictionary, moratorium means "A legal authorization to delay the performance of some legal obligation."

The school has been located in the New Africa House since it was formed in 1972. Due to vandalism and fires in the last few years, the school desires to relocate elsewhere.

Che Lumumba was formed by Third World parents who complained that the Amherst public school system did not give their children proper education or a Third World perspective. Concerned Third World parents and minority teachers formed the school, and developed an educational program that would benefit their children.

The parents of the students play an active role in the administration of the school. They become actively involved in teaching, volunteer work, fundraising, and writing newsletters. The staff meets monthly to discuss issues concerning the students and the curriculum.

The curriculum is based on seven traditional African principles of Kawaida : Umoja (unity), Kujichagalia (self determination, Ujima (collective work and responsibility), Ujamaa (cooperative economics), Nia (purpose), Kuumba (creativity) and Imani (faith). Within these themes, the basic approach for learning, including writing, goegraphy, math, music, and art are also taught.

The school, approximately needs $10,000 annuany to support its curriculum, materials and salaries. Formerly located in the New Africa House, the school was not eligible for state grants. Parents of students supported the school by donations, bake sales, raffles, and tag sales.

The school enrolls between eight and thirteen students who are of African, Native American, Chicano, and Puerto Rican descent. According to the Amherst Record, families of progressive European background are also allowed to enroll in the school. The school teaches grades one through five.

Although the school is closing for a year, it will offer courses between the hours of 1:30 p.m. to 3:30 p.m. on Wednesday, beginning October 1, at New Africa House. The courses will consist of political education, theatre, history, art, music and social studies. Those who wish to support the Che Lumumba School, donations will be appreciated. Donations and funds may be sent to Steve Coons, A7 North Village, Amherst.

Afrikan Ballet

By Barbara Covington
(Black Affairs Staff)

On Saturday, September 20 at 8 p.m., the Commuter Collective in conjunction with the University of Massachusetts' Arts Council will present The International Afrikan-American Ballet Company in Bowker Auditorium.

The Collective is representative of the commuter population here at the University, offering education and information to area undergraduates living off-campus.

Founded approximately ten years ago, this organization has gone through many changes due to the uncertainty of the administration's intended focus for the group.

For example, within the past five years, it has been mandated by the administration that the organization present programs which are anti-racist, sexist, and non-discriminatory.

Spokesperson, Jose Tolson, and the service's program coordinator states that the collective "works with the Undergraduate Senate to bring things that are not happening." Tolson is referring to events and programs that are not normal considerations of the University Program Council.

Already this semester they have sponsored a practical workshop series, educating people to the realities of the "outside world." Future events include two film series, several speakers, and a "concert or two."

As mentioned earlier, the group's first theatrical event is the International Afrikan-American Ballet Company.

"We wanted to present something unique, and that uniqueness came as the International Afrikan-American Ballet," said Tolson.

And unique they are. Due to the social forces which are so vehemently pressed upon black people, the tendency to recognize African dance as an art form is not common. It is for this reason that they refer to themselves as a ballet company "so that people will realize African dance is as structured as Western dance and just as legitimate," says dancer and artistic director Rhonda Morman.

Tickets for the event are available at the Commuter Collective located in room 404, Student Union, or call 545-2145.

Mirrors of television

By Norman Morgan
(Black Affairs Staff)

"Mommy will I ever look like Farrah Fawcett?"

The mother of this child replied no. Judy Robert is a black child of seven and will never be white. The pertinent issue is that Judy understands and realizes, to be beautiful doesn't constitue being white. Judy suffers indirectly, as many black American children do. She has no one, on televison, to identity with, a problem many black adults also confront. Is this going to be the prevailing problem throughout this dacade? Will there ever be black characters on television who portray responsible and rational people?

First we must understand television's position in American society. Televsion has taken on a very substantial role in every day life considering that over ninety percent of the American population owns at least one television. In an average home at least six hours a day is spent watching television.

Television is becoming part of the family and just like any other member, television has its good and bad attributes. Television is used for educational purposes, but it can be used for unproductive entertainment. This leads the observer to perceive an inaccurate view of black culture. Television consumes quite a large portion of our time and it must play some part in our social development.

Most of the portrayals of black people on television are negative. By negative, I mean that most programs don't show black people in decision making positions, nor with much intelligence. When a black character does have some "social status", such as George Jefferson, it is countered by prevailing buffoonery. Certainly we have all seen our share of black people as head of gangs, dope dealers, and clowns.

On the other side of the coin, there is a fine line between entertainment and reality. What is realistic is not always funny and what is funny is not always realistic. Television editors have to air shows that are entertaining and have mass appeal. If there were more black writers, doesn't it stand to reason, that there would be more black shows? There would also be a greater chance of black realistic shows.

Buffoonery seems to be more appealing, on a mass scale, than reality. Before there will ever be realistic, responsible black characters, television competition will have to ease. There will have to be an interest in the development of black roles. This prompts another intriguing question. Is television another way to oppress the black race? By oppression, I mean not reinforcing the valuable and important accomplishments the black face has achieved. Black families view twice as much televison as do white families. Television presents an inaccurate view of black society and reinforces racist ideas because of the lack of realistic black roles.

Woman Indicted

WASHINGTON (AP) — A white Massachusetts woman was indicted Thursday by a federal grand jury on charges of attempting to force a black family which moved next door to her to leave the neighborhood.

Attorney General Benjamin Civiletti said a seven-count indictment was returned in U.S. District Court in Boston against Karen Gauthier of Great Barrington. Mrs. Gauthier was charged in one count with conspiring with unknown persons to intimidate the Kenneth Taylor family between Jan. 15 and March 6 of this year and to interfere with the family's housing rights under federal law.

According to the indictment, she anonymously called the father-in-law of the Taylors' landlord on Jan. 15 and 16, threatened him, and told him to "get the niggers" out of the neighborhood.

The government charged that during the next month and a half threatening letters were sent to the Taylors and the landlord's father-in-law, a smelly substance was thrown into the Taylor home, and the family's garage was set on fire.

Mrs. Gauthier also was charged with two other counts of intimidation and four counts of sending threatening letters through the mail.

Hypnosis aids study

By KEVIN McDONOUGH
Collegian Correspondent

Faced with strenuous work loads, more and more students are turning to hypnosis to help them overcome learning difficulties in concentration, recall, and retention.

Milton Askinoss, a hypnotist practicing in Hadley, said hypnotism is a technique that "allows the subconscious part of the mind to surface, giving you a greater sense of suggestibility."

Askinoss has used hypnosis to help cure people of hard-to-break habits such as nail biting, smoking, and over-eating. He has also treated people for discomfort from back pain, phobias, and other psychosomatic illnesses, he said.

Askinoss said hypnotism is not a kind of mind control. Contrary to popular belief, a hypnotist cannot force you to do anything against your will, he said.

"We show you the way to help yourself because whatever your mind caused, your mind can cure," he said. Although hypnotism is a positive tool for behavior modification it is "in no way a substitute for sleep, medicine, or medical attention," Askinoss added.

The students and faculty who visit Askinoss do so primarily to increase their studying efficiency or to quit smoking, he said. Askinoss added that only one visit is usually necessary to improve study skills. He claims a success rate of 90 percent.

Furry roommates can bring eviction

By JUDI JASUREK
Collegian Correspondent

If you have a roommate in your dormitory or apartment that is furry, walks on four legs, and occasionally laps up milk from the floor, you are probably endangering your housing status.

Having a pet of any kind in the dormitories is against University regulations. This pet policy is found in the University of Massachusetts regulation handbook distributed at the beginning of every semester.

A representative of Northeast area management said that when they are notified of a pet in a dormitory, they call the Environmental Health and Safety Office, which orders the owner of the pet to find a new home for it. The regulations state that the student may be evicted from the dormitory if he or she does not get rid of the pet in an allotted time.

Many off-campus apartment complexes such as Swiss Village, Brittany Manors, Brandywine, and Rolling Green also have a no-pet clause written into their lease which can lead to the eviction of pet owners.

In spite of the regulations, many students both on and off campus still have pets, according to a phone sampling.

The students interviewed, all of whom preferred to remain anonymous, gave varied opinions concerning roommates that are not people. Students in favor of keeping pets said that an animal is a friend that will listen to your problems but never burden you with their own.

"Having a pet rids me of my homesickness," said one freshman living on campus. Another student living off campus said, "My cat has the best life, it can go out whenever it pleases and it has food and shelter."

But some pets get abused. "I remember when we had a cat on the floor of my dorm a few years ago. We used to trap it in a megaphone and yell into it. It was a blast," said one dormitory resident.

A pet is a large responsibility that takes time and money. According to a news bulletin released by the U.S. Humane Society it costs about 50 cents a day to feed an average size dog, and nearly that much to feed a cat. In addition, there are licensing fees, neutering charges, and yearly vaccinations that can run from $30 to $50.

The manager of the Greenfield Animal Shelter said that the shelter has a chronic problem in the spring with students who leave unwanted animals. The operation is too small to handle all of the animals brought to them and they end up referring people to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, the manager said.

Steve O'Neil, business manager of the SPCA, said he had reservations about pets living with students. He said the pressures of the school year allow little time for proper care of animals, many animals are abandoned, he added. The SPCA trys to find homes for them, but if it is an older animal, that is difficult, he said.

Residents meet

The elected members of the Southwest Residential Area Assembly will receive packets containing information on all campus services and legislative procedures before the 45-member body kicks off a new session next Thursday.

The packets were a decision of the Southwest Assembly Executive Committee, which includes co-presidents Kevin Mangan and Ruth Mazzola, co-vice presidents, Jim Budreau and Mike Zona, and communications coordinator Tania Fredericks.

Execution obstacle vetoed

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts Legislature voted yesterday to remove constitutional obstacles to the death penalty and then considered a leadership plea against a proposed constitutional amendment limiting taxation.

The plea was presented by Rep. Gerald Cohen, chairman of the House Taxation Committee, as an alternative to strict tax limits. He asked the Legislature to tie tax growth to the growth in personal income.

The House and Senate, on vacation since July 5, returned to the Statehouse for a constitutional convention to act on proposed constitutional amendments left hanging when the regular session was adjourned.

Sen. Jack H. Backman, DBrookline, filed suit in the state Supreme Court early in the day, charging that Gov. Edward J. King's decision to recall the Legislature to act on the pending constitutional proposals was itself unconstitutional.

Backman asked the court to block the final step in approving constitutional amendments by keeping anything voted during the special session off the state election ballot.

Backman used what stalling tactics he could to postpone a vote on the death penalty amendment but was thwarted when a motion was adopted limiting debate.

He then blundered by doubting a quorum. Debate couldn't proceed until a quorum was in the chamber, and most members stayed away until the time for debate had expired.

The proposed constitutional amendment at issue, authorizing the Legislature to pass a death penalty law, won it's first round of approval on a voice vote. It will require another vote, either in 1981 or 1982, and, if approved then, it will go on the state election ballot.

The purpose of the constitutional amendment is to help a death penalty statute withstand a court test. A new capital punishment law has had a hearing before the state Supreme Court, which threw out another version of the law a couple of years ago. The court's decision on the new law is still pending.

The tax-limiting amendment brought before the convention by a signature drive, proposed in part that local real estate levies be no more than 2¼ percent of a property's fair market value.

Sponsors of the amendment, an initiative petition, and legislative leaders worked out their compromise prior to Thursday's session.

The debate on the compromise proposal focused on whether the tax cap could be overriden by a public referendum or a two-thirds vote of the Legislature or municipal and town legislative bodies.

The original amendment was similar to a proposed statute on the election ballot this November, limiting local taxes to the 2½ percent figure.

The statute takes effect if approved by the public at the polls, but the Legislature can amend or repeal it in January.

UPC Productions will present Bob Marley and the Wailers at 8 p.m. September 29 at Curry Hicks Cage. Tickets can be purchased in Amherst at Main Union Records Unlimited, TIX and For the Record; in Northampton at Main Street Records and Platterpus. NO SMOKING, CANS, OR CONTAINERS.

Editorial/Opinion

Exclusionary politics

President Carter is well aware of the influence televised debates have on the voting public. His own strong showing against Gerald Ford in the 1976 debates is cited as one of the decisive factors in projecting a virtually unknown Jimmy Carter into the White House.

John Anderson is a personable man and a charismatic speaker whose debating skills were demonstrated during the Republican primary debate in Iowa. What Anderson does not have, however, is a record of three and a half years of unemployment, inflation, and broken promises. Carter does and he knows the campaign trail to re-election is an uphill race as it is, without Anderson rustling votes.

What Carter is seeking to do is to withhold credibility from Anderson's campaign and to focus attention on himself and Reagan as the only serious candidates thus forcing Anderson into the "wasted vote" category.

Carter's strategy, however, may very well backfire on him. There has been a lot of publicity on the efforts of the Democratic National Committee to keep Anderson off as many states ballots as possible. (The DNC earmarked a quarter of a million dollars to be used for legal fees and expenses for this effort.)

In his bid for re-election Carter has forgotten the ideals and principles behind the democratic electoral process and is subordinating that process for his own political gains.

Carter's pompus snub of Anderson as a "media creation" cannot hide the fact that he is running hard this election year and is attempting to cut down the competition—a task which is supposed to be left to the electorate.

But John Anderson is not the only candidate who is a victim of exclusory politics. Each election year there are several minor parties (the Citizen's Party, Communist Party, Libertarian Party, and Socialist Worker's Party to name a few) that are excluded not only from national debates but are denied campaign funds, media coverage and are subject to state election laws which are cumbersome at best and obstructionist at worst.

To get on the ballot in all 50 states a minor party would have to spend $750,000 and collect 1.2 million signatures. But despite these obstacles some minor parties consistently manage to get on a sizeable number of state ballots. (The Socialist Worker's Party will be on the ballot in 30 states this year.)

Historically third parties have played an important role in American politics, and have produced such leaders as Abraham Lincoln.

Since the time Presidential campaigns began running on monies supplied by federal funding, minor party candidates have been required to receive five percent of the vote to be eligible for funds. To get this percentage a party must have the funds to present themselves to a sizeable portion of the electorate. To do that, they need funding—Catch 22.

This is one reason why over the years the American electoral system has become less and less accessible to the people it is supposed to be "of," "by," and "for."

What we have been left with is a two party system which has been failing to produce the leadership necessary for the nation. Yet this same system through its control of Congress and the state election machinery, has effectively closed off the avenue down which an alternative third party could come.

This loss of direct popular input into the electoral process raises two serious questions we should consider carefully as November approaches: First, what are the implications a closed electoral system has on the traditional American meaning of "democracy"; and second: If the two party system selects, independently of the American people, the candidates from which we much choose (Just where did Jimmy Carter come from?) then who is it that controls this system?

Wanted: Financial aid

After a change in the eligibility rules for financial aid awards this summer, many college and university students, who first received notice of their award in May, were told the amount of money they were counting on to fund their education was not going to be what they expected.

Although Congress had made financial aid available to more students, it apparently did not have the foresight to incease federal funding to match the higher number of students receiving aid. As a result, the nearly 8000 University of Massachusetts students who depend on financial aid found their award packages were greatly reduced—quietly and unexpectedly. It all boiled down to a $2.5 million cut in aid for the University.

In an act of fiscal juggling, Congress changed the Basic Educational Opportunity Grant awards three times after already having awarded them.

Financial aid cutbacks are just one symptom of the sinking priority of higher education across the country.

Due to erratic domestic policies and unconquerable economic problems, government has seen fit to revert to that old remedy of cutting and slashing. And as usual education, human services,et al are the first to feel the blade.

Spelling life wrong

A professor recently scolded me for misspelling several words on a class entrance essay. For years my reaction to complaints about my spelling difficulties has been an apologetic shrug, which the complainer usually replied to by scowling. Now my response is to make rude remarks, which this most recent complainer, a grim-faced man, also replied to by scowling. But I feel better, sleep better, write better.

Eric Janszen

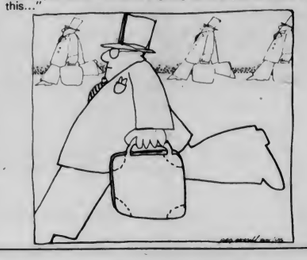
All my life I have been troubled by my lack of spelling skills. Now that I am an editor this deficiency poses a serious handicap, forcing me to spend hours flipping through dictionaries; worse, it has maddeningly inhibited my writing, forcing it to be done with an elder's face scowling from within my head.

I have improved my spelling greatly in the last few years, but this has required a lot of work. Apparently, the only time to develop truly reliable spelling skills is when you are very young, when your mind is like an empty parking lot and parents and teachers are free to drive whatever they please into it. As testimony, a lot of young people's minds are full of Granadas, rider lawn mowers and tanks — but that's another story.

When I was in elementary school the American education system was undergoing a "great revolution in education" (or so its revolutionaries liked the scruffy composite of their teaching methods to be called). This translated roughly into: "Since America can only continue getting richer, don't bother teaching suburban kids anything their secretaries (then attending poorer, unrevolutionized schools where writing skills were taught) could be doing for them in fifteen years. Let them expreeeeess themselves." We were taught not to worry about spelling and to ignore our parents' concern over our variously imposed ineptitudes.

In fits of traditionalism my fifth grade teacher twice attempted conducting a "spelling bee." Our class lined up in two rows on either side of the room and each of us took a crack at belting out the correct letters of a word in their proper order. We all thought this was charming; the event had the atmosphere of city kids at their first folk dance. There were even a couple of children who could spell; we thought they were neat, like ukulele players. There's a word: ukulele. Could you spell it? Where did you go to school?

I have decided that as long as I keep trying to learn how to spell, it really isn't my fault that I can't. This new belief propels me above the intimidations of professors, releasing my writng from the choking grip of uncertanty (I mean uncertainty). I no longer take their complaints to heart. I relax, and as the scowling elder in my mind is engulfed by my new confidence I hear him remark, "Use a semi-colon, not a comma, to separate declarative sentences. And that adjective 'unrevolutionized,' what's that? And watch the verb tenses. What, you think someone's going to hire you to write like this..."



Youth without a cause

You could say that young people deserve what they get if they don't vote or get involved in the political process, but you should consider the fact that what is usually referred to as "apathy" in many cases might be a much higher level of political sophistication.

Jackson Katz

Sure, a lot of young people don't vote or get involved because they "just don't care," but there's got to be more to it than that. After all, most young people don't even get involved in issues as directly relevant to their own lives as increases in the drinking age and draft registration. This may be because they choose to put their energies into defying the law, once enacted, rather than take the chance of wasting their time fighting for fair representation in the politcal process.

This was clearly the case with the drinking age increase here in Massachusetts and the recent response to draft registration across the country. Young people on the whole stood by as the drinking age hike was railroaded through, but tens of thousand of kids continually use their creative abilities to directly or indirectly defy the law. And the number of non-registrants, who face stiff criminal penalties, was far greater than the number of people of registration age who tried to block the legislation through legal means.

It's simplistic to blame this kind of failure to get involved in the political process on the "apathy" of young people in America. The reality today is that most young people are disillusioned with, even angered by the political process. And this feeling runs deeper that dissatisfaction with the two-party system, although that certainly plays its part in fueling this massive discontent.

Perhaps more than any group of people in this country other than Third World people, young people realize that they're not represented, that their voices are not heard when it counts. It's no wonder that most young people don't get involved. They see through the injustice of power structures in this "democratic" society; choosing not to what amounts to lowering themselves by taking part.

Oh, when really threatening stakes are on the line, such as the recent New Right attacks on women's right to choose, and the impending danger of a Reagan presidency, young people tend to get their acts in gear and fight whatever way, within or without the system, they have to. But on the whole, young people, who are so often "accused" of being too idealistic, are really more realistic than most. That's why so many of them don't vote or get involved in politics. If you don't agree, talk to a young person who doesn't vote. You may well find something more than just an apathetic person.

Jackson Katz is a Collegian Commentator.

A feeling of powerlessness is shared by most people in this country, young and old, but most young people seem to suffer less from the delusion that American Democracy in practice in any way resembles true Democracy than do members of older generations.

Criticism of Israel undeserved

To The Editor—

In the four years that I have been at UMass, Jewish students, such as myself, have been subject to anti-semitism on the editorial pages of your newspaper. We saw an example of this in your one-sided and rather unfair cartoon of Sept. 18, which implied that Israel is supplying bombs to the governments of South Africa, Greece and Chile.

First of all, I am not at all saying that Israel should never be criticized or that its government is perfect. I've been critical of Prime Minister Begin for a long time, particularly in regard to his West Bank policies. However, to hide behind a cartoon without spelling out the facts for the readers to see and by distorting reality into half-truths and innuendos, you put up a mask of cowardice to hide your ignorance.

As I mentioned in a previous letter to your newspaper in 1979, Israel supplies only .4 percent of South Africa's foreign investment, considerably less than the nations of OPEC. Israel also, ever since Golda Meir's administration, has adopted and continually adopted a policy of education, aid and general goodwill to the nations of black Africa and many of the underdeveloped nations of Latin America.

Why is it that, of all the foreign countries of the world, Israel gets a disproportionate amount of haranguing in your newspaper? Why is there never talk of slavery in Saudi Arabia or the oppression of the ethnic Chinese under Pol Pot's regime in Viet Nam? By singling out Israel for special condemnation, you reinforce a lot of anti-Semitic stereotypes and display an irresponsible and harmful role as the leading media organ of the UMass community. The Collegian has the right to print whatever it wants, but loses its credibility when it resorts to cheap and cowardly reporting.

Stereotype of Greeks 'intolerable'

To the Editor:

In response to the article entitled "The 'Hoods' and the hoods take over the Hatch" (September 12) written by Abbe Bjorklund, I would like to address the issue of prejudicial and stereotypical slurs against the Greek Community. Bjorklund's remark (and I quote) "Cramming through the crowd, this writer entered the "Hatch" early sandwiched between people slowly inching through the door past the rude and aggressive bouncers. They were the typical Masta Beta Smegma types who cause more violence than they prevent" was not only inappropriate and distasteful but also reflective of poor journalism and prejudice in a most vulgar and blatent style.

If the author feels entitled to one, generalize "bouncer types" and, two, intentionally allude to fraternity stereotyping of this sort, I feel there is a more appropriate way of doing so. Although the topic of this article had nothing to do with the Greek Community, the obvious remark indeed reflected a most narrow-minded and intolerable attitude.

I hope this type of slander is eliminated from the Collegian and a more professional approach to reporting will be pursued.

Pike posters 'sell fraternity'

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to Ms. Kokturk's letter stating that Pi Kappa Alpha's rush ads and posters are offensive and sexist.

Ms. Kokturk states that there must be other equally effective methods to sell a fraternity. If Ms. Kokturk could come up with a poster or add that would be as effective in getting the attention of university men as this semester's poster has, I would be more than willing to give the idea a try. These ads are not what Pi Kappa Alpha is all about, rather it is an effective marketing technique used in most major periodicals.

Furthermore it is an insult to the brothers of Pi Kappa Alpha when Ms. Kokturk states that Pike "perpetuates sexual harrasment of all women" when in fact we pride ourselves in treating women with respect and as equals.

Finally if Ms. Kokturk had done her homework before making such false accusations she would realize that Pike is meeting the challenge in the fight against sexual harrasment by continuing to offer, as we did last semester, a library escort service to all university women.

'By God I'm proud to be an American!'

Paul Ferguson's letter denouncing Stephen Geiger's editorial on the need to stand up to the Russians was both far—fetched and full of half—truths and innuendos. Good God Paul, do you really believe all your dribble? Your quotations used to back up your theory are really terrific. As if quotes by obscure Midwestern Congressmen and businessmen showing a desire to enter America into the world market showed some insidious plot to conquer the world through Sears Roebuck and J.C. Penny. Still, quotations are a useful tool when you are trying to understand a country of a man. Here are some interesting quotations that people might enjoy.

Katherine Curda

"Democracy is more to be feared than Monarchy or aristocracy." Communist Manifesto

"It is true that liberty is precious, so precious that it must be rationed." Lenin, 1936

"The dictatorship of the Communist Party is maintained by using every form of violence." Leon Trotsky, 1924

"We will bury you!" Nikita Khruschev, 1956

"Just because we have signed an accord of detente with the West does not mean that the struggle to defeat capitalism will end." Leonid Brezhnev

Perhaps this is where Mr. Geiger got his silly idea that the Soviet Union is totalitarian and imperialist. Of course it's a silly idea! Just ask the Moscow—approved governments of Moscow—supported client states of Poland, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Rumania, Bulgaria, Afghanistan, Vietnam, Cuba, Ethiopia, and don't forget the Ukraine, White Russia, Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania. No imperialism here, they say.

You then accuse the U.S., in defense of capitalist interests, of the overthrow or undercutting of popularly elected regimes. Well Cuba, Iran, Vietnam, Nicaragua and Grenada have survived their revolutions and emerged, with the exception of Iran, as either Soviet client states or Soviet puppets. Cuba alone needs eight million dollars a day, plus free military aid, in order to keep its basket case of an economy alive. This is liberation?

The 1965 interference in the Dominican Republic, regardless of hindsight, was sanctioned by the Organization of American States, and led to the election of the popular political moderate Joaquin Balaguer. His first acts included taking opposition leaders into the cabinet, curbing the power of the military, gaining the support of the local merchants and businessmen, and gaining a large following among the masses. In fact he was reelected until 1978, giving the country many years of stable moderate rule which is rather unique for the Caribbean.

On Chile, Mr. Ferguson blames the CIA for allowing the "popularly elected Salvador Allende" to be overthrown, What he neglects to mention was the fact that Allende stated that if he was not elected the fighting would continue. A real incentive to the electorate. Also he doesn't mention that Allende won the election by a very small margin in a Congressional runoff. Nor does he mention that toward the end of his reign Allende had so destroyed the economy that on March 1, 1973 the newspaper El Mercurio revealed a secret memo made by MAPU, a leftist faction in the government supportive of Allende, that stated he was steering the country toward bancruptcy with his redistributionist economic policies.

Your quoting of Phillip Agee was the best part of your letter, Paul. Your description of him as a former CIA agent was correct. What you forgot to mention was the fact that for years, before he resigned and wrote his book, Mr. Agee admitted that he had been working for Cuban intelligence and the KGB (Soviet Secret Police) and that his sole purpose in writing his book was to destroy CIA activities and help the communists. Talk about an impartial commentator.

In closing I can only day, Mr. Ferguson, that your letter shows a very selective sense of history. You decry a coup in Chile that Might have killed thousands, yet you ignore genocide and atrocities in Cambodia, Laos, Afghanistan, and the Soviet Union itself. Capitalism at its worst has not been responsible for one hundreth of the suffering caused by Communism and its philosophy of continous revolution. We in the U.S. have fed and aided millions after wars and disasters. Our technology has made advances in medicine and science that have brought about an end to much suffering. What have the COMMUNISTS DONE RECENTLY TO ALLEVIATE SUFFERING? By God I'm proud to be an American! Perhaps, Paul, you might identify with this quotation of Stalin's, one of the bloodiest tyrants in history with the deaths of over 20 million Russians and ethnics on his hands: "One death is a tragedy, a million deaths is a statistic."

Carter chided by Lucey

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Independent vice-presidential candidate Patrick J. Lucey Thursday chided President Carter for refusing to accept the League of Women Voters' invitation to a debate.

To the applause of about 500 students at Providence College, Lucey said Carter's press conference yesterday "is his way of getting equal time," since he refused to debate Independent presidential candidate John Anderson along with Republican Ronald Reagan.

Before joining the congressman who left the Republican party to wage an Independent campaign, Lucey was deputy campaign manager for Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's Democratic presidential primary bid.

Polish labor snarls linger

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Communist Poland, coming out of its worst strikes in a decade, was plagued yesterday by lingering labor unrest in a number of cities. Warsaw Television reported 16 struck businesses and sources said walk-outs had shut down the Katowice streetcar system and a ball-bearing plant in Kielce.

It was unclear whether the 16 strikes were the beginning of a new wave of unrest or the residual effects of the old, which began easing with settlement of strikes in Gdansk, Szczecin and Silesia last month. Those settlements granted workers the right to strike and set up independent unions.

Details on the strikes were sketchy but the workers were believed pressing demands for higher pay, improved working conditions and in some cases the removal of unpopular local supervisors. The number of strikers or the types of businesses affected were not given.

"There are still strikes in 16 enterprises," a news announcer on the state-run televison station reported. "And in some cases, there were plants striking for the second and third time."

Reliable sources in Katowice, an industrial center in Silesia, reported that streetcar drivers in the city transport system walked off their jobs Thursday demanding more money. Commuters in the city of 345,000 found signs at streetcar stops advising them of the strike.

Dissidents in Warsaw listed strikes at a sparkplug and ball-bearing factory in Kielce and in a furniture plant in Biala Podlaska, a small town less than 20 miles from the Soviet city of Brest.

Workers at a textile plant in Biala Podlaska ended their strike Wednesday, dissidents said, after the government agreed to remove some management personnel and an unpopular Communist Party secretary at the plant.

At the Kielce plant, workers had gone on strike earlier this month but agreed to a settlement on Tuesday. The strike resumed after management failed to live up to some of the terms of the settlement, dissidents said, including a pledge to publish the terms in a local newspaper.

Scattered strikes have been reported since signing of the agreements Aug. 31 ending the Gdansk and Szczecin walkouts. These workers are said to have been demanding assurances that the Gdansk settlement applied to them, particularly the part guaranteeing independent unions.

Polish workers peer through windows in Gdansk yesterday as they watch a meeting of independent trade union committee members from throughout Poland—the first such meeting since the end of the nationwide strikes. (AP LASERPHOTO)

Police hunt Somoza assassins

ASUNCION, Paraguay (AP) — Paraguay's army and police conducted land and air searches yesterday for members of a khaki-clad assassination squad that killed Nicaragua's former dictator Anastasio Somoza in a fusillade of machine-gun and bazooka fire.

Police and witnesses said six to eight guerrillas, who coordinated their attack by walkie-talkie, poured machine-gun fire into Somoza's Mercedes Benz and forced it to a halt in front of a rented house, where a marksman with a bazooka blew the vehicle apart with a rocket. One of those sought was a woman and one was thought to be wounded.

Somoza's financial adviser and chauffeur also died in the Wednesday morning hail of fire so withering that Somoza's mistress could identify the former dictator's shattered body only by his wristwatch.

Authorities reopened borders to air, road and river traffic yesterday, but strict border checks were carried out.

An Asuncion radio station quoted travelers as saying they heard shooting near the town of Altos, 30 miles northwest of the capital but authorities had no comment on the report.

For 24 hours after the slaying the country's international airport was closed to outbound flights and borders with Brazil, Argentina and Bolivia were sealed. The massive manhunt was launched by the right-wing government of President Alfredo Stroessner, the friend who granted the 54-year-old Somoza asylum after his ouster from Nicaragua in 1979.

Air Force planes and helicopters scanned roads near Paraguay's frontiers and police raided homes in the capital looking for suspects. At least 100 people were reported detained for questioning in Asuncion and at border checkpoints.

Police closed streets around the villa where Somoza lived with his entourage and newspapers reported the ex-dictator's body lay in a glass-covered coffin in a chapel of the rented mansion, 20 blocks from the attack scene in downtown Asuncion.

Sources said Somoza's son, Anastasio Somoza Portocarero, was expected to arrive on a special flight from Miami to arrange for burial.

According to police and eyewitnesses, the terrorists struck from a two-story brick house and from a blue Chevrolet pickup truck that pulled alongside Somoza's limousine. They sprayed machine-gun bullets from both sides to force the car to stop in front of the house, and a terrorist inside launched a rocket from a 10-foot-long bazooka.

Oil prices on the rise

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Saudi Arabia's agreement to raise its oil price by $2 a barrel could pave the way for another $2 Saudi hike before the end of the year, sources connected with the world oil cartel said yesterday.

That would help the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries achieve price unity by narrowing the gap in prices charged by its members and prepare for adoption later of a long-term plan calling for small oil price hikes every three months, OPEC sources said.

The Saudis agreed Wednesday to raise their price from $28 per 42-gallon barrel to $30 as part of a unanimous decision by the 13-nation oil cartel at the end of a three-day meeting here.

The group also agreed to freeze all other OPEC prices until a Dec. 15 meeting in Bali, Indonesia. OPEC prices will thus range from the Saudi low of $30 to a high of $37 charged by Algeria, Libya and Nigeria.

Netwomen trounce Smith, 8-1

By ANTHONY KUNDERT
Collegian Staff

The women's tennis team remained undefeated yesterday afternoon with a lopsided victory over Smith College 8-1. Taking five of six singles and sweeping the doubles they upped their record to 4-0.

It was the perfect tennis day, with no wind, moderate temperatures, and sunny. The weather brought out spectators to the Boyden courts.

The match started out well as Barbara Mills finished first with a 6-0, 6-0, win. That made it her fourth win with no losses so far this season. The only loss of the match came next as Chris Carson (fourth singles) went down 6-2, 6-0. Bouncing right back with wins were number two and three singles, Elizabeth Sullivan and Joanne Vennochi. Finishing up the singles were number five Paula Natalia and number six Sue Lochiatto with scores of 6-4, 6-4 and 6-3, 6-2 respectively.

The doubles pairs were able to win all three of their matches. Number one doubles, Kathy Burke and Carolyn Tarbell, won in a close match 6-4, 6-4. Number two doubles, Sally Fryberger and Helen Najarian, won easily 6-2, 6-3. The longest match of the day was turned in by the number three doubles in a hard fought three setter, 4-6, 6-1, 6-1.

Kathy Burke summed up the match; "We all played out of our heads."

"This was our first match of the season and we did have some sick and injured players but UMass has a strong and cohesive team," Smith coach Chris Davis said.

The junior varsity also won 2-0, playing one singles match and a doubles match.

ZooDisc tops Keene, 21-12

The UMass ultimate team extended its win column to three yesterday with a 21-12 routing of Keene State College of New Hampshire. Tim Riviere, Larry Denaro and Gary Rotatori combined for nine goals during the afternoon of frisbee action.

ZooDisc has played its last two games with three key palyers injured. Co-captain Dave Elsworth has been out all season with a badly bruised foot, and will not be playing for two more weeks.

Joel Zuckerman, the second co-captain separated his shoulder while making a diving catch in the end zone during last weekend's game against Boston Aerodisc. The touchdown was good but it will cost Zuckerman another week of playing time.

Reggie Mimms, a graduate student who is playing ultimate for his fifth year, fractured his wrist during last Saturday's scrimmage with Hampshire.

Tomorrow and Sunday ZooDisc will compete in a tournament held at Hampshire College. Worcester Polytechnic Institute, Holy Cross and Tufts will be competing in addition to UMass and Hampshire.

"If this was a seeded tournament we'd be seeded number one," Zuckerman said. "The general feeling on our team is that if we concentrate we'll win it," he said.

Action starts at 11 a.m. on Saturday.

Mass., 274 pounds, and Paul Phillippy, 248, for example) but a bit slow. Right side linebacker Anthony Griggs leads the team in tackles.

Speed could very well be the key to tomorrow's contest. UMass has the speed. The Villagova offensive line outweighs the UMass defense considerably, their smallest starter being a 230-pounder. The UMass defense, led by tackles Dan Petrie and Eric Cregan (both 240 lbs.) and the good-hitting tandem of Frank DiTommaso and George Lewis will attempt to beat the Wildcat offensive line with quickness. Pete DiTommaso, other half of the brother D-combo, and Scott Crowell will start at linebacker.

Keeping an eye on the speedy Sydnor will be weak-side safety Bob Manning with Pete Spadafora at the strong-side strike position.

"We have to control the game on defense," Pickett says, sizing up tomorrow's opener. "They (Villanova) move the football well; they've just had trouble holding onto it. But I'm not going to worry about their turnovers, I'll worry about ours."

Villanova's kicking game is sound, with punter Joe Borajkiewicz averaging nearly 40 yards per kick, and place-kicker Chuck Bushbeck, who hit a 36-yard field goal against Maryland.

By contrast, the UMass kicking game is suspect.

The UMass offense, led by QB Tim Fontaine and backs Tom Murray and Garry Pearson, will have to show more than it did in last week's Dartmouth scrimmage where it failed to score.

"We're going in there in the dark," Bedesem claims. "We didn't have time to scout. We're going on what we've seen before, and UMass has always been sound fundamentally. It'll be a good game."

"It was simply a question of finishing off a play," commented UMass Coach Russ Kidd, whose team drops to 1-2. "We had our chances, but I thought we were flat as a group. We played our game, but number three (Wisseh) dominated us in the first half. We had three days to get ready for this one, but I don't think we had all the jets turned on."

The Minutemen will face Southern Connecticut State College tomorrow afternoon at 12 p.m. at Boyden Field.

Harriers open at Boston College

By JIM GRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's cross-country team starts its season at 3:30 today against Boston College at Franklin Park in Boston. The team hopes to regain the strength and depth of last year that drove it to win the New Englands, place fourth in the Easterns and gain a ranking of 20th in the Nationals.

New coach Julie LaFreniere, a 1977 graduate of UMass and former cross-country runner with the team, will rely on the talent of last year to score more victories this season. Top runners returning to the team include juniors Judy McCrone, Cathy Petrick, Tricia Moores, Robyn Dally and senior Dill Wilson. LaFreniere has spent the last three years coaching cross-country at Amherst High School.

"I'm sure we'll beat BC. Our top four runners are looking very strong, but we're a little weak as far as the fifth person goes. Losing Julie and Linda really hurt us," LaFreniere said.

Missing from last year's squad is junior Julie Burke, who is on exchange at the University of Oregon and senior Linda Welzel, who is out with a back injury. Both Burke and Welzel shared the third and fourth spots on last year's team. The top five runners from each team score points in a meet.

The Minutewomen have been working hard in hopes of dominating women's cross-country in New England as they did last season.

"Harvard and Vermont should be tough this season, but it's too early to tell how anyone's going to do," top UMass runner McCrone said.

After today's meet against BC the team's next meet will be against Harvard on Tuesday in Franklin Park.

Linksters set to host EAA's

The UMass men's golf team opens its home season today hosting the Eastern Eight Championships, and hoping to continue in its winning ways. The team opened the season with victories over the University of New Hampshire and the University of Vermont up at Portsmouth Country Club in New Hampshire last Tuesday.

The Minutemen were led by senior captain Marty Hunt who finished at 78. UMass' six man squad totaled a score of 476, just enough to get by UNH which totaled a 478.

Coach Ed Vlach was pleased. "We played on an unfamiliar course, yet all the scores were very competitive." The Minutemen placed five golfers in the top ten. Captain Marty Hunt attributed the victory to "keeping our heads and that's what kept the score low."

This weekend UMass is hosting the Eastern Eight Championships at Hickory Ridge Country Club, their home course. Last year, the tournament was hosted by Rutgers down in New Jersey. The UMass team finished third then, but are looking to better that on their home course. The Minutement who only have four returnees back from last year will have to be without Captain Hunt. The captain who starred at Algonquin High School in Northboro, Mass. will be attending his brother's wedding.

Other UMass golf team veterans include, junior Bob Gladchuk, and sophomores Steve Midttun and Rich Murphy. Newcomers to the nine—man squad are all juniors. They include John Gallagher (a former UMass Hockey and base all player), Bob Grassetti, Jay McConnell, Richard ells, and Ron Laverdierre.

When asked to compare this team to last year's team which finished fifth out of 38 teams in the New Englands and fourth in the New England Division One Championship, Coach Vlach said, "I can't compare this team with others, I haven't seen enough of the new people to be able to compare them in any way.

I like the maturity of this team and hopefully this is going to compensate some."

Along with the Eastern Eight Championships today and tomorrow, UMass also has the advantage of having the Toski Invitational Tournament held on its home course at Hickory Ridge. The Toski Invitational in which twenty—five schools participate will be played on October fifth and sixth.

Knights nip Kickers in home opener, 1-0

By SCOTT SOLOMON
Collegian Staff

Freshman Benedict Wisseh's goal at 12:49 of the first half gave the University of Bridgeport a 1-0 victory over the UMass men's soccer team yesterday, spoiling the Minutemen's 1980 home opener.

The score came after Wisseh collected a pass from teammate Jim Costa. The 6'3" striker headed the pass at the ground, bouncing it past a sprawling Matt Esteves, giving his club an early lead. From that point the visitors relied on dominating ball control and some outstanding defensive play, keeping UMass handcuffed in the second half.

"I was really impressed with our defense," Bridgeport Coach Fran Bacon said after the game. "Our defense is a young one, but they were able to hold together, even with (senior co-captain Marty) Rackham tied up all day."

But while the Knight's defense did an excellent job keeping the Minutemen pinned in during the second half, UMass had countless chances to break the game open in the first 45 minutes. In the opening minutes of the game, UMass' Dave Harrington banged a Fritz Pike corner kick off the right post, giving an indication of what was ahead for the Minutemen.

For a brief period things seemed to be going UMass' way. During the last few days they had worked on pressuring the ball, something they had failed to do the week before against Davis and Elkins. And for a while the pressure took its toll against Bridgeport, as they wee not able to play their aggressive offensive game.

A key to the UMass offensive surge was sophomore Tony G. Dias. The scrappy forward from Ludlow was virtually a one-man show in the first half, putting on a two-way soccer exhibition. Dias showed some aerial acrobatics, as he back flip-kicked a corner shot, coming within inches of the cross-bar.

But Bridgeport too, had their main attraction—in the person of Mr. Wisseh who hails from Liberia. Wisseh put on an absolutely spectacular show, weaving under, around and through the UMass defense. In the second half Wisseh's offensive show was shut down, as he was shadowed beautifully by Mass' Joe Bortolotti.

In the second half the UMass strikers and midfielders were stalled. The Minutemen simply could not get a strong forward attack in gear, and as a result they were constantly trailing back into their own end. Where there were opportunities in the opening half, in the second there were very few.

Minuteman John Brigham did manage to get off a rifle from 10-yards out toward the game's end, but it was picked off by Knight goalie Chuck Kniffin, drowning a UMass come-back.

Gridders tangle with Wildcats

Host Villanova in season opener

By KEVIN CULLEN
Collegian Staff

The wait is over. After 28 days of hitting each other, pretending it was some kid from a little suburb near Philadelphia, the UMass football team gets to hit the Villanova Wildcats for real, tomorrow afternoon in the season opener at Alumni Stadium.

Villanova enters the game with a 0-2 record, after a 7-3 loss to Maryland and a 21-7 defeat at the hands of Richmond. This is a "we got some good news and some bad news" situation. The good news, obviously, is that the Minutemen open against a winless team. The bad news is that while the Wildcats may have lost two games, that's two more games than UMass has played.

"They're a good team," UMass head coach Bob Pickett says of Villanova: "Don't let the record fool you. They put a strong football team on the field every year."

The Wildcats' main problem this year has been turnovers—19 of them in two games. A highly-touted offense has fumbled 15 times, losing 11 of them, the result of a somewhat sloppy wishbone. Add to that four interceptions and you have a team that doesn't hold onto the football. Last week, the Wildcats fumbled ten times, a school record.

"It's been frustrating," Villanova head coach Dick Bedesem said yesterday. "Not any one thing is the cause. Some have occured on exchanges, others on pitches, and still others on good hits. This is going to happen when you run a wishbone."

Bedesem, now in his sixth year at Villanova, has used the wishbone for the last five seasons, and has no intentions of abandoning it now.

"You have to run yourself out of these types of problems," Bedesem said. "It's not going to last. We're a better football team than we're shown."

Running the wishbone for the Wildcats is quarterback (can you believe the name?) Pat O'Brien, a big (6'4", 210) senior who leads the team in rushing with 118 yards. O'Brien has thrown for 111 yards (10-for-23), six of the completions going to wide receiver Willie Sydnor. (Mr. Sydnor, you'll remember, returned a kickoff 64 yards for a touchdown last year.) O'Brien's 3,591 yards in career total offense is an all-time Villanova record, and he's within 90 yards of becoming the school's all-time leading rusher.

Much of the blame, justified or not, for the turnover epidemic has fallen to O'Brien.

"He's been suffering through it," Bedesem says of his quarterback. "He's going to get the heat, of course. But Pat's a fine athlete. He's capable of turning a game around. His problem has been total consistency. It's simply a matter of concentration."

Pickett agrees.

"This is the fourth time O'Brien's played against us," he said. "We know what he can do in a football game. I heard some talk earlier that they (Villanova) were thinking of replacing him with a freshman this week. Well, that wouldn't be a very good move. O'Brien is a quality player, and he can beat you."

Defensively, the Wildcats appear susceptible on the run. Two weeks ago, Maryland rushed for 224 yards. Villanova is large up front (defensive tackles Howie Long, of Milford,

Spikers strong in scrimmage

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The women's volleyball team began its weekend last night by losing all four games of a scrimmage against Springfield College at NOPE Gym.

Despite losing, however, the Minutewomen showed signs of welding their offense together. At times, UMass went ahead, only to lose the lead to Springfield through a lack of coverage on the missed block or not being able to dig out the spike. But the offense displayed a promise of improvement, especially in passing and in serving.

"I think we passed beautifully tonight," said Coach Elaine Marasco, "it was much better than last weekend at UNH. Our defense did very well, too."

Marasco said she was "very optimistic about the team" as UMass goes into the UMass Invitational tonight at Boyden Gym.

"I think we'll do well. We're getting everything together now, and I'm optimistic about the Invitational," she said.

The Minutewomen will begin at 6:00 p.m. with a match against Colgate University, followed by a 7:30 contest vs. the University of Bridgeport. At 9:00 p.m., UMass will close out the tourney for the night with a game against Brown University.

On Saturday at 9:00 a.m., UMass will play Central Connecticut State College, with a match vs. Southern Connecticut State College following at 10:30 a.m. The quarterfinals are scheduled for 1:00 p.m., while the semifinals and finals set for 2:30 and 4:00.

UM accepts offer

The University of Massachusetts has accepted the invitation to rejoin the IC4A's (Intercollegiate Amateur Athletic Association of America) on a one year trial guest membership Athletic Director Frank McInerny said yesterday.

"The IC4A is a satellite organization and we are most pleased to accept the invitation," McInerny said.

"We had been working on this for quite some time. The relationship between UMass and the ECAC (Eastern College Athletic Conference) is a warm and cordial one."

"Obviously we would like to return to the ECAC and they would like us to return as well," McInerny concluded.

The_IC4A's involves only cross country and track and field.

Stickers at Westfield

Holding the philosophy of "one day at a time...one game at a time," Pam Hixon, women's field hockey coach, is looking forward to working with the number of freshmen women on the team.

With only one returning upperclassman to the front line, Hixon, "feels very good" about the group of women playing under her this season.

See feels the attitude of the women so far has been a good plus. "They are very eager to learn and improve," said Hixon. "I am very pleased with everyone's progress."

Hixon denies the rumors of inconsistency on the part of the frosh, they have been proven very wrong.

To show her faith, in tomorrow's opening game of the season against Westfield State, she will be starting one senior, two juniors, two sophomores and all the rest freshmen. "They are rapidly growing out of their inexperience," said Hixon.

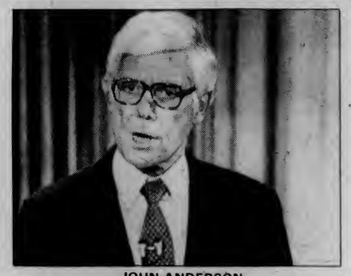
Last season Hixon's team beat Westfield, having lost to them the year before. They are a relatively strong team, but they have had a change in coaches and Hixon feels it will be hard to predict who will win tomorrow. But she does think the team will perform well because "playing on astro-turf is our kind of game."

There is one thing that Hixon is very sure of, and that is, the future with the freshmen women. She is looking forward to working with them for the next four years and watching them develop their skills.

The women's opening home game will be September 25, at 3:00 p.m. against Rutgers.

The Minutewomen scramble for the ball in last season's action. The stickers travel to Westfield to take on Westfield State at 1:00 p.m. today.

DEBATE: Reagan, Anderson square off; President's absence noticed



JOHN ANDERSON

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent

BALTIMORE (AP) — Republican Ronald Reagan and independent John B. Anderson staged two-thirds of a "Great Debate" last night, at odds on tax cuts, abortion and defense spending, but united in their criticism of President Carter — "the man who isn't here tonight."

Reagan said he's for a tax cut, Anderson said he's against it, and both said Carter should have joined them to debate the subject.

Reagan said anyone who thought it unfair for them to assail the absent Democratic president should remember that "it would have been much more unfair" for the independent Anderson to have been denied his debate seat.

It was Anderson's inclusion that led Carter to shun the debate.

That left the debate stage to the Republican presidential nominee and the independent Anderson, a Republican congressman himself.

DuBois papers dedicated: 'Huge debt' owed great man

By KAREN MARIE THOMAS
Collegian Staff

"The United States of America is only making a small down payment on the massive debt that this country owes to William Edward Burghardt Du Bois," said keynote speaker Dr. Lerone Bennet, Jr. at the dedication ceremony of the W.E.B. Du Bois Papers Saturday in the Campus Center Auditorium.

The ceremony marked the conclusion of the events of two days celebrating the University Library's acquisition of the papers on microfilm. The collection contains manuscripts of Du Bois' active life from 1868-1963, including his involvement in civil rights, black artistic movements, the peace campaign and Pan-Africanism.

The collection was obtained in 1973 from Du Bois' widow, Shirley Graham Du Bois, following negotiations with UMass officials. Former Chancellor Randolph Bromery and Professor Michael Thelwell of the Afro-American Studies Department both played instrumental roles in obtaining more than 130,000 pages of manuscripts.

Thelwell, addressing the audience of 140 said "The W.E.B. Du Bois Papers bring a distinction to this institution beyond any it has had in its history and few will equal it or surpass it in its future."

Du Bois, born in Great Barrington, Ma., was a scholar, political activist, sociologist, teacher, diplomat, playwright, poet, novelist and journalist. He was co-founder of the NAACP and helped draft the Niagara Resolutions.

Du Bois was prophetic in many of his writings. In 1903 he wrote "Men of America, the problem is plain before you. Here is a race transplanted through the criminal foolishness of your fathers. Whether you like it or not the millions are here, and here they will remain. If you do not lift them up, they will pull you down."

Bennett, senior editor of Ebony magazine, said, "Because he refused to bite his tongue, because he demanded light and air for all peoples of the world, because he demanded free, total and immediate equality for black people and poor white people, he was harrassed and persecuted and arrested."

Du Bois left the U.S. in 1961 to live in Ghana and direct work on an "Encyclopedia Africana," a project he had a lifelong interest in. He entrusted his papers in the care of his editor and friend, Dr. Herbert Aptheker of New York City. Aptheker and his wife both gave very generously of their time, and served as living indexes in the collaboration of the papers. Du Bois died in Ghana in 1963.

Katherine Emerson of the University Library said the funds for the preservation of the fragile papers were obtained through two substantial grants from the National Endowment for the Humanities and the National Historical Publications and Records Commission. The University of Massachusetts and the UMass Alumni also made donations. The collection is organized in yearly segments, alphabetically by name of correspondent. A guide and index on the entire collection is currently being published.

The availability of the collection will be a major new resource for scholars and students interested in Third World

Antibiotics in ancient Sudan

UMass anthropologists discover tetracycline in old bones

By J. ADAM BAILEY
Collegian Staff

Ancient Sudanese were healthier than most people because they had a steady diet of food with the antibiotic tetracycline in it 1400 years before antibiotics were known to exist.

That is the finding made by a University of Massachusetts anthropology research team which included graduate students Margaret S. Keith and Debra L. Martin with professors George J. Armelagos and Everrett J. Bassett.

Martin made the discovery while using an ultra-violet microscope at the Henry Ford Hospital in Detroit which detects the characteristic signs of tetracycline.

> The discovery opens up new areas in the study of human resistance through antibiotics

Armelagos called the discovery one of the most important in the decade of skeletal biology. He said it will have an impact in several other research areas, particularly in how resistance to antibiotics developed and how the presence of them may have affected the health of ancient people.

Tetracycline is used as "a penicillin substitute in venereal disease cases, to aid in the cure of acne and bronchitis," said Jeanne Borfitz a nurse practitioner at the UMass Health Services.

The team studied bones from an ancient cemetary of a Sudanese Nubian people who populated the flood plains of the Nile from about 350 to 550 A.D., using ultra- violet examination to deter mine that a large portion of the population had been exposed to the antibiotic.

The team discovered the source of the antibiotic by storing wheat, barley and millet in bins of dried Sudanese mud, which is rich in streptomycetes, a natural producer of tetracycline. Biologists, chemists and other scientists at UMass helped with equipment and expertise, Armelagos said.

The team had already found in a previous study that the primitive people had an unusually low incidence of disease. The tetracycline probably increased their resistance, Armelagos said.

There is also a strong possibility that natural antibiotics could account for low disease rates in other ancient populations, he said.

The discovery opens up new areas in the study of human resistance through antibiotics, which were though to have been a modern discovery, the researchers said.

The details of the findings appear in the current issue of Science, the publication of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

The team will continue researching the effects of natural antibiotics on ancient populations, said Armelagos.

Carter grants aid to Maine

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP) — President Carter has declared Maine's 3,500-mile coastline a disaster area because of the "red tide" contamination that has forced state officials to close the coast to most shellfish harvesting.

Carter's declaration means that federal unemployment money will be available to about 700 people who have been out of work because of the problem, federal officials said Saturday.

The effective date of the declaration is last July 1, federal officials said.

Shellfish dealers and retailers will qualify for low-interest loans, while diggers and other affected workers will be eligible for up to $80 a week in the special unemployment benefits.

Gov. Joseph Brennan applied for the aid last week, saying the problem had cost Maine's shellfish industry about $4 million so far.

Legislature to reconvene

BOSTON (AP) — In a surprise development, the Massachusetts Legislature will be back in session Wednesday for possible action on additional constitutional amendments.

A move by the Democratic leadership to end the session, after approval Friday of a capital punishment amendment, was thwarted, partly because of Republican protests.

The objective of the continued convention was not clear, although the constitution appears to require final action — votes up or down — on every proposed amendment.

If that is mandated, it has not been strictly observed in the past and is not likely to be in the future. The time required for votes on all filed amendments alone — one interpretation of the constitutional provision — would interfere with normal legislative proceedings.

Gov. Edward J. King brought legislators back because Neil Lynch, his legal counsel, ruled that recall was required under the constitution, despite reservations of the Democratic leadership of the House and Senate.

Late in Thursday's session, the first day of the convention, Senate President William M. Bulger sought adjournment on a voice vote, but this was negated.

Sen. Walter J. Boverini, DLynn, a key aide to Bulger, moved for adjournment — which would have ended the convention — after the death penalty vote, despite howling objections from the House Republican leadership and a number of Democrats. It was overwhelmingly rejected on a roll call.

The convention then recessed until Wednesday.

On the calendar is a highway beautification amendment that the prior Legislature approved but which reportedly has met opposition from federal officials. No objection was raised when Bulger put this to the end of the agenda, which may signal its demise.

The next item on the calendar is an amendment to abolish county government.

Iran battles in Persian Gulf border conflict with Iraq

(AP) — Iranian and Iraqi forces battled with gunboats, rockets and artillery yesterday along a disputed waterway at the northern tip of the Persian Gulf, and each side claimed it inflicted heavy damage in the spreading border conflict.

Tehran radio claimed Iranian fire sank an Iraqi vessel and drove four others aground in heavy fighting that raged at the 60-mile-long Shatt al-Arab River. Iran said it lost a police boat and a number of crewmen were injured during a sea battle and that artillery, tanks, missiles and other "heavy machinery" took part in the fighting.

Baghdad radio claimed that Iraqi forces destroyed five Iranian gunboats and the Iranian naval base at Khosrowabad, 20 miles south of the giant Abadan oil refinery.

Amid the conflicting reports on the border conflict, Tehran radio said Prime Minister Mohammad Ali Rajai would present five more members of his government to the Iranian Parliament on Tuesday, "God willing." The Tuesday session of the Parliament was also expected to resume discussion of the fate of 52 American hostages now in their 323rd day of captivity.

Rajai's reported intention to present five more members of his government to the Parliament was the latest step in a struggle with President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr over the makeup of the new government. Bani- Sadr had rejected seven of the prime minister's first 21 nominees, calling them representatives of a "despotic" minority — a reference to the hardline Islamic Republican Party that dominated Parliament.

The radio said Rajai would not name the new nominees because the matter had not been made final.

In the U.S., Secretary of Defense Harold Brown said the combat between Iran and Iraq has gone beyond skirmishes, but it "is not a major war." Speaking on CBS-TV's program Face the Nation, Brown said, "I think it is very dangerous to both of those countries, it's very dangerous to all countries in the region and its potentially dangerous to the peace of the world."

Tehran radio, quoting an Iranian army communique, reported heavy fighting all along the Shatt al-Arab River and said that the Khorramshahr oil terminal and Abadan Airport were affected. It did not elaborate. It reported the entire Iraqi border along the waterway was under heavy Iranian artillery fire.

Air Force recovers warhead, refuses to confirm if nuclear

DAMASCUS, Ark. (AP) — A convoy of heavy trucks and a crane moved yesterday into the debris-strewn pastureland where a Titan II missile exploded and apparently hurled an unarmed nuclear warhead several hundred feet from its underground silo.

The Air Force, which never admits the presence of nuclear bombs in accidents involving strategic weapons, would not confirm the trucks were there to recover the warhead and move it to another site.

Military radio transmissions monitored shortly after the predawn blast Friday indicated rescue workers had to hunt for the warhead among the other huge chunks of missile wreckage scattered over the site in rural north-central Arkansas.

Secretary of Defense Harold Brown on Sunday refused to discuss the status of the nuclear warhead or even to acknowledge its existence.

Brown, questioned on the CBS-TV program "Face the Nation," did say, however, "there was no destruction of a nuclear warhead."

"There was never a time when a warhead was outside the security control of the Air Force," he said, adding that the nation's nuclear warheads cannot be detonated by accident "no matter what happens."

During a two-hour span yesterday morning, a helicopter arrived and 23 vehicles, including two flat-bed trucks and a large boom, rolled into the area. Military guards toting M-16 rifles blocked the entrance to the missile compounds while Arkansas State Police cars b.ocked secondary entrances.

Military vehicles were thoroughly searched before they were allowed inside the area.

Capt. Donald Schaefer, spokesman at Little Rock Air Force Base, declined to comment on why the equipment was moved to the silo site.

Arkansas State troopers and military police watch a specially equipped truck enter the Titan II missile site at Damascus, Ark. yesterday. Air Force officials still have not confirmed the nuclear warhead of the rocket is still on the base, but said something will be moved. (AP Laserphoto)

Missing student found in Alabama

By JUDY JASUREK

Collegian Correspondent

A national bulletin that was issued Friday in an effort to find a missing University of Massachusetts student was called off later that night when the student, Anthony J. Thomas, was picked up by authorities in South Mobile, Alabama.

Thomas told authorities he was heading for Dolphine Island, Alabama. He was released after proper identification was made.

A motorist, who picked Thomas up hitch hiking, tipped off police to his where abouts. He said the student was carrying a red guitar and said was heading for Alabama when he picked him up on Rt. 84 in Connecticut.

The national bulletin was released after a search for Thomas was called off on Friday. The search was started when Thomas' parents told authorities that neither they nor Thomas'roomates had heard from him since Sept. 7. Jane Thomas said when her son had left for school he had been upset about not getting into any of his classes.

Thomas, 20, was a chemical engineering student, living in Mcnamara dormitory. He is originally from Lincoln, Mass.. Police do not know where Thomas went after his release.

Editors of Spectrum challenged by staff

By NEMAT SHAFIK
Collegian Correspondent

Dissension among the staff of spectrum, the literary and fine arts magazine of the University of Massachusetts, has resulted in demands for new editorial elections, but the demands are being ignored by the current editors.

Staff members are calling for the new elections because they are dissatisfied with the editors' administration, including their selection of material for publication.

Spectrum, a magazine established in 1967 as a forum for the art and literary work of the UMass community, held elections last year after their annual issue came out. The voting resulted in the election of Charles Francis Carol as Literary editor and Stephen Thomas as art editor.

An unexpected surplus of funds facilitated the publication of an additional spring issue at the start of this semester. Thomas and Carroll assumed their editorial positions for the additional issue against a five to two vote from the staff requesting new elections for the spring issue.

Ex-managing editor of Spectrum, Hazel Wright, explained, "We might have messed up in the beginning, but the fault is in the constitution-it is very vague-but we are going to rewrite it."

Art editor, Stephen Thomas claimed the organization plans to rewrite its constitution by mid-October clarifying Spectrum's policies, primarily in the area of editorial freedom.

"In the past, it has been very much controlled by the editors. Now, if we get good staff, a 2/3 majority would determine if a certain piece would be used. The editor

Smoking to be banned at Bob Marley concert

By TIMOTHY TOWER
Collegian Staff

Enforcing the no smoking rule will be a major concern of the University Program Council when Bob Marley and the Wailers perform Sept. 29 in the Curry Hicks Cage.

The no smoking regulation and other security matters were discussed at a meeting between UPC officials and Head of Physical Education Department John Volpe last Monday.

"Volpe expressed a great concern over students smoking in the Cage area. He is more concerned about people's lives than what they smoke," said UPC Production Manager Nancy Seraphin.

The all-wood sports facility was built in 1931 and would be particulary vulnerable should a fire occur. Seventy five UPC security people will be on hand to prevent smoking of any kind. Twelve fire extinguishers will also be available as an added precaution, Seraphin said.

Volpe, according to Seraphin, "wasn't pleased with the Van Morrison concert last year." Seraphin said Volpe "claimed no effort was made to prevent smoking."

UPC's first two concerts, Marley, and Jeff Beck on October 9, will serve as test cases to determine future use of the Cage, said Seraphin. The Cage is highly favorable for concerts because its seating capacity, 4,000, is the largest on campus.

Included in the no smoking procedure will be a pre-concert warning against smoking. If a second warning is needed, violators will be given the option of leaving or being bodily removed by fire prevention officials.

The UPC would like to solicit total cooperation on the part of concert-goers, said Seraphin.

Air force chooses three

UMass women to pilot

By LILLIAN SINGER
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts has three women about to take flight in a traditional military male role-that of a United States Air Force pilot.

"The military has always facinated me," said junior Cynthia Anderson, a candidate for the pilot training program in the UMass Reserve Officers Training Corp(ROTC). "I liked the people and the potential that I saw. I was looking for opportunity and I'm getting it here," Anderson said.

Out of 30 candidates for pilot training nationwide, the three UMass women were the most chosen from any one university in the country. Juniors Cynthia Allen and Kristen Lepp are the other candidates.

In order to be selected for the training, women had to meet all the same physical and scholastic requirements as the male candidates. They took a six-hour exam that tested their general aptitude as well as their potential to be pilots.

Next year the women will begin their training in light aircrafts at private schools in the area. After graduation, they will recieve commissions as second lieutenants and will recieve training in increasingly larger aircrafts and finnally advance to a supersonic jet.

Since the Air Force ROTC program began accepting women in 1969, increasing numbers of them have chosen for career preparation.

"Over all, the men have been really supportive toward the women in the program," Anderson said. "The men in this detachment have been great."

Air Force Captain Chris Picknell, an assistant professor in the ROTC program, described all three as "good, qualified women," and said that "officially, the Air Force has no reservations whatsoever in training women for this."

Picknell cited the federal statute that prevents women from any combatant role in wartime but projected that "with a more liberal Congress, perhaps in ten years they may have the opportunity to be trained as fighter pilots."

Allen is a buisness administration major from South Weymouth, Anderson is a business major from Acton, and Lepp is a geography major from Fitchburg.

Get your hands under the hood

By LISA WATTS

University car owners will have the opportunity to get a greasy, hands-on understanding of their cars when the Student Auto Workshop opens for its eighth season tomorrow. The workshop, located on the lower level of the Campus Center Garagae, offers tools, workspace, and mechanical help for do-it-yourself repairs.

Education is the aim of the Student Auto Workshop, said Peter Taggart, a junior BDIC major in his fourth semester as coordinator of the SAW. For $3.50 an hour, which covers garage space, tools, and mechanics' time, car owners with little or no experience can work on their cars under the guidance of student mechanics. According to Taggart, the SAW policy is to teach and show – no do. "Anyone willing to work and to learn can receive as much help as they need," he said.

Taggart said the workshop is dedicated to reducing the hassles of owning a car by sharing auto knowledge. "Professional mechanics can cost from $12 to $18 an hours," he said and they do not give you "the benefit of getting to know your car."

S.A.W. customers are also entitled to discounts on parts at recommended auto goods stores.

Taggart feels strongly that owners should maintain their own cars. "People get alienated from the things they have to deal with," he said, "and their limited knowledge gets expensive."

The original auto cooperative began in December 1972 with money from the Student Government Organization. It has continued to grow and change since then. The workshop is now part of the Student Auto Services, a self-funded, collectively managed business. It is one of the 14 campus co-ops registered as Recognized Student Organizations. The S.A.S. also offers seminars in auto maintenance and runs the Student Auto Pool, renting vans to University departments and student organizations.

Although it is the only student organization now paying rent, which will amount to $2,500 this year in garage rentals, the collective has been successful. "Business has picked up," Taggart said. "We made $100 in profit last year." This seasons the SAW opens with an expanded staff of 19 members, including one woman among the 11 mechanics.

The SAW can be entered through the service drive just to the right of the textbook annex. Fall hours are Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday afternoons from 3:00 to 9:00, Fridays from 11:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., and Saturdays from 10:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

★Reagan, Anderson square off

Anderson said the debate showed that Carter is wrong in insisting the American people have only two choices for the White House, the Republican or the Democrat. He said he offers a real alternative, "the kind of coalition government that we need in 1980..."

He told voters that "if you really think that I am a spoiler," look at unemployment, the decline of U.S. military forces, the waning participation of Americans in their own political system.

He said he could cope with such problems, and better than either major party candidate.

At intervals, the debating candidates took slaps at Carter for rejecting the League of Women Voters invitation to confront them. They spent the rest of their hour on stage – and national televison – disagreeing with each other.

"Gov. Reagan and I have agreed on exactly one thing, we are against the reimposition of a peacetime draft," Anderson said, calling that evidence that he can offer a real alternative in the Nov. 4 election.

Reagan told a post-debate rally that the cheers he heard there convinced him he'd been successful in the debate.

"I'll sure sleep well tonight," Reagan said. As he left the convention center, he said that asking a debater how he did is "like asking an actor on opening night to criticize the play."

Anderson met his supporters and said he felt "pretty good" about his showing. As to the question of whether he emerged a winner, the independent said, "I will leave that to the judgment of the great viewing audience."

At The White House, Stuart Eizenstat, Carter's domestic affairs adviser, said Reagan had taken "extraordinarily conservative" positions.

He also said there is no change in Carter's insistence that he wants to debate Reagan one-to-one "and not initially with Mr. Anderson."

Much of the debate revolved around economics. And Carter.

"Gov. Reagan is not responsible for what has happened over the past four years, nor am I," said Anderson, warning that inflation could surge again. "The man who should be here tonight to respond to those charges chose not to attend."

Reagan said his proposed 10 percent federal income tax cut "has been called inflationary by my opponent, by the man who isn't here tonight."

In a debate-day campaign commercial, Reagan suggested Carter didn't show up because he didn't want to answer for high inflation and high unemployment.

Anderson accused Reagan and Carter of trying to outbid each other on tax cuts. He said Reagan wants a tax cut now, Carter proposes a $27.5 billion cut next year, and he opposes both. "This is no time for a tax cut in view of the incipient signs of renewed inflation," he said.

In fact, he called for new taxes, proposing excise taxes on tobacco and alcohol to be put into a trust fund for urban programs and plugging a new for a 50-cent a gallon excise tax on gasoline, saying it would curb consumption of imported oil and provide revenues to cut Social Security taxes by half.

In addition, Anderson said federal spending should be cut by $11.3 billion to curb inflation.

Reagan said that made no sense to him. "Why take it in the first place if you're going to give it back?" he said.

He said the same thing about the three-year, 30-percent tax cut he proposes. Reagan said Carter calls that inflationary. The Republican nominee said he doesn't see why it is inflationary to cut taxes and leave the money in the hands of the people, rather than have the government collect and spend the same money.

Reagan repeatedly called for curbs on federal spending, suggesting that tax cuts are like reducing the allowance of a child: if the money isn't there, it isn't spent.

Anderson sharply criticized the Republican candidate and his platform for advocating a constitutional amendment to ban abortion. He said that is a matter of conscience, not a decision for government to make.

Reagan said the concern Anderson expressed for individual rights does not consider the rights of the individual being aborted. "I've noticed that everybody who is for abortion has already been born," he said.

One questioner asked what changes and sacrifices the candidates would make if elected. Reagan repeated his campaign position that "it is the government itself that has caused the energy shortage" and added that "America is an energy rich country."

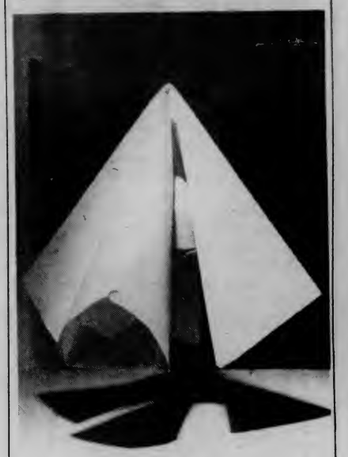
Anderson opened his response by saying that "I simply cannot allow to go pass that statements made by Governor Reagan, who ignores the crisis we face." He said Reagan "totally misunderstands the energy crisis." He urged "a new conservation ethic" to reduce use of foreign oil.

Asked about a military draft, Reagan said, "It's a shame now that there are only two of us here debating, because the two of us here are in more agreement than disagreement on this particular issue." Reagan said if Carter had chosen to debate, he'd take the other side.

Anderson promptly found another dispute with Reagan, saying he'd have a better chance of finding funds needed to boost military pay because "unlike Gov. Reagan, I do not support a boondoggle like the MX missile."

Reagan said the mobile missile system is necessary, "I think, because we are so out of balance strategically..."

In his closing remarks, Reagan praised the sponsoring League Of Women Voters for inviting Anderson as well as he and Carter and he took one last opportunity for criticizing Carter for not showing up.



Can you guess what this is?

Crime sells—students pay

Tomorrow night the Distinguished Visitors Program is bringing G. Gordon Liddy, convicted Watergate conspirator, to speak at the Fine Arts Center.

Liddy is the original "hard guy" whose machismo is outshone only by the arrogance and egotism which allows him to flaunt earnestly his "Mr. Steel-nerved mercenary" attitude.

In a recent interview in Playboy magazine Liddy revealed the ruthless absolutism of a true reactionary. Liddy sees the problems of America stemming from poor leadership. he believes president Carter (the man who pardoned him from prison after serving 50 months of a 20 year sentence) has neither the "brains, brawn, or balls" to lead this country. To correct America's failing image abroad, Liddy says, we must stride about the globe as someone who is ". . . six feet six with a submachine gun in one hand and a baseball bat in the other."

In his Playboy interview Liddy describes in lavish detail his proficiency in the Black Arts, describing how to kill someone with a pencil (one with a good eraser, that is) or how to extract a lethal dose of nicotine from three cigars. (A trick he intended to use had he gotten the word "from on high" to assassinate fellow Watergate conspirator E. Howard Hunt.)

During his tenure as a White House aide Liddy took part in, or initiated, the planning and execution of some of the Nixon Administration's "dirtiest tricks," from sabotaging the Presidential campaign of George McGovern to plotting the murder of columnist Jack Anderson.

Of his immoral and criminal behavior Liddy pleads that the anti-war and civil rights movements constituted an "undeclared civil war," that he was engaged in a war to preserve the security and very survival of the United States.

When asked if he was in favor of a return of the draft Liddy replied, "Yes, I certainly am. What we've got now is a voluntary Army disproportionally staffed by the dregs of society . . ." We must infer then that Mr. Liddy is doing his patriotic duty by staying out of military service.

And for this the DVP has seen fit to spend $3,000 of student funds. They should have saved themselves a lot of money and rented an old Al Capone movie.

Campus Greek stereotype damaging

To the Editor:

National Lampoon's "Animal House" was a big success. It grossed a lot of money by stereotyping the fraternity experience at its lowest. I saw the movie in its second release. It was a good time and I enjoyed it. However, the movie perpetuates harmful notions. It encourages an attitude, a perspective, that is all but hidden here at UMass.

The "Greeks" as they are called, those who are members of fraternities and sororoties here on campus, are repeatedly subjected to a mentality that goes like this: Members of fraternities and sororities are self-centered; they opt for ready-made acquaintances because they can't go it alone. Fraternity men are inconsiderate; they oppress women, they molest women, they drink too much, they play their stereos too loud, they skip classes, they live like slobs and they lack motivation.

A lot of people would just as soon have nothing to do with members of the Greek community, and do not associate with people who are.

Stereotyping is wrong. It is also prevalent on this campus. It is easy to do, because it requires no interaction with the people involved. It is an injustice, in this instance, because it bears no reality of the Greek experience at this university.

Greeks on this campus are involved with virtually every organization. Individual interests and extracurriculars figure prominently in their lives. yes, they make public the fact that they make particular choices in the selection of friends but, then again, we all do, don't we? They have not abandoned personal freedom or personal growth, but have surrounded themselves with those who can teach them most about themselves, and who can help them to become professionals in their field of interest. Their lives include intramurals, homecoming floats, semi-formals and formals.

Thanks to a lot of hard work, students this year were again able to purchase plants for their rooms, at the Annual Plant Sale last week in the Student Union Ballroom. Rooms are again adorned with greenery, thanks to the success of the Intra-Fraternity Council which sponsors the sale.

Though Greeks actively recruit new members each semester, they do not impose their choice of lifestyle on others. It would be nice for us to return the favor, and not impose our misconceptions and ignorance on them.

Single-mindedness limits choice

To the Editor:

It's too bad that some people cannot look past their own greedy hands and see the real world. I am refering to Katherine Curda's editorial in Friday's Collegian (9/19).

Capitalism is great right, Kathy? It gives anyone a chance to earn zillions of dollars no matter what background he comes from. The American dream, unlimited opportunity. Just look at the Rockefellers, or, say, Andrew Carnegie. I personally don't think it's that terrific. The millionaires and billionaires, on the other hand, think it's great and with their money and power try to influence (force?) the rest of the world into thinking this.

The U.S. as well as Russia forces its ideology onto the world, right or wrong. It's time for people to open their minds and stop getting righteous, one-sided ideas crammed down their throats.

As a closing note, since you also seem to enjoy quotations Kathy, I thought I might add this.

"There's a sucker born every minute." P.T. Barnum.

An objection to the defense

After two years, Lawrence A. Wipple emerged from the bowels of the Harvard Law Library having constructed an impeccable case. The present government spending of tax dollars to achieve a first strike capability was unconstitutional on two counts: First, it was far beyond justification under congressional authority to provide for national defense, and second, under the Legal Injury Clause of the Constitution, one could sue if "likely to suffer substantial injury" due to the spending of the U.S. tax dollars. Thus, having established the nexus essential to having a case heard, L.A. Wipple rose to the highest court of the land from which we have the following transcript: L.A. Wipple vs. The United State, Judge Theodor H. Wasp III presiding.

Mark Wagner

Ladies and Gentlemen of the Jury, as plaintiff in this case I mean to establish that spending our tax dollars to attain a first strike imperative steps beyond the bounds of congressional authority to "provide for the calling forth of the militia to execute the laws of the union, suppress insurrection and repel invasions..." Rather the MX missile and similar implements of destruction, pursues an offensive warring policy that makes Hitler look like a schoolboy and reveals the U.S. Defense Department for what it truly is—a bastard of global proportion.

"Objection. Honestly your honor, comparing the Defense Department to Hitler..."

"Sustained. Mr. Wipple I find it contemptful that you use the name of that barbarian in relation to U.S. Policy."

"Ladies and Gentleman of the Jury, I was only trying to point out that a nuclear warhead, the size of the one that almost blew up Arkansas, detonated on Moscow would extinguish six to ten million lives in a matter of minutes. Furthermore the enormous firepower that constitutes our warring superiority would so alter the world through stratispheric destruction and radiation clouds that many more people would suffer and die.

"Objection. Honestly your honor, couldn't we use more civilized language. This is a court of law."

"Sustained. Mr. Wipple henceforth do not use degenerate terms such as extinguish, suffer and die.

"Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, The plaintiff calls Fyodor Mustivek, Captain of the Soviet Nuclear submarine holding Latitude 45 degrees, Longitude 50 degrees, two hundred miles off the coast of Nova Scotia. Mr. Mustivek, in case of a successful American first strike on the Soviet land based missiles, what would be your procedure."

"I would level the easter American seaboard from Boston to Washington."

"And so you see Ladies and Gentlemen that, besides being beyond "providing for national defense," a first strike ability borders a psychotic, world conquest intention which threatens the lives of many million Americans, I implore the court to rule this behavior unconstitutional and restore the spending of tax dollars to the original intentions of the founding fathers—for the good of the taxpayers.

"The defense calls the honorable, educated, former ambassador George Bush. Mr. Bush, would you tell the court what you know about nuclear war."

"Well, there is a winner in a nuclear war. I'm assured of that. The key is to make sure you're on the winning side. So I want to assure the people of America that when I'm deep in the bowels of the Catotin Mountains of Maryland, at Nuclear War Stategic Headquarters, I'll be doing everything in my power to win the war for the people, my God, and my country. Thank you.

The court delivers it's opinion.

"So you see, Mr. Wipple, that in attaining a capacity that assure America victory, we are defending the rights of American values to blossom on a free—though highly radioactive—earth. Besides which a clever boy like you should be out hunting for a job and not questioning the foreign policy of the American government. Case dismissed."

So we see that anything can happen in the twilight years of the American Empire. Good American boys, who grow up and become bigger, more dangerous G.I. Joes, still cling to the notion that if you can't beat 'em, bring everything down with you.

Life during wartime

FILM

By STEPHEN MURPHY
Collegian Correspondent

Right up there with Francis Ford Coppola's Apocalypse Now (1979), Samuel Fuller's latest, The Big Red One, is a must-see film.

I consider it to be Fuller's life work. As both writer and director he is free from Hollywood dictations; he is totally in charge of his work. Most importantly, it is about his World War II experiences as a proud member of the army's First Infantry Division (the big red "1"). This is much more than the usual piss-poor WWII movie. This is someone's feelings and ideologies on celluloid. It is a stunning visual event.

Through Fuller's (Bobby Carridine) eyes we experience the myriad horrors and infrequent joys of war. We become enmeshed within the realities of life during wartime. War is presented as a cancer, exploding suddenly without reason, being momentarily under control only to re-erupt, all the while enveloping all it touches.

Fuller brings to light many realizations, the most important of which is the reminder that Vietnam wasn't the only calamitous war fought by this exceedlingly over-zealous country. Every war creates its devastations, produces its disturbances (social and psychological), and manufacutures its endless victims.

Subliminally, Fuller yields truths and asks healthy questions. His symbolism is less abstract and more down-to-earth. He notes the cyclical aspect of war by opening his film with Lee Marvin trudging along a WWI battlefield. Marvin kills an enemy soldier, oblivious to the fact that the war ended four hours previously. The film ends exactly the same way, only now it is WWII and Marvin's "victim," through his help, lives (a glimmer of hope?).

The cliche of "water running red with blood" becomes a grim reality. An insane man picks up a gun and kills, proclaiming to soldiers, "I am now one of you, I am sane."

Both Americans and Germans claim not to be murdering the other, but instead to be killing. For, as Marvin puts it, "animals are killed, not murdered." The list of depictions goes on.

The acting is to be commended. Lee Marvin is superb as a larger-than-life sergeant, being both cold and compassionate. Bobby Carridine is captivating as a young Sam Fuller. Mark Hammil overdoes it a bit as a young man slowly flipping out, but he gets his frightening point across.

The Big Red One is quite a powerful motion picture. Check it out.

New Globe Theater's 'Menagerie' 'Lacked quality and professionalism'

Vera Johnson (l.) and Carol Stevenson in Saturday's performance of Tennessee Williams' "The Glass Menagerie" at the Fine Arts Center's Rand Theater. The play was part of a week-long drama series presented by the New Globe Theatre. (Photo by Arlene Restaino)

By RON MILLER
Collegian Staff

The New Globe Theater ended its week long visit at the University of Massachusetts Saturday night with their presentation of Tennessee William's "The Glass Menagerie," in the Rand Theater.

Directed by Stuart Vaughn, this version of William's classic play had many problems. To begin with, Tom Wingfield (played by Don Perkins) was simply too old for the part. He is supposed to be in his twenties and he looked more like he was playing a father than a young man seeking to fulfill his dreams; Tom is trapped inside his obligations to support his family, but dreams of going beyond his drab existence to seek adventure in the outside world.

Perkins lacked energy and tried to make the part more a comedy skit by saying his lines glibly and sarcastically. Emotion was conspicuously missing, especially in his relationship with his sister Laura (played by Carol Stevenson.) Williams intended more tenderness between Tom and his sister, but Perkins played it like he was angry with her.

Carol Stevenson also looked much too old for the part of Laura, who is supposed to be in her early twenties. Stevenson was just plain disappointing in the role. Laura is a shy withdrawn girl with a physical defect that makes her limp. She lives in a dream world consisting of Victrola records and her collection of glass animals, her glass menagerie. She is so shy she vomits from nervousness when she tries to take a business course her mother has enrolled her in.

Stevenson played the role with too much anger. Her movements were not those of a shy person, and I spent the whole first act trying to figure out where the physical defect everyone was talking about was. During the second act her limp was more visible, although it was inconsistent.

Jim O'Connor, the "gentleman caller," was also inconsistent and his character was undefined. He spent so much time rocking I though he was on a ship, not a stage. In the scene between Jim and Laura there is no emotional buildup and Laura doesn't act like a shy person. She continuously looks him directly in the eye while he is talking.

The best of a poor lot was Amanda (played by Vera Johnson.) Amanda is an old southern belle whose husband deserted her. She feels she must find an occupation or a husband for her daughter because she can't bear the thought of her daughter becoming an old maid who lives off relatives. Although her hand movements were a bit animated, she was the most credible character in the cast.

This is supposed to be a company of prestigious actors, but they weren't very impressive Saturday night. One would think they could find members of their company that looked the age of the parts they were supposed to be playing. More importantly, however, this performance lacked the qualtity and professionalism one would expect from a company with the reputation of The New Globe Theater.

The 'Caligula' controversy

By ROBERT B. CARGILL
Collegian Staff

It's not very often a film of this nature garners so much publicity.

But directly fueled by the unmitigating efforts of Penthouse Editor and Publisher Bob Guccione, the $17.5 million Caligula has easily managed to upstage virtually all other box office attractions while charging the nearly unprecedented sum of $5 (up to $7.50 in New York City) for admission.

In mid-summer, Caligula found itself outlawed in this state and in fact, for several weeks the more curious Massachusetts moviegoers (mostly males) caught themselves travelling across state borders to get a peek at this decadent epic. But obscenity charges brought against Penthouse Film Productions and Guccione, eventually failing to hold up in the courts, only contributed to Caligula's overall popularity at the gates and led to what Boston Phoenix critic David Chute calls "censorship chic."

Caligula quickly returned to the theaters of Massachusetts and has become one of the most controversial films to ever commentary

hit the screen.

For some, censorship has continually been attempted as a means of protest. Gay activists (both male and female) managed to put the damper on both Cruising and Windows last spring and, more recently, Brian DePalma's Dressed to Kill has been condemned as "exploitive" and for contributing to uphold the already-existing sexist attitudes inherent in our society—in short, depicting sex and violence as an art form.

If these latter three films were naughty in content, then how would one describe some of the footage contained in Caligula? Its merciless scenes of sexual abandon and sadistic violence have been undoubtedly taking their toll on the "weaker-stomached" audiences—Caligula's vividness of such erotic decadence is surely unmatched in our "wildest fictional imaginings."

But the questions of whether Caligula is worthy of the attention it's received and ultimately, its high price of admission, remain somewhat unanswered. Or do they?

Caligula is unquestionably a work of serious art, be it bad, "pornographic" art or good, avant-garde art. Its opulence and grandeur in both set and design, as well as its top-notch cast of Malcolm McDowell, Peter O'Toole, and Sir John Gielgud, certainly make it one of the biggest cinematic spectacles in recent years. This becomes especially so when you consider the vast amount of criticism directed at its chief maker, Mr. Guccione.

No matter what form it takes, art will often deviate from the existing norms of a basically conservative society (ours), risking rejection, yet arousing interest. Good art provokes a response from its audience and raises their consciousness often to a level never before realized. Whereas lightweight entertainment films such as Xanadu and Smokey And The Bandit 2 take no risks and are similar to the usual fare served up at a McDonald's (easily digestible, quickly forgotten), attending Caligula could very well prove a catalyst for nightmares and a severe case of indigestion.. Then again, it might not.

The publicity given Caligula, though possibly undeserved is definitely not surprising. Guccione undertook a risky venture and in charging more money at the gate, is merely asking you to pay the price for the chance he took—on top of the supposition that you will have been enlightened because of your very own venture (attending Caligula) and thus, satisfied.

The B-52's
Stage West, Hartford
Sept. 19

By JIM MORAN
Collegian Staff

Somebody really ought to tell concert promoters not to keep the kids waiting for three hours—it gets hot and messy.

Or maybe bands just like the effect of a big buildup?

And with that said, it's a miracle the concert by the B-52's Friday night was pulled off with a minimum of casualties—save perhaps some beercan projectiles and a few thousand aching feet.

As for the music, (oh yes—that's why we go to concerts) well, that was sort of predictable. The five-member troupe from Athens, Georgia (named presumably after some government-contracted Boeing specials) gave the audience exactly what it wanted, exactly what it was expecting. And that, my dears, was the crux of the problem.

After a set by the opening act, The Plastics, which lasted some 30 minutes, the headliners delivered, as promised, a witching hour set of about a dozen songs, evenly-mixed with tunes from their first, self-titled album, and their new LP release, wild planet (both on Warner Brothers).

Opening with "Lava" and rattling off a string of their "hits," this outfit proved competent musicians. There's no question about it—they're good at what they do. But sometimes "good at what you do" isn't enough. Not when kids are paying $8.50 a head to dance to the same tunes, done near-letter-perfect to the studio versions, which they could do at home for little more than the price of hearing them live.

Their second number, the current fav, "Give Me Back My Man" was greeted with the expected applause. The third, which I thought sounded a little more forceful, "6060-842" offered more than its simplistic lyrical intonations by virtue of lead singer-walkie-talkiest Fred Schneider's powerful output.

But what makes them so unexciting live is that they offer no more than what we expect; "the standard company profit-sharing plan with no fringe benefits"—no crazy, unexpected lines, movements or riffs, no audience rapport, no charm.

And then there was "Planet Claire," with some "unexpected" coocawing by Cindy Wilson, one of the group's two Boo-fanted beauties. They also did "Strobe Light," with no flash, and the ever-nerve-grading "Dance This Mess Around," with its "Hippy-Hippy-Shake" rejoinders, complete with the warbling of the aforementioned Wilson and Kate Pierson, the keyboardist, looking like two wayward Smithies who never did make it to the status of upwardly-mobile female executives because they turned on to Beauties too young in life.

Not to forget the "awaited for," the band did their anthem "Rock Lobster," and this is the point that irritated me most. You just knew almost three-quarters of those present were on bated breath for this one. You know the type—the ones who were dancing in discos up until last year, who have accepted New Wave because it's mediocre enough to buzz along to, but the very same ones who wouldn't be caught dead listening to, say, the early Clash or have even heard of the Skids and the more radical punk element. The ones who dug out their old, sweaty football t-shirts and slashed them with razor blades so they could look just like everybody else.

But I guess that's why the B-52's can be differentiated from bands like the Clash or Talking Heads. With the latter two, you can almost see the evolution and innovation developing with each new album. With these guys, you get new songs, competency in the vocals and instruments department, but nothing really new.

One word about the Plastics—this all-Japanese band which opened the show (and came on after the Vapors' overkilled "Turning Japanese" was played over the P.A.) seemed parodies of the very music genre they work in. They moved about to some very odd synthesized arrangements like little mechanical figurine stereotypes of how Orientals were portrayed in Charlie Chan films. If they are serious, they're amusing. If they're not—why bother?

As You Like It: 'a stunning rendition'

By DEBBIE WHITNEY
Collegian Correspondent

The spirit of Shakespeare came alive once again as professional acting company The New Globe Theatre performed a stunning rendition of Shakespeare's "As You Like It" Thursday evening at the Rand Theater.

Beneath the guidance of the New Globe's producing director Stuart Vaughn, who also acted as the melancholy Jaques, the show sparkled with a brightness and wit that flowed from the horseplay and gestures of the characters as well as from Shakespeare's dynamic word play. The eye-catching costumes of blues, greens and golds highlighted the colorfulness of this comedy, as well as the play's five songs which gave it a musical quality.

The play opens with the youthful sprite and mild defiance of the young man Orlando, (played by Michael Arabin) and a love-at-first-sight encounter with Rosalind, the playfully girlish and charming heroine with a resevoir of endurance, strength and wit.

In the first act Rosalind is cast out of her uncle's court and embarks on a journey with her devoted cousin Celia following at her heels. Disguising themselves and accompanied by Touchstone the jester, they move from the grandeur of the court to the simple pastoral setting of the woods. In this rustic arena the enchantment of love begun to spin its playful web, disclosing the true nature of man.

Rosaline (played by Mary Francine Golden) displays her striking ingenuity most notably in Act IV when, disguised as a boy, she gives Orlando lessons in love. The rendezvous of wit, song and dance climaxes in the nuptial vows of four couples with Hymen, the god of marriage, presiding.

Although "As You Like It" is one of Shakespeare's wittiest comedies, he seeks to point out the absurdity and folly of man's nature—particularly in affairs of love. Touchstone (played by Don Perkins) becomes one of the most exuberant characters of this labor, not only in his comic sketches but also in his phrases loaded with wisdom.

Although Thursday's performance was the only one open to the general public, the Concerts For Young People program made provisions for a full audience of high school students to see a Friday morning production. According to Barbara Aldrich, the Fine Arts Center concert manager, five or six such programs per year are designed to provide young students in the area interested in drama and literature with a chance to attend such performances at reasonable rates.

a certain piece would be used. The editor won't have as much power as in the past," Thomas said.

In addition to these problems, Dana Collier, UMass Student Senate Attorney-General is looking into Spectrum's position as a Recognized Student's Organization.

"In order to qualify as an RSO, the constitution of every organization must be re-ratified every three years," she said. "In Spectrum's case, the only constitution on file is from 1967. This renders the organization invalid as well as any appointments or business it has conducted."

Spectrum's budget, all of which comes from the RSO, was described by one staff member as "very large". None of the existing editors are listed in the RSO files and, as yet, the validity of Spectrum's constitution has not been formally investigated.

A meeting to resolve these issues is being held tonight at 7p.m. in the spectrum office at the Campus Center.

history. Chancellor Henry Koffler remarked, "We are committed to meeting the needs of minority students. They will come here to look at the magnificent heritage presented in these papers."

The dedication committee was headed by Associate Provost Dr. Esther M.A. Terry. On Friday, several workshops were offered in the Campus Center headed by faculty and black affairs specialists from UMass and other institutions. The workshops were entitled "Du Bois' Contributions to Black History," "Du Bois on Sociology," "Du Bois and Africa" and "Du Bois and the Education of Black People."

Bromery said at the dedication "Du Bois was scurged, denied and cast out into the wilderness, but he would not die, he would not go away."

Perhaps Bennett said it best: "He rose above his persecutors like an eagle in the air."

Road race hot and hard

By JONATHAN HAMILTON
Collegian Staff

The Third Annual Busch College Town Classic road race was held yesterday in Amherst in which over 400 runners participated according to Leonard Sheehan, race director.

In warm, muggy weather with tempatures in the eighties Bob Flora won the race with a time of 24:37. Cliff Staples was second and UMass alumnus Bob Neal finished third. The first woman to cross the finish line was Carol O'Conner with a time of 31:42.

Although Sheehan said the times were slower this year because of the hot weather, he said this was the fastest group of runners he had ever seen for this race. Sheehan also said within the next couple of years he expects to have a thousand runners entering the competition.

Sheehan said the townspeople of Amherst were very cooperative, especially the Amherst Police Department, which directed the flow of runners and cars throughout the afternoon.

Busch Beer sponsored the event and gave gift certificates to the early finishers. There was a party after the race with beer and refreshments, served.

Sheehan said the race was a success despite a few cases of heat prostration that occurred along the course.

"If it hadn't been so hot today, the course record would have been shattered by many runners," Sheehan added.

Ruggers win three

By CHRIS WILSON
Collegian Correspondent

The UMass rugby team fared well Saturday in Vermont winning all three sides against Norwich University.

The first game was led by UMass George Economou, who scored twice, and captain Dave Packard, who kicked one conversion and a penalty kick.

The final score was 13-8. The second and third games, played by the B and C sides, were 34-6 and 16-6 respecively.

Next Saturday the team will travel to Darmouth. Dartmouth won the New England College Tournament last spring.

Shawn Passman. Again the two-point conversion was snuffed out. At the half it was UMass 14 Villanova 12.

Turnovers continued to plague Villanova in the second half. The Wildcats coughed the ball up again deep in their own territory. But UMass couldn't capitalize missing a 32-yard field goal.

Then Greene threw an interception that was picked off by UMass' Dwayne Lopes who returned it to the Villanova 27 yard line.

This time UMass marched in for the score culminated by a ten yard pitch to Pearson who finished with three TD's on the day and 117 yards rushing. Heyworth ended up with 103 yards rushing.

UMass added a field goal by Jim Mullins in the fourth quarter to finish out the scoring. The defense did not yield to the Wildcats shutting them down in the second half completely. Villanova starting quarterback Pat O'Brien had to leave the game injured in the fourth period.

"We were beaten off the ball. The situation is confusing in the quarterback position. Obviously the quarterback runs the show. Our turnovers were critical. Our execution was lacking," said Villanova head coach Dick Bedesem.

Gladchuk second in tourney

By MARK BUCKLEY
Collegian Correspondent

The Rams of Rhode Island breezed to victory in the Eastern Eight golf Championships at Hickory Ridge in Amherst this weekend with runner up Duquesne finishing twenty strokes behind. The Rams were led by junior, Pat Horgan, who won the tournament with a two day total of 146. He had a 73 in both rounds finishing only two over par for the tournament.

The Minutemen did have some fine individual performances. Bob Gladchuk had a two over par 74 second round to finish second, five shots behind Horgan.

"Pat had a super score" said Rhode Island coach Jim Irwin. Coach Irwin seemed happier about the play of his team commented that "we had an excellent performance, and we played to our full potential."

The Minutemen of UMass didn't finish. The ball started bouncing the wrong way during the first round on Friday when sophmore Steve Midttun pulled a muscle in his back on the sixth hole.

"I'm glad I finished out, because they had to use my score (82) because Rich Murphy had a bad day," said Midttun. In team golf six men play and only the top five scores count. Rich Murphy not only had a bad first round, 88, but his luck got worse that evening when he cut his hand forcing him to withdraw from the second round of the tournament. Midttun went to the infirmary on Friday night to have his back checked and was told not to play. Midttun gave it a shot anyway, but the pain became too great and he dropped out after twelve holes in round two. The Minutemen then had no shot at first or even second place, where they were after the first round on Friday.

Gladchuk made the All-Conference team, but his teamate John Gallagher was not so lucky. Gallagher saw his chances go down the drain when he triple-bogeyed the 18th hole. UMass' Ron Laverdierre, had a fine first round of 77, but he broke his glasses on Friday and had to squint his way to an 84 in the second round. Bob Grassetti of UMass had a 36-hole total of 166.

Coach Ed Vlach summed up the Eastern Eight Championships, "we were in the ballgame, then we met with adversity." Vlach hopes for his team to get back on the track this Thursday at Williams College. "They'll give us a good match, but our main purpose is to get it all ready for the New Englands and the Toski tournament."

awesome."

Pearson had more to say on quarterback Tim Fontaine, who performed more than admirably, compiling 79 yards passing (10-for-13) while running a stabilized, disciplined offense.

"A quarterback is supposed to be a leader on the field," Pearson said. "That's what Tim is. When I fumbled, he came right over and picked me up. Man, that's what a leader's all about."

The locker room was a mass of high-fives, whoops and party plans late Saturday afternoon. Somebody screamed, "somebody scream!" But, it wasn't Curtis Blow.

The tailback and the fullback screamed, too.

"You know," Pearson said, "that could be a theme song. 'The Breaks.' They went our way today, didn't they?"

Garry Pearson was still wet.

Brian Heyworth wouldn't fork over his shirt.

And UMass is 1-0.

Following this tough defeat was an event happening for the first time since UMass formed as varsity seven years ago: The Minutewomen defeated Southern Connecticut State College 15-11, 4-15, 15-4.

Southern Conn. long a top team in New England, later went on to win the Invitational, beating Colgate in three games.

With at 3-2 record and third seed in the elimination round, UMass faced fifth-seeded Central Connecticut for the second time in the tourney. In the first game, a fall at the net sidelined junior Ellen Braun with a foot injury. However, UMass went on to take the first game 15-7. Inexperience, in the form of (four) first-time varsity players on the court, gradually wore away UMass' chance for further tourney action, as Central turned the Minutewomen away with its defense, UMass bowed 9-15, 13-15.

UMass will travel to Central Conncacticut for their Invitational this coming weekend, while the Jvs begin its season against Berkshire Community College at NOPE on Saturday at 1:00 p.m.

Harriers split at BC

By JIM GRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's cross country team began its season with a 24-31 win over Boston College at Boston's Franklin Park Friday. The women's cross country squad was not so fortunate, dropping a 26-18 decision to BC Friday.

The Minutemen stole the show from BC and its freshman sensation Fernando Braz with a solid team effort. While Braz won the race in 24:38, UMass seniors R. Kyle Martin placed second in 24:56 and co-captain Mike Doiron finished third for UMass with a time of 25:01 for the five-mile course.

Following Doiron and Martin were juniors Kevin Corcoran fourth in 25:05; Chris Omeltchenko, sixth in 25:22; John Caffrey, ninth in 25:37; and Peter McDonagh, tenth in 25:44.

"The way our first two went out with Braz really set the pace. We have a lot of good people with the same ablity and they know what to do during the race. They looked really aggressive today," said UMass coach Ken O'Brien.

Missing from Friday's meet was junior co-capt Paul Beaulieau, who sitting out from competition for a week due to an injury. Beaulieu was the top runner on last year's team.

In women's action, UMass junior Judy McCrone won the 5000 meter race in 17:38, with junior Tricia Moores finishing second at 17:42 and Cathy Perrick taking fifth. UMass runners Linda Lovell and Dill Wilson were unable to compete because of injuries.

"We had three good performances, but we're hurting after that. Missing Linda and Dill really hurt," Coach Julie LaFreniere said.

Both UMass squads will take on Providence College and Harvard University on Tuesday afternoon. The men will race in Franklin Park, while the women will race at Harvard.

Minutemen throttle Wildcats, 24-12

By JONATHAN HAMILTON
Collegian Staff

UMass' exceptionally strong ground game by the offense combining with a begrudging defense enabled the Minutemen to nail down a 24-12 decision over Villanova University Saturday at Alumni Stadium. The triumph was the first opening day victory since 1976 and ended a two-year winning streak by the Wildcats over UMass.

Bob Pickett was ecstatic after the game. "Our defense was superb. Tim Fontaine showed a lot of poise. The offensive line played super. Garry (Pearson) is going to get better. He is an exciting durable back. All I can say is that it was a total team effort today."

After a scoreless first period which saw both teams punt twice and have two drives stopped, UMass, early in the second period, missed a scoring chance as a bad snap from center foiled a field goal attempt. But the defense stopped Villanova cold on the next series and a bad punt into the wind gave UMass excellent field position on the Wildcat 45. From there the running attack took over. With Garry Pearson running outside and Brian Heyworth inside UMass drove over the goal line as Pearson ran it in from the two. The extra point was missed.

On the ensuing kickoff a clipping penalty was assessed on Villanova which brought the ball back to the eight yard line. On the first play a bad pitch to running back Greg Bedesem forced a fumble recovery by UMass' Bob Manning on the Villanova five. Three plays later Pearson went over the top to score his second of three touchdowns. The Dean Pecevich came in, rolled to his left and threw to Pearson all alone for the two-point conversion. Quickly it was 14-0 UMass, and the momentum was clearly theirs.

Then a play that shifted some of the momentum back to the Wildcats occurred on the following kickoff. Willie Syndor, the fleet-footed speedster, took the ball at his own goal line cut to the right side of the field and raced 100 yards for the score. The two-point conversion was stopped on a thunderous hit by defensive end George Lewis on quarterback Dan Greene.

On the next series of downs UMass lost the ball as Pearson fumbled it on the UMass 44 yard line. Villanova drove the ball seven plays capped off by an eight-yard jaunt by

UM backfield ends questions

Pearson and Heyworth run over Villanova

By KEVIN CULLEN
Collegian Staff

Garry Pearson was still dripping wet from the shower when the microphones and notebooks were thrust into his face.

He smiled.

Brian Heyworth stood across from it all, a locker away, while a trainer tried to get his game shirt off and into the laundry. It took a while before Heyworth gave up the shirt.

He smiled.

Pearson, a sophomore tailback, and Heyworth, a senior fullback, had plenty to smile about Saturday. The two combined for 220 yards (Pearson, 117 on 28 carries; Heyworth, 103 on 21) rushing, leading the Minutemen to their 24-12 upset of Villanova. Pearson scored 20 of his team's 24 points, with three touchdowns and a two-point conversion.

The strong performances of the UMass backfield quieted any suggestions that it could not produce points—suggestions made after the offense failed to score in the Dartmouth scrimmage last week.

"At Dartmouth, me and Brian were only in for a few plays," Pearson explained. "But, today we showed what we can do."

What they did was throw a one-two offensive punch at Villanova which controlled the tempo of the game.

Heyworth up the middle, gain of seven.

Pearson sweep left, gain of nine.

An the beat goes on...

"Anybody could've run through the holes those guys were giving me," Heyworth said, praising his offensive line. "They were blowing them out all day."

Heyworth's bread and butter Saturday was a quick trap play, up the middle, which he kept running down the throats of the Wildcats for 91 yards after only two quarters. Heyworth carried the ball only four times in the second half.

"We just didn't need to run me much during the second half," Heyworth said. "Hey, we won; that's what matters."

Pearson ran outside mostly, on quick pitches and sweeps.

"I love getting outside, one-on-one with a cornerback," Pearson said with a smile.

Both backs had praise for their defense.

"When you win like this, the offense gets the credit," Pearson said. "But our defense really did the job. They were

Seventh ranked Owls shut out Booters, 4-0

By SCOTT SOLOMON
Collegian Staff

After a scoreless first half, Southern Connecticut State College (2-1) erupted for four goals in the second half to beat the UMass men's soccer team 4-0 at Boyden Field Saturday.

"We had our chance in the first half," said Owl Coach Bob Dikranian, whose team remains at the top of Division 2 New England soccer standings, while holding steady at the number seven slot nationally. "In the second half we had chances too, but this time we capitalized on them."

For the Minutemen, who now drop to 1-3, it was much of the same old thing. No offense. UMass goalie Matt Esteves was exploded on for 10 shots in the first half, while his club managed to get away just two on Southern netminder Bob Festo.

In the first half the UMass backfielders outmuscled a primed Southern offense. The Owls elected to use a short, quick, crisp passing attack to gain momentum on the Minutemen. But UMass refused to give in to the strong inside Connecticut game. And with a stalwart defensive effort from Scott Cooper, who thwarted an early Southern breakaway with a clean leg-poke, the Minutemen held off the Owl surge through the first 45 minutes.

But in three of the first four games this season, UMass' big difficulty has been its inability to put the ball in the net. The Minutemen did not set themselves up well inside simply because they could not get inside. UMass one-passed, that is they tried to pass too long to generate any kind of attack, rather than playing a more relaxed, short-passing game.

In the second half the UMass hour glass ran down. 12 minutes into the half, Southern co-captain Mario Hamblin, who had been bottled up in the first stanza, streaked down the left side and lofted a pass to junior Jose Ortiz in front of the net. Ortiz dove at the ball, heading it past Esteves for the eventual game winner.

For the remaining 30 plus minutes the Minutemen ran themselves into the ground. UMass tried to regain the pace of the fist half, attempting to quicken the flow of the game. Again they failed to set their offense, and as a result found themselves chasing the Owls back into their own end. Southern, meanwhile, relaxed the pace, waiting like vultures to jump on a scoring chance.

Finally, at 22:17 of the half, Southern's Lou Figuierdo led teammate Chris Burke with a pass up the middle. Burke scalded the ball past a flustered Esteves, icing the game, 2-0. The Owls would score once more, on a penalty kick by Figuierdo, before a UMass player accidentally kicked the ball over the head of backup goalie Brett Olsher for a rather fitting finale.

On Wednesday the Minutemen will travel to Williamstown for a 4 p.m. game with Williams College.

Stickers outplay Westfield, 4-0

By NANCY PARKS
Collegian Staff

Without a shot taken on the University of Massachusetts goalie during the second half by Westfield, the UMass women's field hockey team went on to shut-out Westfield State, Saturday, 4-0.

Starting off sluggishly in the first half, coach Pam Hixon blamed it on first game jitters. "We tried to push the ball up the middle, which is not our type of game."

Both teams played tough, however, fighting for the ball and moving swiftly up and down the field. But with the first goal coming with 20:50 left in the first half, UMass kept the lead allowing only two shots on the net the first half and no shots on net the second half.

At half-time, the score remained at 1-0, UMASS LEADING. With seven freshmen on the starting line-up, the women played well together; synchronizing their moves and anticipating each other.

At half-time, the score remained at 1-0, UMass leading.

At the start of the second half, Westfield came back strong. They gave UMass a hard time, marking their players and handling their sticks well.

But Westfield just wasn't working hard enough. With 21:46 left in the second half, Judy Strong scored her second goal of the game for UMass, and went on to score the remaining two goals off corner shots the Westfield women gave up on penalties.

The women play Harvard, away, Tuesday and open the home season Thursday, against Rutgers at 3:00 p.m.

Spikers impressive at UMass Invitational

By MAUREEN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The way UMass women's volleyball coach Elaine Marasco was smiling, you would think they won the UMass Invitational at Boyden Gym last weekend, instead of being eliminated in the quarterfinals.

But she was proud of her team, of the potential almost realized if not for the inexperience of playing together as a team. Throughout the Invitational, UMass showed signs of dominance in almost every aspect of the game—serving, setting, coverage against the spike and the block, spiking—broken at times by penalties and mistakes caused more often by their own inexperience than by the other team. But still, she was proud.

"They played great," said Marasco, "they're going to be one hell of a team."

UMass began the tourney Friday night by losing to Colgate University 12-15, 15-6, 6-15, in a match that saw UMass come back from a 4-12 deficit in the first game, completely dominate the second game, and had a late rally stopped short.

The Minutewomen then swept the University of Bridgeport 15-5, 15-0. This match featured ace serving by Peggy Barber and Nancy Jofaske, as well as a solid team effort in passing and defense.

Brown University gave UMass problems, especially in plugging up potential points with digs and blocks, throughout their match. Behind 6-12, the Minutewomen rallied to overtake Brown 17-15, lost game two 7-15 and won the final game of Friday evening 15-11.

Saturday morning saw UMass losing to Central Connecticut State College 15-5, 13-5, 7-15. The Blue Devils shut down the Minutewomen's offense with consistent coverage at the net, as they chipped away at a 7-0 (UMass) advantage in the third game to take the match.

THIS ISSUE DEDICATED TO W·E·B· DUBOIS

NUMMO

SEPTEMBER 22, 1980

THE IMPORTANCE AND HISTORY OF THE W.E.B. DUBOIS PAPERS

The W.E.B. DuBois papers are of great importance because they document in manuscript his correspondence and files throughout his life's involvement in ;areas of 20th century racial literary , social reform, etc.

When in 1961 DuBois went to Ghana, invited by Prime Minister Kwame Nkrumah, to work on an "Encyclopedia Africana", he left his papers in the custody of his editor and friend, Dr. Herbert Aptheker.

Two years later (August 27, 1963) upon his death the ownership of his files passed to his widow Shirley Graham DuBois.

Early in the 70's UMass officials including Chancellor Randolph Bromery and Professor Michael Thelwell began negotiations with Mrs. DuBois for the DuBois paperss.

After several years of work, in 1973, 130,000 or more items were transferred to Amherst library where they were organized to make them more available for a scholarly community.

Due to the fragility of these imortant documents conservation treatment was performed by the New England Document Conservation Center between 1975 and 1976.

The main access to the collection will be through microfilm which can be sold and circulate via interlibrary loan to the other institutions.

The filming , done by The Microfilming Corporation of America started in 1979 and was completed this year.

The collection includes the manuscripts of over 400 articles; books, including several unpublished items, several handwritten chapters from "The Souls of Black Folk";the draft manuscript of his autobiography;versions of many newspaper columns; over 30 short stories; several plays; a novel and fragments; pageants that are large-scale prsentations on Black history.

DuBois wrote and published: poetry: "Easter Emancipations", "The Christmas Prayers of God", "Suez""Ghana Calls", and many other poems which offer further examples of his literary talents, these also with photographs, essays, and genealogical material on the DuBois family; awards; citations and many other miscellaneous items are included.

There is also one series of material with over 300 speeches. ranging from those he gave at his college commencement from Fisk and Harvard to the ones delivered near the end of his life.

The files contain only a few items from his early youth, becoming more plentiful in his student days between 1880-1890.

The earliest document in the collection is a note to his grandmother when he was nine. Among the latest is a draft of a letter from 1963, appealing to the leaders of the Soviet Union and China, to heal the division that had arisen in the world communist movement.

Among his correspondents are such figures as Booker T. Washington, Paul Robeson, Walter White, Mary Church Terrell, Martin Luther King Jr, Eugene O'Neil, Carl Van Vechten, George Barnard Shaw, Mahatma Ghandi, Sherwood Anderson, Albert Einstein, Theodore Roosevelt, and many more.

The collection is organized in yearly segments, alphabetically by correspondent. A guide and index of several hundred pages to the entire collection is now being published.

W.E.B. DUBOIS

AN INTERVIEW WITH DR. LERONE BENNETT JR.

Gary Lee

Dr. Lerone Bennett Jr. isa historian,author(Black Power USA, Pioneers in Protest, The Challenge of Blackness),and a senior member of the editorial board of Ebony magazine.EBONY is a Chicago-based,black-owned)Johnson Publishing Co.)monthly publication with a circulation of 1.3 million.Dr. Bennett has been affiliated with that magazine for twenty-seven years.His speech on Saturday at the dedication of the W.E.B.DuBois papers was delivered sermon-style in the tradition of the black church.After lunch he was on the move but shared with me some thoughts on the DuBois legacy and America,and the role of the black media.

Dr. Bennett began by saying,"It is not enough for America to honor DuBois dead..."and he added that Uncle Sam could do further justice to the 'DuBois legacy,"by mounting a massive and sustained national campaing to make his works known."Not only that,"but we need to face up to his challenges."Bennett's lecture had focused on four challenges contained in DuBois' works:1)The Challenge of the New Land, 2)The Challenge of the New Vision, 3)The Challenge of a New World Order,and 4)The Challenge of a New Humanity."These challenges," he told me,"are still on okr (America's) agenda and we need to admit our error in hounding DuBois out of the country and see that it does not happen again."

During the course of the interview Dr. Bennett and I conversed in his hotel room, in the hallways, elevators, and finally in the hotel lobby where he said that the black print media "should be constantly involved in projecting the images, ideas, and message of W.E.B. DuBois."He feels that Ebony has been doing this. As evidence he cited their publication of a pictorial history of Dr. DuBois as well as his personal effort to quote DuBois in every Article he writes and every sppech he delivers. Ebony's 35th anniversary issue will be out soon and in it Dr. Bennett extensively quotes DuBois.

Dr. Bennett feels that Ebony was a major contributor to the Black Consciousness movement in the 1960's and today is committed to "identifying the problems and concerns of the Black community."

He also praised the work of the black media nationwide and named Ebony and Jet magazine (a weekly publication with a ciculation of around 7000,000) as the major black publications. Dr. Bennett indicated his support for national black media associations but said that their effectiveness, indeed the effectiveness of the print media in general was being diminshed by the mass journalism of television which has induced people in recent years to read less.

Dr. Bennett finished by saying,"I hope everyone will use, support and protect the DuBois collection of papers at the University of Massachusetts. This is a landmark project for Black America and we need to understand the major contributions of Dr. DuBois and what we can do as individuals to keep his legacy alive."

Dr. Lerone Bennett Jr. had the pleasure of being Keynote speaker (pictured above) in dedication to the papers of W.E.B. DuBois.

EDITORIAL

On the weekend of the 19-22nd of September the Black Media Groups of the University of Massachusetts in Amherst - NUMMO, DRUM, BLACK AFFAIRS, BLACK MASS COMMUNICATION PROJECT, covered the dedication ceremony of the W.E.B. Dubois papers. We are proud that we were able to cover this event which is so very important to all the peoples of the world.

Before this week-end, William Edward Burghardt Dubois was just a man, a famous black man, who was before our times. Now, as we sit back and ponder over the week-end we see that Dubois was, and is, and always will be much more than just a vision from the past. In the four workshops, we learned of Dubois' contributions to black history, sociology, education of black people, and his conection with Africa. We spoke with people who knew of him, and about him and those who knew him intimately.

The dedication made a lasting impression on us, as we were held in awe by the gathering of so many great minds, in honor of this intellectual giant, W.E.B. Dubois.

Dubois, a man of the world, a proud black man, a honest man, a man who spoke out against poverty and corruption, aman of peace, yet a man of strength.

Dubois, a man persecuted, and oppressed, yet, a man able to keep his truths, self evedent.

We, the black media of U Mass, have tried to put into words, that which we have seen and felt during this weekend of dedication. Dubois is relevant to us today, as his voice speaks as louldy as it ever has. As Dr. Lerone Bennett Jr. said, "Dubois... is still on the case". We have tried to show you that there is a spirit which has been denied to you, the youth of today. And it is especially to his young black brothers and sisters that Dubois wants to speak. Dr. Dubois knows that it will take us, people of color, to teach those who think that this world belongs to the white, and rich, they are wrong. This world belongs to us all.

To many, W.E.B. Dubois was a dead man, but the weekend of September 19-22, saw William Edward Burghardt Dubois reborn. Dr. Dubois is alive, in his letters, books, essays, and poems, and spirit.

It is this spirit which can teach those who are willing to accept the challenge of bettering man kind.

(Unfortunately we must mention the fact that student (five-college, non-white, white) participation and attendance at this weekend's events was almost non-existent. It seems that frequently the community ignores such important happenings. Regardless of the reasons one thing is clear; this apathy is destructive and must end. We often find the same few people involved in many activities which benefit the whole community. These events are not just for the media, especially this past weekend, for Dubois' lived his life for the disenfranchised and society's "non-participants". Now, more than ever we must pull together and support each other to protect our heritage.

Though we regret having to make this statement, it is the situation upon which we comment that is truly regretable)

THE POVERTY OF CURRENT BLACK PROTEST

During the years of the late sixties and early seventies, black protest politics has observed a breakdown in its revolutionary and confrontist character. Firstly, we made grevious concessions to the corrosive capitalist mentality which suffocates our lives. And secondly, our so-called leaders either sold out toour oppressors or retreated into one form of ideological mysticism or another.

CORE, the NAACP, the panafricanists and all the other groups which blindly acquiese in our ongoing degradation come to mind. It becomes apparent that our 'leaders' (those individuals of established credentials who are frequently pushed by the capitalist press--Jesse Jackson, Vernon Jordon, and those others who have succumed to the delusions of bourgeois life and Anglo-Saxon influence.) began to immerse themselves in the negativistic values of capitalist society, instead of taking on the task to defeat precisely those values. Indeed, this is an appaling situation since it is adopted without any deep insight into our condition as an oppressed people. The leaders must be brought to understand that the same society which creates nuclear weapons, endorsed slavery, and currently engages in a blockade against Cuba and Third world liberation has to fundamentally change, in order for it to be trusted by Afrikan peoples and the other colored races. By the above, we mean that capitalist society in all its inhibiting sociocultural manifestations has to be analyzed with a critical bent so that we may come to terms with our economic displacement. The political fragmentation and theoretical ineptitude among us arises from our status as an inferior people. Which must be perceived with an eye to the 600 years of political hegemony that the white race has enjoyed over us. We should not forget that the Middle passage and Anglo-Saxon slavery is accountable for the destruction of innumerable lives, and the retardation of cultural progress. All this sorrow accounts for our present forms of banal civil rights dribble. Yet, it is not only mainstream black politicians who follow ineffectual theories, even the so-called radical fringe demonstrates a profound theoretical backwardness. The first groups and peoples who come to mind are Ron Karenga and "his Cultural Nationalists" and Imamu Baraka and his "Magic Marxism." The former category believes that the black struggle produces more results when it is waged in the cultural sphere. Hence their fetish with dashikis. Afros, the Yoruba religion and numerous other forms of mysticism The Marxist in the Black movement are an equally sorry lot since they have chosen to overlook the uniqueness of our contribution to communal action. After all, our culture also entertains a dialectic of equal magnitude to Marxisn socialism, because of our condition of oppression up to this day. That is to say, our degrading situation as second class citizens in the community of humanity absolves us of the need to follow European categories of protest. Of course the methodology of Marxism can be studied to further understand the malignancy of Capitalist society. However, it is too alien a theory to be incorporated in black liberation since the nature of our cultural evolution is different. My main point is that black politics should be conceived in terms of our struggles against racial domination, Ku Klux Klan interventionism, and the present liberation struggles being waged in Afrika, Latin Amerika and Caribbean. In other words, our theory should be guided by an undying suspicion against those who tricked and murdered our forefathers. Therefore, it is the task of our leadership to arm itself with all the theoretical equipment critical of capitalist society, and also containing innovative modes of redemption. Of course Socialism and Communism are unacceptable since they originate from a uniquely European social context. Thus, it becomes incumbent on us to develop a genuine black politics free from the varying shades of dogmatism found in the various European Leftist parities. Moreover, ours should be a politics articulating the desires of W.E.B. Dubois, Marcus Garvey, Malcolm Little, and all those others enshrined in our struggle for freedom. It Dread ina dis ya time.

THERE IS NO "LESSER OF TWO EVILS

oThe basic fabric ofour society isripping at the seams. In every sphere--political, economic, and cultural--the United States is in crisis. This multi-dimensional crisis, which has at its root the drive of monopoly corporations to amass lush profits, is clearly reflected in the current Presidential elections. We are in a period when the vast majority of people, Black, White, Hispanic and others, have lost confidence in the two "old"political parties, the Democrats and Republicans. It is not secret when the sentiment of the people, and especially the nationally and racially oppressed peoples, has moved from disappointment, to frustration, to anger. The unemployment rate is moving upwards at a rapid pace, especially in the industrial centers of our country. Prices for basic necessities have gone through the roof. Social services are being cut left-and-right while the military budget becomes more and more bloated. There is seemingly no end in sight, especially if the choice is Carter-Reagen. As Angela Davis said in her recent appearance at UMass in the Spring, "A lot of people don't vote--and with good reason. A lot of people don't vote because what difference does it make whether you vote for Tweedledee or Tweedledum?" As the crisis deepens it hits the Afro-American community doubly hard. The unemployment level among Black Americans is twice as high as the national average. The problem opf unemployment hits especially hard on the youth; and for black youth in many of the cities of our nation the unemployment rate hovers around seventy percent. At the same time, the myth of Black economic progress, the illusion of equality, is being eroded by the sharp decline in the relative economic position of the Afro-American popultion. The income gap between black families and the national average continues to widen. The gains of the previous years in the areas of health care, housing and education are being dismantled with the onslaught of anti-people economic policies emanating from the ivory halls of our nation's capitol. As the economic problems of our country worsen so too does the prevalence of racism. The rise of the Ku Klux Klan under the banner of "white rights" comes at a time when the white working people are suffering from the economic crisis. The cause of racism, and the most anti-human organizational form it takes--the Klan, does not lie with the people. It comes from the powerful politicians and the propertied class. These are the people who tell white people "if taxes are eating up your paychecks its government programs that benefits blacks that are the problem"; "if you're unemployed its because the blacks are taking all of the jobs"; the crime in the streets is the cause of black people". It is these messages, which emanate from the halls of power, that produce the climate in which the Klan grows today. Throughout this election campaign the basic concerns and interests of Afro-Americans have been neglected by the politicians running on the major party tickets, as well as by John Anderson the self-styled "independent". The roots of the frustration and anger which resulted in Chatanooga and Liberty City have not been addressed by Carter, Reagan or Anderson. Despite the traditional hullabaloo made by the candidates to woo the "black vote" the crisis in the Afro-American community still exists and not real solutions have been put forth by the Big Business politicians. The arrogance of the Reagans and Carters is almost beyond belief. Not only has Carter refused to take a principled position on the fact that a member of the Ku Klux Klan has won the nomination for Congress in California on the Democratic Party ticker, but Reagan was actually endorsed by the Klan as the "lesser of two evils". It took Reagan an entire month to refuse the endorsement! At the same time as the candidates have refused to address the questions and problems of Afro-American they have on several occasions refused to appear before black audiences, making clear their scorn for the black population. Reagan was unwilling to go to the NAACP's National Convention
Reagan and Carter would not attend the NAACP's National Women's Conference. Nor would Reagan, Carter or Anderson attend the Black Leadership Forum . After making an official committment to attend the 40th annual Black Press Convention Carted did not show and did not send a representative! He also refused to meet with black delegates to the Democratic National Convention until after the convention was

THE AFRIKAN-AMERICAN BALLET

"We take the basic form and create"

How does an artist collective instill black pride in Afrikan-Americakan people? They play music of Afrika sing songs of Afrika and dance an Afrikan dance, creating and re-creating the spirit of an indestructible soul- Afrika.

Last Saturday night Sept. 20, 1980 at 8:00p.m. The Afrikan-Americkan Ballet Company aroused a higly appreciative audience who stood to applaused an exciting performance by a truly gifted collective of artists. This event was sponsored by the Commuter Collective and the Fine Arts Council and left nothing to be desired, but a repeat performance.

The show opened with a solo flutist followed by an Islamic prayer, this accurately depicted setting of the Old Mali Empire of the 13th century West Afrika- which is the historical and cultural frame of reference for much of the company's material. Following the pray were ocapela vocals by a quartet of beautiful women dancing, who were soon joined by drummers and a balafonist. The women danced until their headwraps fell from their heads, as the audience watched and clapped along. At the close of part I, a drummer spoke to the audience "beauty is in the eye of the beholder...and the beauty that you see here is the beauty you see in yourselves".

Even if you missed a little bit you've miss a lot. The second part of the show was equallylif not more) as electrifying as the first part. Dancing reached the level of gymnastics, complete with all Afrikan steps and movements. The costumes...beautiful, colorful, providing an authentic image of Afrika. Why ballet one might ask? The artistic director of the company has said "Afrikan dance is no different from any other type of ballet. The dances of each region of Afrika have formal steps and movements". As the whistle sounded during the finale dance, it seemed like shades of another "real good" party. The difference, however, was only in time and place, the spirit and soul of Afrika remains timeless, unalterable, and omnipresent.

You can take the drum from Afrikan but you can't take the Afrikan from the drum.

ESKIMOS AND THE WHALING CONTROVERSY

By Mark Lee

Editor's note; Eskimos originated from Asia, having crossed the Bering Straits to North America thousands of years ago. The problem that is presented here is only one of many that threaten the Eskimo's old traditions, customs and way of life.

The word "Eskimo" is an English corruption of a French corruption of a Cree Indian word meaning "eaters of raw flesh." Eskimos consider the term derogatory and call themselves by various names, depending on the area they are from. I will use the name "Inuit" in place of "Eskimo" as it is the one that I encountered most frequently. This article will examine the controversy over whaling and what it means to the Inuit in terms of maintaining a healthy, productive culture in the face of a rapidly changing, often hostile socio-economic environment.

The Inuit have been hunting bowhead whales for at least 3,500 years. Many ceremonies, festivals and codes of behavior were associated with the hunting and consumption of the bowhead. Every part of the whale was used. The baleen (long teeth) was made into many kinds of tools; the ribs were used for netsinkers and other implements; the jawbones were set up as monuments for the dead and framework for storage racks or house entrances; the skin of the liver and lungs was used for drum heads; vertebrae for house ventilator shafts, building materials or dog food; and the viscera was eaten by the people or their dogs. The bowhead's thick black skin and heart were great delicacies. Limited by simple equipment, and basically taking only what was needed to survive, the Inuit presented no threat to the continued existence of the bowhead.

This was not the case with the commercial whalers. In 1848, Captain Thomas Roys of Sag Harbor, Long Island, became the first whaler to sail in the waters of the Bering Strait. He discovered a large number of bowheads, and news of the discovery spread rapidly throughout the whaling community. At that time, the whale catch was declining in other areas; therefore many whalers eagerly headed for the Arctic. Prior to the whaling industry's collapse in 1910, ships from the U.S., Germany, France, and Australia made more than 2,600 cruises to the Arctic Ocean, and the commercial whalers killed over 20,000 bowheads. In addition to using ships, whaling companies set up stations on points of land near the bowhead's migration route and hired Inuits to hunt the bowhead from small boats based at these stations. Eventually the bowhead's numbers became so diminished that the price of baleen reached a prohibitive height, and a spring steel substitute was developed. This eliminated the demand for baleen. Consequently the bowhead whaling industry disappeared in the early 20th century, after coming close to removing the bowhead whale from the waters of the earth.

Beginning in 1972, the scientific committee of the International Whaling Commission (IWC) expressed concern over the lack of U.S. scientific research on the increased numbers of bowheads taken, and bowheads struck and then lost by the Inuit. In 1976, the IWC passed a resolution asking the U.S. to reduce the bowhead catch, but no meaningful U.S. action resulted. In June 1977, the IWC retracted its exemption for the Inuit from the ban on bowhead whaling, and totally prohibited Inuit bowhead whaling for one year. Prior to 1977, the U.S. did little to inform the Inuits of IWC developments; so when word reached them of the IWC ban, they were understandably shocked and upset. During August 1977, in Barrow, Alaska, 70 Inuit whaling captains formed the Alaska Eskimo Whaling Commission (AEWC). This group denied jurisdiction of the IWC over Inuit whaling activities and recognized the need to participate in legislative decisions regarding the bowhead.

Most Inuits live in a state of extreme poverty. Employment is scarce and concentrated in urban areas far from villages. Several welfare programs are available to the Inuits. However, the only one which has the capacity to account for the subsistence life style of the Inuit is the Bureau of Indian Affairs Social Services Program. This program provides three types of relief: 1) winter relief in the villages, 2) relief to urban migrants, and 3) relief for unemployed persons.

The program is designed for short term assistance, providing miscellaneous costs over an average one month period per case. It does not deal with chronically insufficient income caused by lack of jobs in rural areas and declining subsistence resources. Inuit unemployment figures range from 22.7 percent (1972) to 37.7 per cent (1986). The unemployment rate for Inuits 16 to 20 years old is about 90 percent. Approximately 30 per cent of Inuits list welfare as their entire income.

At five or six years of age, Inuit children begin spending six hours a day in school and most of their remaining waking hours playing with other children. The children go to school for eight or nine years in the village and then are either finished with their formal education or leave the village for four years of high school. Employment opportunities are scarce and the high school graduate is left with a formal education of little use. The schools teach the Inuit children to appreciate the values and customs of a culture in which it is difficult for them to succeed, and leave them little time to learn the culture of their own people. Thus, young Inuits become caught between two societies and are suited for neither one.

All Inuits are confronted with a rapidly encroaching materialistic society in which thought and behavior traits developed over the centuries in order to survive in one of the harshest environments on earth, seem functionless and cumbersome. Possessiveness and individualism, rather than community sharing, aggressiveness instead of cooperation, and making long range future plans rather than making the best of the present, are but a few of the encouraged qualities of white society which run counter to the basic Inuit mentality. This state of cultural limbo has led to loss of self-esteem, confidence and sense of purpose among the Inuits, resulting in rising rates of violence, alcoholism, and suicide (some reports indicate s suicide rate of 3,000 per cent above the national average).

The bowhead hunt provides an important food source as well as a meaningful cultural activity for the Inuit in the face of economic and psychological hardships. Confidence, pride, and cultural stability are maintained by implementing skills and values during the hunt which the Inuit cherish and understand.

In addition to being a vital part of the Inuit diet, the bowhead provides baleen and whalebone which are used by the Inuit to make arts and crafts objects to supplement their income. The bowhead hunt is the focal point of many activities involving almost everyone in the whaling village.

At several public hearings held in September 1977, regarding the IWC decision to ban Inuit bowhead whaling, Inuits repeatedly expressed their desire to control their own destiny concerning bowhead whales--as they have for thousands of years, and that if it can be shown that the bowhead is in danger of extinction, then the Inuit would be the first to control their own activities.

"I have never been so insulted in all my life as when I was told somebody's interest elsewhere were more important than my own community's livelihood...In order for us to execute the whale, and for whale and Inuit to continue this special relationship, we're going to have to argue, to get into a fight that is demeaning...and in doing this, we have two hundred and twenty million people to educate: that is, the populations of the sixteen countries who voted against the Eskimos...There is a greater right than the exploitation of the whale--the right of a people to live their own way, and to enforce psychological tyranny by depriving them of it is probably the greatest deprevation any people can undergo...Our total community psychiatry is at stake, and it is not for sale! Without the whale there is no Eskimo!"

The IWC bowhead quotas essentially place industrialized, mostly white societies in a position to order how much of a vital cultural and subsistence activity the Inuit should sacrifice because of the bowhead's present depleted condition, a condition caused by the excesses, greed and carelessness of these same societies. This hardly seems fair. The Inuit would lose much if the bowhead became extinct, and have repeatedly expressed their desire to prevent that from occurring. Scientific data regarding the status of the bowhead should be made available to the Inuit to help them make whaling management decisions. The Inuit , not the IWC, should be the people who decide how they will regulate their harvest of a creature they had been huntingand depending on, centuries before most white men even knew it existed.

THE ORIENT 寿 EXPRESSED

A two-week celebration of the arts, crafts and culture of the Orient September 13th thru 27th.

"Can Richard Chamberlain play Tarzan?"

He can, in fact he already has -- for those who have seen NBC-TV's $22 million special Shogun.

For years, Hollywood has continuosly spewed out countless movies featuring a white adventurer, fugitive, wanderer or soldier of fortune who enters a technologically-less advanced, but "exotic" Asian or Pacific Islander society and "saves" the natives from themselves, while checking out the local female talent (remember all those John Wayne and Clark Gable movies!). I wonder what the gut reactions of Asian-American students was on this campus who watched this neo-colonial escapist fare.

Along with the showing of Shogun, it is no coincidence that Boston's major department store, Jordan Marsh, is currently sponsoring the "Orient Expressed" as the" 350 Jubilee gift to Boston" at the same time. This two-week promotional hype is for the potential customers looking "for a charming insight into Eastern culture." You can see models in perfectly charming blouses'. You can experience the "delight of a quilted silk jacket and revel in the shimmer of silk" and other ecstatic activities.

This two week celebration of arts, crafts and culture of the Orient circus includes private collections of artwork, Hong Kong tailors, high fashion designs, traditional-styled musical performances, costumed dance acts, martial arts demonstrations, expensive housewares and other tidbits of exotic erotic "orientalia", including the beautiful Miss Kimono of 1980 from Japan.

Asian-American (and other third world) students who are serious about political work on campus and in their communities need to closely examine the effects of neo-colonial "Fantasy Island" trips like Shogun and "Orient Expressed." The creators of these two events are more concerned with profits than people. These colorful creations can have a deceptive appeal to ethnic pride, but they are basically symptomatic of a society obsessed with escapist entertainment, media manipulation, crass profiteering, alienated materialism, monopolized high technology and exploitation of the Third World countries.

Immerse youself in these papers now opened to a staggering and unsure America... what a gift his (Dubois) provides... the papers are the keys unlocking that gate. Such a one never perishes.. our ceremony to today bears witness to that great truth. what can be more fitting than to close with prayers he (Dubois) wrote for himself and shared with his students seventy years ago. "Let us be afraid neither of mere physical hurt nor of the unfashionableness of our color, nor of the unpopularity of our cause. Let's turn towards the battle of life undismayed and above all after when we have fought the good fight grant us to face the shadow of death with the same courage that has let us live. Give us in our day, oh God, to see the fulfilment of thy vision of peace. May these young people grow to dispise false ideas of conquest and empire and all the tinsel of war. May we strive to replace false with justice and armies of murder with armies of relief. May we believe in peace among all nations as a present practical creed and count love for our country as love and not hate for all our fellow humanity.""

My earliest recollection was a speech Dr. DuBois made in Nashville in the Twenties probably '28...it was a speech that really caused a strike at Fisk. He was invited to the campus and came to the campus and spoke to the students and of course the students struck they marched over to the President's house and made their demands which had to do with housing, food and those sorts of things... that was very, very unusual at that time...
I don't remember if anyone was arrested or not...it was considered scandalous...but it did change things. He protested about the girls having to wear uniforms and some of the practices that were supposed to have been a little old fashioned at that time. I didn't hear him speak but my mother came home, she was so excited, she said, "Oh you should have gone"...and then the strike occured and there were a lot of changes in the school.

In Berlin on his 25th birthday, he was pondering, what does life mean? He wrote in his diary that it means three things: one, that his mission in life should be a search for truth. Second, that he should always have pride in his race. While at Fisk University he had used his summers to work among the black people in the highlands of Tennesee and he saw the beaty of the orietation of black people to themselves. (He saw) pride in his people that they were able people, who could pursue any line of work given the opportunity. And his third point was service to mankind not just to black people because he had pride in black people but because he would devote his life to truth, pride in race and to service to all mankind. That's how I think of DuBois".

I believe that it is quite possible and this is my own personal opinion and it may sound heretical, I tried to say it today it was not quite what I wanted to say. If you read DuBois he was so prophetic and the reaction of the public, the whites against him was so intense that if you looked at the parallel in DuBois' life with the parallel of the life of Christ in the Bible you begin to wonder at times had not the world witnessed the Second Coming I don't know. I consider him as a prophet, I consider him as one of the most brilliant American human beings because I don't know that much about European intellectuals, but I consider him as near the top as Dr. Bernett said "He has to be near the top if not the top of the list of American intellectuals in the past two centuries", that's the way I tink Dubois is. I also see him as a human being. I see him as a black man who instead of doing what he did for self-serving purposes did it for all the borthers and sisters. He's also symbolic in one respec tahtI know a lot of people won't want to hear. That is that he says its an obligation to all the black students all over the United States and Massachusetts to be serious about their intellectual achievements not so they can get a job with General Electric.. not being against getting a job with General Electric but whenever we do that we have to remember there are other brothers and sisters we can help lift up. Ans so I think Dubois is talking about us getting serious about our intellectual achievements because the solutions to the terrible problems we face today are only going to come about through the qualified trained minds of black people because we are going to have to solve our own porblmes, other people don't seem to be doing it for us.

LARES

Lares, fuiste tu el primero al criollo despertar esclavo, mulato, jornalero tu leccion hubo de demostrar.

Jayuya sintio ira al ver a su hermana Guanica deshecha
Tu, San German, Sabana Seca
indignados se contemplan

Que sientes ahora Lares
al ver a Vieques despertando, sentir al Barrio murmurando,
gozar de los hermanos liberados?

No es un correr nervioso
de la sangre por tus venas?
No es acaso un clamor sordo por romper nuestras cadenas?

Santiago, Esteli y Granada
han cumplido su tarea, anda e instruye a los hijos organiza tu respuesta.

Y tuyo sera ese dia el dia de la patria liberada donde una nacion entera reafirme su ascendencia hispana.

El 23 de septiembre es una fecha de mucha importancia para aquellos puertorriquenos que buscamos y luchamos por la independencia de nuestra patria. Mañana sera un dia en que con mas detenimiento analizaremos nuestros sentimientos y compromisos para con el futuro de Puerto Rico. Hay que señalar que puede haber sentimientos (en todos nosotros los hay) para con Puerto Rico pero no asi compromiso. El sentimiento es algo que tiene que ver con el estado de animo del individuo. Si hoy estamos alegres quizas no pensamos ni en nosotros mismos; sin embargo cuando estamos en un 'mood' politico-sentimental rapidamente pensamos en las condiciones dificiles en que se encuentra Puerto Rico. El compromiso no solo tiene lugar en la mente, vida y corazon del individuo sino que es el individuo en si. El puertorriqueño que se siente comprometido con el futuro de su nacion es fisicamente igual que aquel que ni siente ni padece por Puerto Rico. No hay ninguna caracteristica exterior que distinga los unos de los otros. Solo sabemos quien esta comprometido para con su patria cuando vemos la predica y defensa que hace de los valores y patrimonio de la misma. Es para estos que el 23 de septiembre tiene una gran importancia.

El 23 de septiembre de cada año se celebra en Puerto Rico "El Grito de Lares". El Grito de Lares representa la iniciativa Boricua por liberar su patria, este esta bajo dominio Español o Yankee. Fue el 23 de septiembre de 1867 que un grupo de revolucionarios puertorriqueños decidio tomar las armas para derrocar al imperio español que oprimia la nacion puertorriqueña. Ramon Emeterio Betances y Segundo Ruiz Belvis son los patriotas que sobresalen en esta heroica accion. Si bien ambos se encontraban fuera de Puerto Rico al momento de la accion (de hecho ya Ruiz Belvis habia sido asesinado en Chile), fueron ellos los lideres intelectuales de la revolucion puertorriqueña. La accion contra el imperio español estaba planeada para llevarse a cabo el 26 de septiembre de ese año (1867). Debido a que los propositos revolucionarios fueron delatados al gobierno estos tuvieron que ser adelantados. Solo 400 hombres participaron en la liberacion de Lares. No fue necesario derramar una gota de sangre porque los representantes del imperio no se resistieron a los reclamos del ejercito de liberacion. Al dia siguiente la accion se extenderia hasta San Sebastian (pueblo contiguo a Lares); alli las fuerzas militares los estaban esperando mucho mejor armados y estrategicamente apostados. Los revolucionarios puertorriqueños que estaban armados de machetes y uno que otro fusil fueron diezmados rapidamente; muchas fueron las bajas, muchos los heridos mucho tambien los arrestados. Aquellos que fueron arrestados fueron salvados del peloton de fusilamiento solo porque la reina de Espana fue destronada ese mismo año. Es necesario mencionar que el adelanto en la fecha para la revolucion de Lares fue el factor pricipal para que no se obtubieran los los resultados deseados. Si todo hubiera marchado como fue planeado los combatientes puertorriqueños hubieran contado con mas hombres y mejores armas (en esa mision se encontraba Betances en San Tomas y Santo Domingo.

Ahora 123 años despues de la revolucion de Lares encontramos muchos puertorriqueños que piensan que es imposible una repeticion de Lares. Muchos lo piesan imposible porque van al imperio yankee indestructible, otros porque ya se han creado asi mismos unas metas que marchan en direccion contraria a los ideales patrioticos. Muchas veces cuando se presenta el tema de una revolucion armada en Puerto Rico muchos conceptuan la idea como suicida o inutil. Ahora la tendencia politica de muchos es lograr la liberacion de la patria atravez de comites y "mesas redondas".

La probabilidad de una revolucion armada tiene que estar presente en la mente de cada puertorriqueño. No porque esa sea la solucion final y si porque en orden para lograr que el opresor escuche al oprimido este tiene que dar muestras de que tiene la voluntad de conseguir por las armas lo que por orden moral se le niega. Mientras los puertorriqueños esten buscando tener el estomago lleno aunque sus mentes esten vacias o su cultura e identidad sean disueltas por la cultura "anglo-saxon", no van a lograr llamar a negociacion a ninguna administracion yankee para obtener la independencia de Puerto Rico. Solo sera cuando los puertorriqueños se pongan en pies y en disposicion de lucha que el opresor abrira ojos, oidos y puertas para devolverle a Puerto Rico lo que a Puerto Rico pertenece, esto es: su INDEPENDENCIA POLITICA Y CULTURAL.

Como conclusion las palabras profeticas de Ramon Emeterio Betances:

Mientras mas oprimido ha sido, mas sangre necesita verter un pueblo para conquistar la libertad. Cuba ante los puertorriqueños inmoviles y silenciosos esta probando al mundo la verdad de este formidable, pero impresindible principio: solo con sangre se lava el hombre de las ignominias del de la tirania; solo por los esfuerzos del heroismo y sacrificio, puede arrancarse de manos impias la independencia de la patria.

The Airwaves belong to all the people

Tony Crayton

The Coalition for Public Involvement in Public Radio was formed as a citizens group, made up of diverse members of the Commonwealth to defend the right to have quality Hispanic programming on WFCR as in the past. Prior to the arrival of the station's general manager WFCR provided a diverse, and by the station's own standards, quality range of programs designed to benefit all of the needs and interests of a sizeable listening audience. In March of 1978 the station's secretary sent a report to the Federal Communications Commission License division, outlining problematic issues and the station's response to those issues. One of them was a "lack of Hispanic programming" and its purported response to this was Que Tal Amigos•, which then aired six times a week. In November of 1979 the Western Mass. Broadcastcng Council hired Robert Goldfarb as the general manager for the station and what was to serve as one of the menthods for improving public service in 1978; Que Tal Amigos?,soon it was off the air.

The complaints of the Coalition and the basis for our challenge does not rest on the loss of the program by itself but the way in which it was eliminated and the price too many had to pay for a rash and racist policy. It is the process and principles of public trust that we feel have been violated and must be redressed. At this time, I feel compelled to try to outline some of our complaints, particularly since it is a National Hispanic Heritage Week and our grievances after ten long months remain unsolved.

For one, in all our attempts to peaceably resolve the issue we have been mislead as to who could actually address our problem. The council having agreed that a wrong had been done overruled the General Manager by accepting the April 3 agreements with the Coalition during the peaceful sit—in at the University Chancellor's office. Since the council chose to uphold the General Manager's decision, against the protest of the Hispanic Community and ignoring the Hispanic Advisory Board to have a moratorium on format changes until adequate consultation, the coalition chose to petition the Chancellor since the university held the license. After the April 3rd agreement between the council and the coalition, the Chancellor sent a memo stating that the university has no control over the station and that the responsibility rests with the Western Mass. Broadcasting Council. However, after reviewing the FCC rules and noting that the only legal agreement between the university and the council was in regarts to rental of equipment and further nothin in their application for renewal of licence that there is no mention of the Council, we could make no other conclusion then that the university abdicated its control to the council against the expressed stipulations in the license. The issue of who has control was critical since all avenues were closed to us. Since, there was no record of an application for assignment of control to a separate corporation known as the Western Mass Broadcasting Council Inc. we could only view this as an abdication of the responsibility of the Licensee to intervene in matters of public interest as outlined by Law (40 F R 59732, 1975).

Furthermore, after a July 11th meeting the General Manager (one requested by him) admitted that surveys in the program guide would be received by a subscribershipof over 95 percet white, non—Hispanic people and would be inappropriate to use as a determinant for program changes. Despite this he used the surve results before they were completelly collated to claim to the public that the program Que Tal Amigos• held the "lowest possible rating". He claimed that 63 percent gave the lowest yet said nothing about the fact that none of the surveys were taken in the known Hispanic communities as he said it would be. This was not the first time either. At the January Open House he told me that the reason for cutting Que Tal Amigos was because of an overwhelming amount of letters against the program. Upon reading all of them it turned out to be just the opposite. Such manipulative and misleading use of the surveys is in stark violation of the FCC's public notice on survey methods published 10-27-76.

Both Goldfarb and the council seem to be pursuing a method now that is designed to deprive of us even a chance to discuss it further at the public meetings. Late Friday afternoon I received a memo from the General Manager stating when the next council meeting would be and noting that the agenda section on Public comment stated that the public could not comment unless registered with his office for a meeting the following Monday, It should also be noted that since my interest in this matter back in January all council meetings were in the five college area of the five college radio and now all of sudden one must register to speak and the next meeting will be in Brattleboro, Vermont at 5:30PM when most working folks can't make it particularly Hispanics. This appears to me to be a means of denying the public the right to even comment. Incidentally of course, as the September 16, 1980 Hampshire Gazette article pointed out Goldfarb's all white backers all were pre registered to speak.

Although there are innumerable other grievances we have, I think that these few notes can give those willing to feel some idea of how incensed we have gotten over the rash, racist and deceitful practices of the General Manager and the Council whom I thought we could talk with in good faith. The only mistake I feel we made was trusting their word and their honor which evidently is as dependable as their General Managers. We have tried every rational way to resolve this controversy yet still the council and its General Manager chose to ignore the issues we have presented to redress. It is my opinion that the General Manager is incapable of reasonable dealings with minorities and that the council's actions have given sanction to his racist policy of ignoring our complaints. Those on the council who know me from our negotiations have chosen now to try to turn their eyes to us because we have become embittered by this long process of abuse. The airwaves belong to all of the people in the Commonwealth and we will resist forever those who try to reserve the rights of public access for the priviledged majority.

ASAMBLEA GENERAL DE HISPANOS !

AHORA 7:00 PM

JUEVES 25

SEPT. en B.C.P.

See the article in this issue of Nummo in English by Tony Crayton on the situation of Hispanic programming on WFCR. We urge everyone to attend an important meeting on this situation tonight at 7:30 in the Campus Center, on the 9th floor.

¡ DEFIENDE TU PROGRAMACION HISPANA !

EXIJAMOS NUESTROS DERECHOS CULTURALES E INFORMATIVOS EN WFCR

Patricia Morris

A finesde junio de este año el programa radial Que Tal Amigos fue eliminado de la radio difución pública WFCR. Fue una decición tomada por el geremnte Goldfarb sin consultarlo a los varios grupos hispanos y otras personas indicadas para participar en tales decisiones. En junio Sonia Vivas renucio a su puesto de productora del programa radial, y Goldfarb no se preocupo en conseguir un reemplazante. Goldfarb por su cuenta redujo el tiempo del; programa a dos horas, y contrato a Raul Feliciano, un hispano tecnico de radio, como productor. Feliciano a su vez renucio inmediatamente al cargo dandose cuenta que Goldfarb queria usarlo como parte de su estrategia oportunista para enganar al público . Otra vez la programacion hispana habia quedado en manos del gerente, persona que no respeta a la comunidad hispana y actua de una manera racista. Aun no se a conseguido una persona capacitada para encargarse de la programación radial hispana en WFCR.

Es con el propósito de conseguir tal profesional y de restaurar el espacio radial hispano que la coalición para la participación pública en la radio se viene reuniendo . La coalicion es un grupo de representantes de varias organizaciones universitarias que se unieron hace ocho meses para defender el derecho de la comunidad hispana a tener acceso a la radio difucion. Trabajando para contrarrestar los ataques a la programacion hispana, la coalicion dio varias pautas durante el verano. Se han organizadodemostraciones y tambien se han explorado recursos legales a los cuales tenemos acceso. Ya se a iniciado el proceso de tomar accion legal en contra de la estación pública WFCR En las negociaciones con el gerente y la junta directiva de WFCR la coalicion ha exigido el inicio de la busqueda de un productor radial hispano. Dos personas de la coalicion formaran parte del comite que realizara tal busqueda, la cual terminara el diez de octubre. Los miembros hispanos de la coalición han empezado un sondeo de las opiniones de la comunidad hispana local acerca de la programacion radial . A mediados de agosto se llevo a cabo en Northampton una encuesta de las familias hispanas de Hampton Gardens , cuyos resultados saldran pronto. Estos pasos se han tomado con el propósito de involucrar a personas de la comunidad hispana no universitarias, la cual es bastante grande , en deciciones concernientes al manejo de los medios de comunicación radiales y de expresio cultural latina. En vista de la manera en que se ha recibido nuestros esfuerzos para negociar , y la mala fe con que nos han tratado, la coalicion ha descontinuado sus negociaciones con Goldfarb y la directiva de WFCR; (Ver el articulo de Tony Crayton en este numero, para mas detallesl. Ahora la coalicion esta buscando nuevas estrategias para combatir estas injusticias. Mientras tanto U.Mass. que es posible que el contrato del senor Goldfarb no searenovado. Seria un triunfo su suspencion como gerente pero todavia resta mucho que hacer . Toda ayuda es necesaria en este esfuerzo. Habra una reunion general de la coalicion hoy dia lunes 22 a las 7:30 en el Campus Center, en el noveno piso.

BOLIVA: PAIS EN NAUFRAGIO

PARTE I

Quispe Kalatayud

Bolivia es el pais asociado generalmente con estano, llamas, montanas y golpes de estado. Esta asociacion pareceria consistir asociacion en una formula estereotipada para categorizar ridiculamente a un pais pobre convulsionado por su politica interna, saqueado por intereses extranjeros y atribulado por su poblacion indigena y mestiza desamparada.

En este articulo nos proponemos hablar de golpes de estado no como tema en si, sino como un medio para plantear cuestiones criticas para el enfoque correcto del problema politico de Bolivia.

El sangriento golpe del 17 de julio de este ano,ejecutado por el dictador General Garcia Meza, fue el cuarto golpe militar en el transcurso de tres anos y tres intentos electorales, todos abortados por intervenciones castrenses. El proyecto electoral fue iniciado por el dictador Gral Banzer en julio de 1978. La propaganda dictatorial de este ultimo se empeno en calificar al proyecto electoral como una "apertura a un proceso democratico" tratando de otorgarse credito por esta maniobra demagogica, y sometido a los intereses de politica internacional de Jimmy Carter. El proyecto involucra la retirada tactica de ceder el control del aparato de estado a la burguesia dominante agro-exportadora del Oriente y mineria mediana. La estrategia obedece institucionalizar por vias legales y buro-democraticas la consolidacion de la hegemonia economica de tal burguesia atraves de organos politicos; manteniendo a los militares fuera del gobierno pero asignados al papel de fuerza y poder.

Al cabo de estos tres abortos electorales, todavia se insiste en referirse al golpe sangriento de Garcia Meza como una violacion de un proceso democratico. Conste que desde noviembre de 1964 se sucedieron nueve golpes de estado ejecutados por los militares. Aunque un programa electoral es un reflejo de un proceso democratico lo contrario no se aplica. En Bolivia las grandes mayorias son masas campesinas (cerca de tres millo nes de un total de cinco) , que estan marginadas de la vida politica y social del pais. La enarbolacion de los intereses de clase de estas masas no ha sido llevada a cabo de manera autentica por ningun frente u organo politico.

Desde el primer intento electoral de 1978 se habia tratado de establecer el dominio politico-economico de una clase dominante que evoluciono y crecio del seno mismo de un proceso de cambio politico iniciado en 1952: la revolucion del Movimiento Nacionalista Revolucionario (MNR). Dos de sus lideres Victor Paz Estenssoro y Hernan Siles Suazo protagonizaron junto al dictador Banzer el proyecto electoral de estos ultimos tres anos.

Sin animo de elaborar sobre la historia politica del pais dada la brevedad de este articulo, nos proponemos mencionar las posibles causas acciones golpistas que ridiculamente caracterizan a Bolivia. Partiremos de un planteamiento logico para elucidar estas causas. Es decir que las contradicciones y tensiones de orden politico entre la clase trabajadora(mineros, fabriles y tambien campesinos),la tecnoburocracia la clase media y oligarca se han reflejado y repercutido dentro del seno mismo de la institucion armada.

Entonces cuales han sido estas tensiones que se han encarnado en los militares• Estas a seguir son:

a) EL fervor nacionalista inculcado por la vanguardia del MNR durante el proceso revolucionario iniciado en el 52
b) el papel de arbitros y mediadores entre el estado (subyugado a los intereses de clases dominantes) y las masas de trabajadores
c) el papel de protectores de los intereses de la burguesia agro-exportadora y mineria mediana del pais
d) el aventurismo indivualista de los lideres militares.

Por cierto, esta clasificacion no es exhaustiva (ni pretende serlo). Ofrece un punto de partida para elaborar sobre el tema. Es tambien importante senalar que estos roles no son mutuamente excluisvos sino que historicamente se relacionan entre si por ser consecuencias de un proceso continuo dentro de la historia agitada de Bolivia.

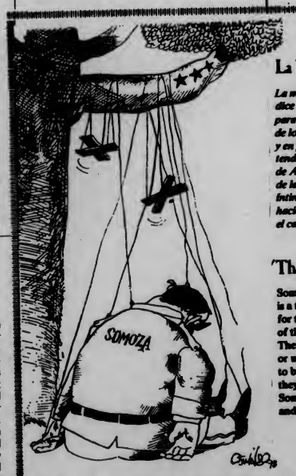
ANOTHER CRIME AGAINST PUERTO RICO

Taleb Bizri

Terrorists have murdered Jose Juan Adorno Maldonado and Jorge Zayas Candal, two Puerto Ricans on a FBI list of 23 suspects ina 1979 Navy bus attack. Luis Colon Osorio, 31, another person on the FBI list is missing from his home.

This series of murders and oppresssive acts against the Puerto Rican people is a manifestation of U.S. colonialist domination. The basic human rights of the Puerto Rican people are being violated everyday as U.S. domination and exploiation of colonized nations deny the right of freedom and independence . The hearts and voices of all progressive people must unite by refusing to kneel to the oppressor: U.S.-led Imperialism.

The murder of these men are not isolated incidents. They are part of a systematic program to terrorize and murder people around the world who are fighting for basic human rights and independence. In our own back yard, in Amherst, Northampton and on the UMass campus there is a heightening of violence against Third World people. Both verbal and physical harrassment, including murder threats are becomingthe norm of the day. There is not one of us who is exempt from the possibility of being found in a hotel room, dormroom or apartment badly beaten up or even dead. This fundamental denial of our basic human rights must be actively opposed. We can no longer sit back and allow these oppressive acts to continue. We must rise up and demand an end to our oppression, together demand our freedom!



La Muerte de Somoza/

La muerte de Somoza, como la del Foster, dice Ike, es una gran pérdida ¡ay! para el mundo libre. "Fue un gran amigo de los Estados Unidos, en público y en privado". Los Estados Unidos tendrán que ampliar el cementerio de Arlington. O adaptar el jardincillo de la Casa Blanca para tumba de sus íntimos amigos. Y ¿he, que ya lo están haciendo. Porque yo busqué en Nicaragua el cadáver de Somoza, y nadie supo responder.

The Death of Somoza

Somoza's death, like Foster's, is a terrible loss, says Ike. Weep! for the free world. He was a great friend of the U.S., in public and private. They'll have to enlarge Arlington or use the White House lawn to bury their bosom buddies. And I bet they're at it already. Because I looked for Somoza's body all over Nicaragua, and nobody knew what to say.

— Ernesto Mejía Sánchez

Note: This poem was written by a Nicaraguan poet after the death of the father of Anastasio Somoza, who was recently executed by Paraguayan Freedom Forces on September 17 in Asuncion. Striking historical similarities connect both dictators' lives and deaths. The humiliaton and oppression suffered by the Nicaraguan people at the hands of the Somoza family's feudal dictatorship have culminated in the violent death of both tyrants.

WHO IS AN ARAB

Who is an Arab

The relationship between the national will and the national situation was not always harmonious. When the disharmony was acuted, some of our great tragedies occured, as when the "Zionist" State was brought into existance in Palestine. At that time the Arab national movement had emerged exhausted from the post war settlements in the area and was not equipped to meet the forms of aggressive designs on our national life. The shock of 1948 in Palestine revitalized the Arab national scene with a new dynamic ferment but not necessarily with an equally clear sense of direction.

Israel, Jordan and Lebanon, each in its own way, attempted to crush the Palestinian guerrilla movement and failed. In retrospect, the developments which took place between the battle of Karameh (March 1968), when Israel sought to put an end to the guerrillas once and for all by massive land assault, and the similar attempts of the Lebanese army with the help of the Christians to achieve the same goal in October 1969, 1973, 1975, and still this present day, manifest all the elements that characterize the formative stage. In March 1968, hardly anyone outside of Jordan had heard of "Fateh", (Palestine Liberation Organization) or of Yassar Arafat, a leading political figure. The Palestine guerillas had not only put the Palestinian on the map of the Middle East but, now threatened the very structure of the prevailing status quo in the region.

The growth of the guerrilla movement into a popular revolutionary movement could still be thwarted by certain developments, agreement among the super powers on a political settlement, a sudden shift in Israeli policy toward peace, of a conflict between Fateh and the popular front. Still, by 1970 the initial and probably most decisive stage had been completed. Escalation of the resistance and the groundwork for protracted confrontation now appeared necessary.

Only at this point did the true nature and the real issue of the resistance begin to emerge. Transformations that the leaders of the vanguard had long forseen, now took form and meaning. For example, just before the 1968 war, when Fateh had no more than a handful of followers, a Fateh spokesman was asked by a correspondent of the French Periodical 'Less Temps Modens' about the movement's final objective; his answer was, "to negotiate with Israel of a Jewish Leadership capable of negotiating with Palestinians on an equal level.

As for protracted struggle, all resistance leaders are convinced that this stage is inevitable. In the new phase, no decisive military victory is expected. Instead, a long series of small battles would take place resulting in the progressive wearing down of the enemy. This stage would see mounting death and destruction: Israeli planes would sooner or later broaden their target areas to include the entire economic infrastructure of the surrounding areas. But the expansion of destruction and the rise in casualties would only lead to widening the "grievance community", and thus to expanding the forces of resistance. Internal contradictions would become more sharply defined and the counterrevolutionary forces clearly differentiated from the revolutionary elements, with the result that the masses would move closer to their vanguard. As sizable portions of the population became drawn into both the resistance and the support of the Palestinian, the level of political consciousness would rise sooner or later the realization would become universal that either the people will successfully resist Zionism or be crushed by it.

As the Palestinian leadership works for all-out war, it simultaneously strives to find a viable foundation for peace. Specifically, what kind of plan do Palestinian analysts consider viable, i.e., acceptable to Israeli and Jewish public opinion?

They admit that declarations made hitherto with regard to a secular democratic Palestine in which Jew and Arab would live in equality and peace, don't suffice. Except for a few progressive intellectuals and leftist groups no one in Israel is likely to consider this formula sufficient. The Zionist thesis is still dominant in Israel and among world Jewry: exclusive Jewish state.

For the palestinian this seemingly irreconcible contradiction can only be overcome by commitment to a position which makes clear the distinction between the Jewish entity and the Zionist state:it should be made clear that it is not Jewish survival of the Zionist state; that the guarantee of the former can only be achieved by the dissoloution of the latter.

The dilemna to the Palestinians may be that, dedicated to the liberation of Palestine, they must at the same time prove that in abolishing the Zionist state they thereby establish the foundation on which Arab-Jewish co-existance in Palestine, and Jewish existance in the Arab world, can be achieved.

In the PLO's Planning Center, as well as among responsible analysts of Fateh and thePopular Front, a serious and systematic effort is being made by specialists in various fields to spell out the kind of plan the resistance movement could adapt as a bases for future peace. The Palestinians are convinced that any effort in this direction should, if it is to have any chance at all, rise above the level of propaganda: It is not enough to convince Jewish public opinion of the Palestinians' determination and capacity to wage war indefinitely; it is essential simultaneously to put forth credible alternatives to war.

Two schools of thought have emerged around this problem, neither of which, however, seems to have gained full acceptance by Fateh or the popular Front, but elements of both seem destined to determine future thinking about the suoject.

One school posits an "Algerian solution" if the Jews in Palestine continue to insist on an exclusive Jewish state and to reject the idea of Arab-Jewish co-existance in a secular Palestinian state, the only position the resistance can adopt is to invite those among Israel's Jews who accept the idea of the secular state to remain in liberated Palestine as equal citizens with guaranteed religious and cultural rights. It would also facilitate the departure of those who wish to leave, with compensation for abandoned property as in the case of the French 'colons' in Algeria after independance. This view emphasizes the fact that Zionist opposition to Arab integration is due not to religious or cultural factors, but to economic and political ones. As in the case of French colonists in Algeria, the aim of Zionist settlers in Palestine is to strengthen and consolidate their economic social, political, and military interests, not to share them with the native population. The only relationship Zionist can have toward the indigenous population is precisely the colonial relationship of 'domination', exploitation and oppression. If this is the case, then there is no point in spending time and effort on elaborating abstract peace proposals. All effort should be channeled toward winning the war.

The other school of thought opposes the "Algerian solution" and proposes the "One-man, vote solution." This view argues that to present the problem in terms of the "Algerian solution" would alienate elements in Israel that could eventually be pried away from Zionism. It maintains that certain groups, which may now oppose an Arab-Israeli reconciliation based on equality and coexistance, may change their minds as the war of liberation progresses and the prospects for Zionist hegemony based on a Zionist imposed peace diminish. This position stresses the distinction between oriental (Arab) and EuropeanCentral and east European) Jews, not only in cultural but also in social class terms. As the Palestinian revolution unfolds and its true progressive and socialist content becomes evident a significant transformation is bound to take place in the thinking and attitude of broad strata of Israeli society and Jewry. It is not enough, therefor, to address oneself to the small minority that might 'stay on', or to attempt lowering the level of threat perception of certain target groups by convincing them of the genuineness of the Palestinian proposal. It is rather only by transcending chauvinistic racial and national prejudices and by establishing a firm socialist base for the new state that there can be a sincere and effective responsive on the part of sizable portions of Israel's disaffected classes. The advocates of this standpoint also argue that it may even be possible before too long to establish contact with Jewish groups in Israel and win them over to the liberation movement, thus establishing contact with Jewish groups in Israel and win them over to the liberation movement, thus establishing the cornerstones of an Arab-Jewish alliance. They see as inevitable the moral isolation and psychological disintergration of Zionism which in turn, will bring about the conditions for settlement and peace.

These ideas have driven both Fateh and the Popular Front to abandon the concepts of the "bi-national state" and the multi-confessional society (after the Lebanese model), and to seek consensus on a basic proinple to guide the search for an over all, generally acceptable Palestinian solution.

THERE IS NO "LESSER OF TWO EVILS

over. Carter's term as President has been a disaster for the Afro-American community. In particular he has refused to enforce the present laws regarding equal employment and affirmative action. As one columnist put it "The selling of Carter has truly become a nightmare for black Democrats." As a response to the disillusionment some black leaders have suggested that black voters seriously consider voting for Reagan. But the people know where Reagan stands; like Carter he will "court" the black vote one minute and stick-it to the black community the next. After all what has Ronald Reagan ever done for the working people and the minorities of this country? Given these problems it is no suprise that no major black or civil rights organization has endorsed a major candidate. Given the conditions which exist the attempt to woo the black vote is proving fruitless: it is clear, blacks and many others will stay away from the polls in November, not because they are apathetic,but because the only viable choices presented to them come from the pro-big business politicians. History has produced an unyielding truth: big business politicians, like Carter, Reagan and Anderson, put profits before people. When the choice is between creating beneficial conditions for the corporations or serving the needs of the people they invariably choose the former. It is in this context that the "lesser of two evils" argument which the Carter people use to prop up their candidate cannot be taken seriously. Because Carter has done little for the Afro-American community this lesser of two evil theory is being diluted. The choice is more and more being presented as between a "known" versus an "unknown" evil. Nevertheless, this dilution will not wash well with black voters this time around.

The nineteen eighties will only leave one option for black people and other minorities as well as the working class as a whole: political independence. Already this year there has been a new wave of activity around the establishment of a Third Party which really represents the people. As conceived by such groups as the International Association of Machinists, rank-and-file members of the United Auto Workers, the Trade Unionists for Action and Democracy , segments of the Democratic Party, several members of the Congressional Black Caucus, the Communist Party-U.S.A. and many other pro-people, anti-monopoly groupings, such a Third Party would be an anti-racist, pro-labor, pro-peace, anti-monopoly party which would unite the Labor Movement, Women's Movenent, Seniors Movement, Student Movement, and other movements of the people. No longer can we fall for the crumbs promised by the pro-big business politicians whose sole purpose in political life is to serve the needs of the corporations at the expense of the people. We need to "Put People Before Profits" and assert our political independence in order to improve the quality of life for the mass of people in this country, Black, Hispanic, native american, asian pacific, and white

The Third World Women's Task Force will be having a pot-luck dinner on Thursday, October 2, 1980 from 6:30-9:00p.m. All women of color and members of the Third World community are cordially invited. The dinner will be at Yvonnes's Place on the main level of New Africa House.

The pot-luck will give us a chance to meet one another and discuss events for the coming year. Third World women, children and men are invited to attend and childcare will be provided for those who need it. Call Aquila Ayana at 545-0883, the Third World Women's Advocate for more information.

The Third World Women's Task Force is a community based group composed of mothers, housewives, students and workers (both men and women) who are concerned with combatting the various forms of oppression the Third World community has been subjected to. We believe that the emancipation of women is a necessary part of the struggle for social change and that the liberation of women should be an integral part of the revolutionary ideology of all oppressed people. Our struggle within the revolution. While our primary focus is on women related issues and the mobilization of women to play a full role in the liberation struggle, we do realize that for true social change we must work as a unified whole-women, men and children together. That is, the liberation of women becomes a reality only when taken up by women themselves; but at the same time, it is only one facet of the total revolution and not isolated from it. Therefore, we welcome support and participation of our men and children in the activities of the group.

The Third World Women's Task Force believes in direct action and we have spent the last year putting pressure on the University of Massachusetts and the Pioneer Valley officials in order to move them to take steps to end the continuing violence against Third World people. Some of our proposed objectives for the coming year are:

1.To organize, and promote the pursuit of justice in the Seta Rampersad case.

2.To organize, promote and support educational seminars and other events.

3.To develop outreach activities which will foster the creation of linkages with other Third World communities and organizations, particularly in the Pioneer Valley.

4.To enable women to develop organizational, leadership and decision-making skills.

We would like to invite anyone interested in becoming a member of the Third World Women's Task Force to attend the open house pot-luck supper on Thursday, October 2,1980 at 6:30pm in the New Africa House. Bring your favorite dish and come share your ideas, concerns and views with us.

Iraq and Iran verge on war

Associated Press

Iraqi warplanes struck at more than a half-dozen Iranian air installations yesterday including Tehran's international airport, and Iran claimed success in retaliatory raids on two Iraqi air bases. Iraqi state radio said three weeks of hostilities over a vital Persian Gulf water route had "escalated into a full-scale war."

Iran and Iraq have sparred along their borders for months, but the fighting burgeoned last week after Iraq canceled a 1975 treaty.

Iraq said its warplanes hit 11 airstrips and it lost two Sovietmade MiG jets. A top Iranian military official said "several" air bases were attacked, and an Iranian revolutionary guard commander said six MiGs raided seven installations.

Iran's American-made fighters struck back with bombing raids on Iraq's Waset Province 100 miles east of Baghdad and on Basra, Iraq's southernmost port, according to communiques from Iran and Iraq.

Thick smoke rose over Tehran's Mehrabad Airport yesterday and the thunder of the midday attack rocked the capital. Citizens were told to remain calm and ignore all but official reports of the fighting. The country was under blackout orders to guard against night air raids, according to Tehran Radio.

Iran declared its coastal waters a war zone and said it would not allow any merchant ship to carry cargo to Iraqi ports, according to Tehran Radio. The report prescribed a shipping route and said it would not be responsible for those who violated it.

Iraqi media carried unconfirmed reports that Iranian artillery fired on five foreign cargo ships and its gunboats approached two others Sunday and yesterday in the Shatt alArab waterway, the jointly claimed route that is the centerpiece in the escalating border dispute.

The treaty Iraq broke ended the late Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi's support of a Kurdish rebellion in northern Iraq and in return put the last 60 miles of the boundary between the two countries down the middle of Shatt al-Arab waterway.

Iraq said it was resuming sovereignty over the eastern half of the estuary, which is formed by the union of the Tigris and Euphrates Rivers, and is the exit to the Persian Gulf for Iraq's chief port — Basrah — and Iran's Khorramshahr and Abadan.

In a statement issued in Baghdad and signed by President Saddam Hussein, Iraq accused Iran of escalating the hostilities to the level of "full-scale war" and said Iraqi forces were sent on "deterrent" raids.

A man in Ankara, Turkey, identifying himself as an Iraqi Embassy press attache confirmed a Turkish news agency report that his country had declared war on Iran, but Iraq's ambassador in London said war was not declared. "I certainly would have been told if such a decision had been taken," said Hisham Ibrahim al-Shawi.

Slow talks and unmet demands spark strike

By STEPHEN MORAN

Sixty non-professional staff workers of the Amherst Nursing Home walked off their jobs yesterday frustrated with the slow pace of contract negotiations and with management's continued refusal to allow a union shop.

The workers, without a contract since May 8, formed a picket line at 6 a.m. in the parking lot of the nursing home.

An afternoon rally is planned at 4 p.m. on Friday at the picket site.

Nursing home owner, Betty Kravitz, who said she hoped for an eleventh hour settlement, last night claimed that patient care could not be adversely affected by the walkout.

"The patient care will remain the same during a strike as it would without one," she said.

Stating that "no one wants a strike," she defended her retention of her chief negotiator, Jay Presser of the Springfield law firm Skoler, Abbott and Hayes. Presser has been accused of provoking a strike by Richard Sanders, union organizer at the nursing home.

Calling the issue of open or closed union shops the primary stumbling block in negotiations, Presser said, "each employee has the right to decide for themselves whether they want a union shop."

Although the staff workers must make a unilateral decision whether to ask for union representation, Presser said the issue of an open or closed shop is "a mandatory subject of bargaining.

Linda Edwards, union negotiator, said "After all we've worked for, it would be stupid to give into management's demand" for an open shop.

"You wouldn't have bargaining power in two years," she continued. "We'd make a few gains this year and it would be all used out in two years," she said.

A strike fund has been started and the union has promised to lend monetary support, said Sanders. He said community contributions would be sought to supplement the strike fund.

Gordon Liddy to speak at FAC

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students will hear one man's version of the Watergate scandal at 8 p.m. tonight when G. Gordon Liddy is scheduled to speak in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

Liddy, an aide to former President Richard M. Nixon, is credited with plotting the infamous break-in at the Watergate Hotel and the break-ins at the offices of writer Daniel Elsberg and Elsberg's psychiatrist.

Liddy was sentenced to 20 years in prison for his crimes but was pardoned by President Jimmy Carter after serving just 52 months. Since that time, Liddy has written his autobiography, WILL, and appeared on television talk shows and at speaking engagements. Liddy's appearance here is the first of a nationwide 50 college tour.

Doors to the Fine Arts Center are scheduled to open at 7 p.m. Admission is free to all UMass students, staff and faculty and University identification is required. The speech will also be broadcast live on WMUA (91.1 FM) and videotaped by WSYL-TV, Channel 2, in Sylvan.

Howard Goldman, chairperson of the Distinguished Visitors Program, the sponsors of the event, said Liddy is scheduled to answer questions from the audience for at least an hour following his speech. Several microphones will be located throughout the audience to enable people to ask questions, Goldman said.

To balance Liddy's appearance, Goldman said DVP is scheduled to bring Daniel Ellsberg to the Student Union Ballroom at 8 p.m. on October 7. Ellsberg's appearance also will be free.

In addition, DVP is presenting actor James Whitmore, best known for his portrayal of President Harry S. Truman, on October 16 in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. Because of Whitmore's fee for appearing, tickets are expected to be sold to students for $1 or $2, Goldman said.

Pres. debate spawns mixed stances, ideas from area experts

By JANE DeVIRGILIO
Collegian Staff

Republican presidential candidate Ronald Reagan and Independent candidate John B. Anderson disagreed on virtually every topic in their first presidential debate held Sunday night in Baltimore.

And a group of Five College professors surveyed yesterday on their reactions to that debate followed suit. Their opinions ranged from attentive interest in future debates to one who chose not to watch at all.

University of Massachusetts political science professor Kenneth Dolbeare said he didn't watch the debates because he considers them "not important."

Dolbeare, who teaches a course titled "American Political Thought" this semester, said he supports Citizen's Party candidate Barry Commoner because the "three other major candidates all have essentially the same stand on most major issues."

"I think both candidates got what they wanted out of the debates," said Jerome M. Mileur, a political science professor who is teaching a course on political parties and elections this semester. "Anderson appeared credible and Reagan didn't make any gaffs," he said.

Mileur termed President Carter's choice not to debate as a "tactically smart move" that "may hurt him some but I suspect not very much. Anderson positioned himself politically on the left separate from Reagan while Reagan positioned himself on the right," he said. "That leaves Carter in a good position to come right into the middle."

Mileur said the debate's lack of discussion on foreign policy "has now left Carter with a major card to play. Those who agreed to debate also did so for tactical reasons. I'm afraid it has nothing to do with democratic ideals. They will do what is best to get them elected," he said.

Henry Steele Commager, Professor Emeritus of history at Amherst College, said he believes Carter's refusal to debate will hurt him in the long run. "He does have a genius for doing the wrong thing," said Commager.

Commager, who was quoted at length on his concept of internationalism by Anderson in his closing remarks at the debate, said he hoped Anderson was not appealing to an

Muskie offers no apology

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Calling for prompt release of the American hostages, Secretary of State Edmund S. Muskie offered respect but no apology yesterday to Iran, saying its own security and Persian Gulf stability depend on a settlement.

"We are prepared to do our part in resolving fairly the issues between us," Muskie said in a speech to the U.N. General Assembly. He said Iran could end its isolation "from those nations that live in accordance with international law" and have world sanctions ended by freeing the 52 Americans held 10 1/2 months.

While promising not to intervene in Iranian affairs, he did not recant past U.S. support for the late pro-U.S. Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi. And yet, Muskie emphasized that the Carter administration recognizes the reality of the Iranian revolution that deposed the ruler.

Muskie called on the General Assembly to support the hostages' immediate release and to adopt effective measures to protect diplomats everywhere from terrorism. However, he made no specific proposal.

U.S. officials said they still considered the commission of inquiry appointed by U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim last February but subsequently rebuffed in Tehran an effective diplomatic channel to Iranian authorities.

Air Force removes warhead

DAMASCUS, Ark. (AP) — As two helicopters hovered overhead, a nuclear warhead was apparently loaded onto a flatbed truck inside two canisters labeled "Do Not Drop" and removed from a devastated Titan II missile silo site yesterday to Little Rock Air Force Base.

As usual, the Air Force refused even to acknowledge that a nuclear warhead had been involved in the fuel explosion at the silo Friday.

Two large canisters — one blue, the other silver and green and each labeled "Do Not Drop" — were anchored by chains to the bed of a flatbed tractor-trailer in the convoy of eight military vehicles. Two helicopters accompanied the procession.

Nuke plant's future on ballot

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP) — The future of Maine's only nuclear power plant hung in the balance yesterday as voters prepared to cast ballots in a referendum that seeks to shut down Maine Yankee and outlaw nuclear power in the state.

Gov. Joseph E. Brennan and referendum leader Ray Shadis held 11th-hour news conferences, Brennan asserting that Maine's economic development requires the power generated by Maine Yankee.

Shadis later looked over Brennan's statement and said he was surprised it was not signed by E.W. Thurlow, president of Central Maine Power Co. CMP owns 38 percent of Maine Yankee.

"I'm surprised to see this on the governor's stationery rather than CMP stationery," Shadis said.

Tampon is linked to disease; P&G recalls 'Rely' product

CINCINNATI— Procter & Gamble Co. said yesterday it was recalling its Rely tampon, which has been cited by the federal government as linked to toxic shock syndrome.

The company yesterday asked retailers to remove Rely from store shelves and offered refunds to users who have the unused product on hand. P & G said Rely sales amount to less than 1 percent of the company's total revenue.

Toxic shock syndrome is a recently discovered bacterial infection related to tampon use. The national Center for Disease Control in Atlanta has received reports of 299 cases since January. The illness has caused 25 fatalities since 1975, including the July 27 death of Merilyn Farnsworth, 33 of Shrewsbury, Mass.

P & G Chairman Edward Harness said the suspension of sales of Rely removes the product and the company from any controversy surrounding the disease.

"This is being done despite the fact that we know of no defect in the Rely tampon and despite evidence that the withdrawal of Rely will not elimiate the occurrence of TSS even if Rely's use is completely discontinued," Harness said in a statement.

The CDC reported last week that women who use the Rely brand of tampon run greater risk of the disease than women who use other brands. But P & G said the illness was identified in Canada, where Rely has never been marketed, and in parts of this country before Rely was introduced in those areas.

The disease occurs mostly in women 30 and younger, during or just after their menstrual period. It is characterized by sudden onset of high fever, vomiting, diarrhea and rapid drop in blood pressure often resulting in shock and a sunburnlike rash.

The link between the diease and tampons was found earlier this year after studies in Minnesota and Wisconsin.

P & G said Rely and all its component parts were tested for safety before it was marketed.

Court decision is reversed; Kids unaffected by homosexuality

BOSTON (AP) — Declaring that kids won't necessarily be adversely affected by a homsexual mother, the State Supreme Court yesterday reversed a probate judge who refused to return custody of children to a lesbian parent.

The justices said that Judge Sanford Keedy's finding "that a lesbian household would adversely affect the children" was without basis.

The court noted that two psychologists held "homosexuality per se is irrelevant to parenting ability" and added that this "is not a matter about which the judge could take judicial notice."

Alexandra Kaplan, psychology professor at the University of Massachusetts, testified, "There is no evidence at all that sexual preference of adults has any detrimental impact on children...Many other issues influence child rearing. Sexual preference per se is typically not one of them."

She said this would not influence a child to become homosexual: "Most children raised in a homosexual situation become heterosexual as adults...There is no evidence that children who are raised with a loving couple of the same sex are any more disturbed, unhealthy, maladjusted than children raised with a loving couple of mixed sex."

Keedy ruled last December that Brenda A. Bezio, 26, formerly of Greenfield — who has resumed her maiden name of Brenda King and had been living in Vermont with a teacher — should not regain custody of her two daughters, 7 and 5. She would, however, retain visiting rights.

Keedy's ruling favored Magdalena Patenaude of Greenfield. He cited Mrs. Bezio's past "unwillingnss or inability" to assume the responsibility and noted that she three times agreed to Ms. Patenaude as guardian for the children.

The high court disagreed and sent the case back to Keedy for review under the court's guidelines, which apparently rule out any consideration of homosexuality.

Mrs. Bezio, the records indicate, had medical and financial problems and was divorced from James Bezio, who had been in the Army, in North Carolina.

Ms. Patenaude befriended the young mother and, for a time, provided a home for her after she married and for the children on different occasions, according to the decision.

The Titan II missile left its mark in Damascus, Ark. Clean-up of the site began yesterday. (AP Laserphoto)

Charter lacked

By RUTH HAGBERG
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts literary magazine, The Spectrum, has recently found that it has no constitution. This would be of no consequence except that the group needs one if it wants to receive funds as a Recognized Student Organization.

The RSO has been looking into all the organizations and their constitutions. In the process, it has been discovered that Spectrum had not submitted a constitution since it began publication in 1967.

A constitution is supposed to be submitted to the Student Senate every three years, according to spokespeople at last night's meeting. The old constitution was lacking a few things including an impeachment procedure. Student Attorney General Dana Collier also discovered that no records of minutes were kept on file.

Spectrum magazine must now start from scratch. A meeting to form the new staff and to write up the constitution will be held on Monday, Sept. 29 at 7 p.m. An entire new staff must be recruited, according to former staff members.

The former Spectrum staff members appointed Melodie Wertlet to be a liason between the RSO and those writing up the constitution.

Refunds coming

By J. ADAM BAILEY

University of Massachusetts students will get about $183,500 in room and board refunds as a result of the long weekend caused by the water shortage next week, an announcement by UMass Bursar Robert R. Mishol said.

"Most students will be sent a refund check for the follow ing credits: Rent: $8.80, Board: 10 meal plan-$5.29; 14 meal plan-$8.52; 19 meal plan-$9.16," Mishol said.

"Approximately $100,000 will be paid from UMass Hous ing Administration funds directly out of the dormitory operating budget," James Wood a Housing Administration spokesperson said. Housing doesn't know how this expenditure will affect other programs as maintenance and repair, he said.

The rest of the funds will come from Food Services to pay for meal plan refunds, Director of Food Services Marie Cappadona said.

The refund will not be paid to students in Prince House in the Southwest Residential Area because that was the only dormitory to remain officially open during the weekend.

Students who stayed in other dormitories during the weekend may also get refunds, Mishol said. Those refunds will be distributed on a house by house basis, he said.

The refund does not include the bus fare many students had to pay, Mishol said.

"The last I heard, that wasn't going to be done," Assistant to the Director of Financial Affairs Cris Sheed said, referring to bus fare rebates.

Spending eyed

By CHUCK KILFOYLE

Campus lighting, Student Activities Trust Fund funding and administrative problems were the topics of a meeting between Dean of Students William F. Field and para-legal interns from the Legal Service Office yesterday.

The Student Senate and University administrators are bickering about which group should administer the funds.

"Expenditure of the funds is in the hands of the Board of Regents," said Field. "The SATF is an intricate thing on both sides, the Senate can't collect the money by itself and we can't spend it by ourselves.

"If the Senate and administrators can't agree on what to do with the funds then the students end up getting ripped off," he said.

Field also explained the decision making process among the Administrators and the Chancellor. "Before the Chancellor can act on something he must confer with his Vice Chancellors," said Field. Using the additional lighting issue as an example Field said the controversy over better lighting on campus was not something the administration tried to drag out, Chancellor Koffler only had a certain amount of money to work with.

Field pointed out there was a disagreement between some of the Vice-Chancellors.

"I believe Vice-Chancellor Beatty was against it," Field said.

Field said the Chancellor had to compromise and divide the money between better lighting and other budget items.

Field also said the University is committed to improving the security of the campus by adding more lights and emergency telephones within the next three years.

"Dutch" Kellog watches the Amherst Towing Service attack another victim yesterday in Lot 63. Dutch says, "I'm just doing my job: cleaning up the University, just like a janitor." He compares his job with playing basketball, "It's exciting, and interesting to score."' This Impala was Dutch's fifteenth tow when this picture was taken at noon. He doesn't like to waste tickets. "Some guards give over a hundred a day. I just give twenty-five to thirty on a good day." This Impala owner will pay $28 for not having a parking sticker. If removed from a Tow Zone, the fine is $33. "The lucky ones who catch the tow-truck only have to pay a $10 Drop Tow fine," adds Dutch. "You gamble when you park in restricted zones," said Dutch. "I only have to get lucky once, and you lose!" Four men murdered in Boston bowling alley while robbers make off with $10,000

BOSTON (AP) — Two janitors and two managers of a bowling alley were lined up in a back room, bound and executed by safe crackers who invaded the building minutes before it was to open yesterday, police said.

All had been shot in the back of the head when a policeman discovered them in a repair shop filled with pin-setting equipment. The hands of three of the men were bound behind their backs with handcuffs; one of them was restrained with a belt.

The names of the victims were not immediately released by police.

The holdup men cleaned out the safe and fled, apparently in a stolen car, police said. They declined to say how much money was taken, although unofficial reports put the total at $10,000.

The killings occurred at Sammy White's Brighton Bowl, a combination bowling alley and cocktail lounge on Soldiers Field Road in the city's Brighton neighborhood.

Police Commissioner Joseph Jordan said the four men reported for work at 6:30 a.m., and ordinarily left the front door unlocked after they arrived.

"We know the employees came in before the robbers came in," Jordan said. "There was evidence they (the workers) had been on the premises for an hour before the robbers and murderers came in."

Jordan said the four workers apparently were rounded up as they worked in separate parts of the bowling alley, then herded into the back room and killed between 7:45 and 8 a.m.

The business would have opened at 8 a.m., and Jordan said the safe crackers were not in the large, cinderblock building for more than 25 minutes.

Another employee became suspicious when he arrived for work and could not find any of his coworkers. He called the Metropolitan District Commission police, and an officer discovered the bodies at 8:10.

"There is no evidence of a breaking and entering here," said Newman Flanagan, the Suffolk County district attorney.

A member of Boston's medical examiner's staff pushes a stretcher carrying one of the four bodies found dead in a bowling alley in Brighton.

Firm busts unions

By STEPHEN MORAN
Collegian Staff

Area labor leaders have become increasingly vocal over what they perceive to be the nagging presence of the Springfield law firm of Skoler, Abbott and Hayes in area contract negotiations.

Student Government Association co-president Richard LaVoice, in remarks before the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees, said it had become of great concern to him that students perceived the firm as a "union busting outfit." The firm is currently the administration's chief negotiator in three of the four ongoing campus union contracts.

One of these unions, the University Staff Association, has twice held informational picketing sessions in front of the Whitmore Administration building. Penny Schwartz, USA negotiator, claimed that the main reason for the picket line was to inform the public of the unwillingness of Skoler, Abbott and Hayes to budge on any substantive issues.

The Amherst Nursing Home, whose management is represented in negotiations by the firm, goes on strike today. Both negotiators attribute this action to disagreement over whether the union shop should be opened or closed.

Richard Sanders, union organizer for the nursing home strikers, denounced the administration's' negotiations. Sanders claims Skoler, Abbott and Hayes has intentionally orchestrated the strike at the nursing home by refusing to grant labor's request for a closed shop. He claims the nursing home strike will be "just another example" of the results of a typical SAH negotiation. He points to a list of other companies that have opted to strike rather than proceed with negotiations as usual. Wesco and Milton Bradlee, he claims, are among the list of area companies that have chosen this route.

Jay Presser, chief management negotiator for the nursing home, denies the charge that Skoler, Abbott and Hayes is in any way trying to stall negotiations. He claims that the adversary role, inherent in contract negotiations, demands a firm stand on negotiation issues. He blames the various unions with a number of stall tactics.

Charge and countercharge have been issued by both management and the unions, but Presser claims that such charges will have no effect in speeding negotiations.

A resolution was issued at the last student Senate meeting to invite both labor and management to an upcoming session in which they can present their cases on the nursing home negotiations.

Agent Orange in more trouble

WASHINGTON (AP) — A veterans' organization gave the government statistical evidence yesterday suggesting that GIs exposed to Agent Orange in Vietnam are more likely than other veterans to contract liver diseases or have children with birth defects.

The data, based on a questionnaire filled in by 1,313 veterans, is the first statistical evidence to link the herbicide in Vietnam to some of the diseases complained about by veterans, according to Citizen Soldier, a non-profit veterans' advocacy group headquartered in New York City.

Despite the veterans' complaints, the Veterans Administration says no evidence exists linking the herbicide with any ailment other than chloracne, a severe skin disorder. The VA has refused to honor disability payment claims for diseases other than chloracne.

That view came under attack at the first public meeting ever held by a cross-government task force created last year to air the issue. The task force is formally known as the Interagency Work Group to Study the Possible Long-Term Effects of Phenoxy Herbicides and Contaminants.

Statistician James Dwyer of the State University of New York at Stony Brook, testifying on behalf of Citizen Soldier, presented his analysis of data collected from 1,313 questionnaires.

He said young veterans who reported recurrent acne after returning home from Vietnam were 80 percent more likely than others to have sired children with birth defects and nearly three times more likely than others to have suffered liver diseases.

Dwyer cautioned that his analysis was preliminary and untested, but he said he could find no other reason why veterans with recurrent acne should have such a high incidence of those difficulties.

He said he found no strong relationship between acne and kidney diseases and cancers — two other diseases often attributed by veterans to exposure to Agent Orange. But he noted that those diseases take longer to develop.

Sturdier new fence to replace wooden one surrounding library

By HANNAH HOSOM
Collegian Correspondent

The red, wood fence which now surrounds the University Library is being replaced by a sturdier chain-link fence, according to Physical Plant Director George Norton.

Norton said the fence, the construction of which is being financed by a 2.5 million outlay from the state to pay for library maintenance, will save money now being spent on vandalism repairs. This outlay is supplemented by interest from the Student Activities Trust Fund. The fence will also keep students out of the unsafe area, said Norton.

"The new fence, will save money now being spent on vandalism repairs."

The fence which encloses only part of the library's patio, leaves benches which are now off-limits free for student use, Norton said.

The fence will be maintained until an architectural firm, still to be chosen by the state Bureau of Building Construction, is able to redesign the library. Use can be made of the fence then by moving it to other parts of campus, said Physical Plant engineer Joe Wayne.

Rich Brodeurs, son of the owner of the Brodeurs Fence Company of Springfield, connects the bottom support wire on the new chain link fence surrounding the library. The fence is only temporary. "It will be torn down in four years when the library is fixed," said Brodeurs. (Staff photo by Scott Burke)

Human rights need attention

By JANE PUSKAS
Collegian Correspondent

The need to bring the issue of human rights to a more personal level on campus sparked the formation of a new student action group called the Campus Network System.

The goal of the Campus Network System is to "increase the awareness and the violations of human rights and to spark the group to focus on personal aspects of prisoners," said Mary Mills, campus coordinator of the group.

The Campus Network System is part of the Amnesty International Organization, a world-wide human rights group that deals with releases of what they call "prisoners of conscience."

The System began as an activity of the Newman Center. The reason for the expan sion last spring into an RSO group, Mills said, was the need to appeal to more people.

In their efforts to educate students, the System will have a table in the Campus Center on a weekly basis. The group also plans to have various speakers come to campus. Topics include human rights in Guatemala, Peru, the plight of the native American, and the Soviet dissident movement in the U.S.

An introductory meeting will be held on Wednesday, Sept. 24 in room 803 in the Campus Center.

Mural brings women's history to the public eye

By LAURIE ORTYL
Collegian Correspondent

It was two and one half years ago in Northampton when artist Shelly Shicoff first appealed to the Valley Women Artist's Guild for volunteers interested in pursuing the idea of public art work in the area.

"I wanted to focus on the problem of viewing art in a museum where only the finished product is seen," Shicoff said.

With the help of volunteers, and four other woman artists who formed with Shicoff the Hestia Art Collective, the "finished product" is a mural that has transformed a bare, brick side of a building in Northampton into a vibrant, colorful depiction of women's history.

The fifty-foot long mural, which took three months to complete, is painted on the side of the New England Telephone Company building on Masonic Street, across from the town's fire station.

The mural contains images of women in such work as health care and agriculture, local cites including Smith College and Look Park, and representations of women's political issues such as the Equal Rights Amendment and voting privileges.

Collective member Wednesday Sorokin said one idea behind the mural was "to make women's history visible in a concrete way."

That "concrete" manifestation was the result of much research on women's history and a series of educational public forums funded by a Massachusetts Foundation for the Humanities and Public Policies grant.

The forums included such topics as "Why Public Art?," "Women's Work History," and "Women and Education" and three University of Massachusetts faculty members, Joyce Berkman, assistant professor of history; Ann Ferguson, associate professor of philosophy; and Anne Mochon, assistant professor of art were included in the list of speakers.

After a year of research, the guild designed and revised the scaled plans during February and continued through May. The priming began in early July and dedication ceremonies were held on August 28.

Alexander Elliot, an art critic who spoke at the dedication, recently said of the mural, "I value this as a contribution to the community not only for its aesthetic value but for its mingling of joy for the eyes and food for thought."

The five artists, inlcuding Linda Bond, Mariah Fee, Susan Pontious, Shicoff and Sorokin, dedicated the mural to the "women, men, and children of Northampton."

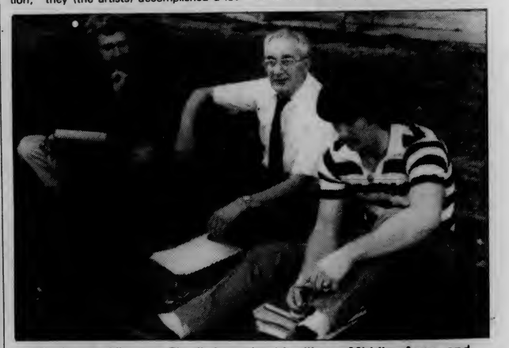
Berkman said while the mural is "a rather traditional, conventional mode of presentation," they (the artists) accomplished a lot within their constraints," such as the limitations to portray nudity or violence, she said.

Berkman also said she sees "enormous potential in the mural for social studies curriculum in the public school system." As for the college student, she sees the mural as an example of "how arts can be used to enhance our perspective of the past."

Reflecting back on the project, Shicoff is pleased with the result of her aspiration for visible public art. "The community could see the progression of the mural," she said "and we demystified the process of making it."

The work of the guild will not stop here, however. They are awaiting the final step of the project: the publication of a booklet detailing their research. Compiled by all five members, the booklet was written by Susan Pontious, one of the artists.

Since the completion of the mural, four of the five artists are leaving the area for other job opportunities. Shicoff has been honored with the Prix de Rome, an American national laud, and is now studying art at the American Academy in Rome.



Professor Vincent Elardi brought his "Late Middle Ages and Renaissance" honors class outdoors yesterday after he "fell asleep lecturing, never mind the kids listening. Herter Hall is a menace to health in hot weather," Elardi complained. (Staff photo by Scott Burke)

Union busting

By a vote of 41 to 4, employees at the Amherst Nursing Home decided to go on strike, as of today, after four months of frustrating and fruitless contract negotiations. (See related story p. 3)

The three main demands of the workers are: a union shop (one that all employees must join, therefore insuring a strong union to guard concessions won by the workers), a pay raise totaling $1.45 per hour over the next two years and that the contract be retroactive to May 8, the day the last contract expired.

Due to the low wages (average pay is $3.26/hour) and nature of the work there is an extremely high employee turn-over rate, (60 percent of the non-professional staff has changed since May) which, say the workers, affects the quality of care the residents receive.

Decent wages ($4.55 by 1982 can hardly be called exorbitant) and improved benefits, like health care, will encourage workers to stay on longer, become better trained and more farniliar with the residents, thus improving the quality of care offered by the Home.

The owners of the Amherst Nursing Home have responded to the workers' demands by hiring (at $100 an hour) the law firm of Skoler, Abbott and Hayes to represent them in negotiations.

Skoler, Abbott and Hayes are no ordinary law firm but, rather, one that specializes in "labor relations"; what is commonly known as union busting.

Union busting is a practice in which management hires a consultant or law firm—not to negotiate a fair settlement, but to disrupt the union organizing process so the workers are left without representation.

Skoler, Abbott and Hayes have been involved in many bitter labor disputes and strikes all over Western Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Connecticut.

Our own university employs Skoler, Abbott and Hayes to represent them in contract negotiations. Perhaps this is why the clerical workers on campus have been unable to negotiate a contract since May. It certainly fits the pattern of negotiations that mark a union-busting attempt: prolonged negotiations over reasonable union demands in order to either force a strike, or to wring every possible concession from the workers. Is this grand liberal institution paying Skoler, Abbott and Hayes a $100 dollars an hour of hard earned tax payers money for a service as anti-democratic as union-busting?

And anti-democratic it is. A fundamental precept for workers in a democratic society is that they be allowed to organize for promoting and protecting their common interests, against owners and management who, by nature, are fundamentally opposed to those interests (wages vs. profits).

When a union is broken it affects the entire community because unorganized workers invariably means lower wages and thus a lower standard of living in the community.

Over the summer many Americans and their politicians were caught up by the "courageous" and "heroic" efforts of the Polish workers for the right to free unions and higher wages. Here in Amherst a comparable situation exists where workers are struggling for union representation and higher pay. We can and should support these women in their struggle Let us as individuals and as a community resolve not to allow the owners of the Amherst Nursing Home to use UMass students or employment agencies as a pool for scab labor. And let our administration know we do not care to have public funds used to harass, disrupt, or intimidate the workers on our campus.

Elect student Attorney General

To the Editor,

The recent appointment of Dana Collier to the position of attorney general is a blatant example of abuse of political power.

The student body was virtually ignored in the decision making process that led to the appointment of Dana Collier. The post of attorney general primarily effects the regulatory standards under which the university residents must live. The person in charge of the judicial system is responsible to the students, yet no popular input was allowed in deciding who would be the attorney general. This is a flagrant violation of the students' political rights, and it cannot be tolerated.

Ironically the acceptance statement made by Collier exemplifies what I am trying to say. Quote: "My purpose is to stimulate more student activity." Truly, it is a noble statement, in reality it is a scam. How can she honestly talk about student participation when her appointment included none? How can she expect the students to have the incentive to participate when they have been alienated from the selection of attorney general.

To allow this abuse and manipulation to continue would be an admission to student apathy. Let's give the power back to the students, demand an open election for the position of attorney general. Let the student government know we will no longer tolerate undemocratic politics at this university.

Defense of Pike poster negligent

To the Editor:

Does the fact that Pike offers an escort service for University women justify the other fact that the fraternity's promotional gimmick blatantly shows a male with an overly obsequious looking female linked arm and arm with him, illustrating the "Meet the Challenge" subtitle? Isn't Pike really trying to express, via the design of the advertisement and the actual physical contrast of the two people there, how they truly feel about women and their ability to be responsible for themselves?

I WANT YOUR PUBLIC RELATIONS FIRM TO TELL MY WORKERS THAT I CAN'T AFFORD A UNION.
COST YA 50 GRAND.
MONEY IS NO OBJECT.
New Unity/LNS

To deny that this poster connotes a not only false but also cruel stereotype of women is negligent and absolutely insensitive to half of the campus population. The oppressive symbolism used in this medium to gain greater enrollment in groups that are supposedly based on humanitarian concerns has got to stop. In the end, one only wonders what sort of "men" are going to be attracted to this sign, and to what level their human consciousness has disintegrated.

Parachute club 'goes for it': safely

To the Editor:

David Cole's column of 17 September has convinced me of the need for theatrics in journalism. His unsubstantiated attack on the University Parachute Club and one man's misfortune, a broken ankle, as an example of Western decline in the "go for it" society as presented by; the media in its advertising, and even grandmothers' bedside stories, does indeed reveal a system that "has holes," which Mr. Cole has widened and dug deeper.

Safety, fun and introducing, as inexpensively as possible, to the five college community the "sport" of sky diving has been the club's goal for the past 21 years. The jumps on Haigus Mall, between Whitmore and the School of Business Administration, is a way we have found to say to the University public, "Here we are." We were in no way trying to solicit funds, we were attempting to gather new membership in an organization that the members believe is safe, fun and even a rewarding activity.

Non-profit and not funded by the RSO, the student run Parachute Club offers an alternative to the commercially run centers. Just as skiing, horseback riding and skin diving, to mention a few, have the "gusto" connection— but to associate individual sport with economics is ridiculous. Many of the club members would have otherwise found costs prohibitive, for many are working and paying their way through this educational institution and happen to find reward, release, and at times inspiration in this realization of flight.

I found the comparison between his failing society and the peace and exhilaration of parachuting very disturbing.

Who's responsible for Greeks?

To the Editor:

Friday night, September 19, I attended an after hours party at Phi Sigma Kappa. On my way through the crowd I was approached by an extremely drunk male who grabbed me and would not release me. While I was being held, people proceeded to throw beers all over him and me. After I was able to release myself, people began yelling obscene things at me, and I was ordered to leave the party. The person who kicked me out was a fraternity brother.

I can not understand how this type of thing could have happened. I was not at that party for more than five minutes. It is my opinion that the fraternity is responsible for any incidents that take place at its parties. It is their duty to immediately control any such outbreaks. Not only did they allow this abuse to continue, but they also placed the blame on the victim.

I feel that the people who support these parties should be aware of the type of behavior that is all too common at fraternity parties. Heads of Residence and other university disciplinary officials are responsible should an outbreak like this occur in the dormitory. Who is responsible in the Greek system? Is anyone?

Fishing for merit

Skafish
Skafish [Illegal Records]

By ROBERT B. CARGILL
Collegian Staff

Named after their leader, 23-year-old singer and founder Jim Skafish, these people are about as weird sounding as their name, (pronounced Skā-fish), and bearing no similarity to Ska, the flourishing brand of punk-reggae making its move abroad.

In fact, there are probably more interesting points to ponder concerning this band's name than there are purposes for examining their form of pop music.

Skafish is New Wave for sure; bubbly and fun tunes of lust and anger along with drunken and dreary songs full of melancholic angst. There is catchy material here, but the inherent overload of hooks is not without the drudge. For the three good songs discovered herein, there are seven others of little-deserved merit.

"Take It Out On You" is by far the album's standout track, combining some excellent whining synthesizers by Javier Cruz with Jim Skafish's best "tell it like it is" vocals, along with a solid punk-bopping bass beat.

Two others, "Joan Fan Club" and "Obsessions Of You," have definite radio potential with the latter proving the group's most mainstream effort, possessing more than enough infectiousness to be released as a single.

As mentioned though, Skafish has plenty of bad moments, the most notorious of these being the Frankie Avalon-sounding "Guardian Angel" and the 10CC-ish "We'll See A Psychiatrist." These two cuts are prime examples of the album's failing; both are comedic satires on neurosis, poking fun at everyday fears and anxieties; yet both convey their message in a very ineffective, rather silly and trite manner.

And this silliness can be carried too far, as heard on "No Liberation Here," in which Jim Skafish drones, "rub my nose in doggies duty today/please embarrass me so I'll be ashamed."

Seriously folks, maybe he's already embarrassed himself enough!

Chick Corea's jazz scores high again
As a refreshing alternative to new wave

Chick Corea
Tap Step [Warner Bros.]

By CHIP NEALY and
ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

Chick Corea's latest effort, Tap Step, solidifies his position as one of the better jazz keyboardists around today and demonstrates his ability to fuse together many different styles of music.

With distinct keyboards and well-mixed back-up instruments such as trumpet, tenor and alto saxophones, many different drums and types of bass, Corea crosses the boundaries of several musical forms and brings them home to his distinct fusion style.

Perhaps disappointing, however, is the distinct lack of guitar present on the album. While virtually every instrument used takes the lead at one point or another, the lack of guitar is obvious. Corea's keyboards have always been superbly complemented by the fine guitar work of Al DiMeola, and his presence, or the presence of any other guitarist, is sorely missed.

What is refreshingly pleasant, however, is the fine bass work of Bunny Brunel, who plays a fretless bass throughout the album. And Brunel's competence with this difficult instrument is complimented on one cut, "Grandpa Blues," where he is joined by bassist Stanley Clarke on piccolo bass and, interestingly, voicebox.

"Grandpa Blues" is blues, finely mixed with jazz and fusion styles to present a somewhat light, humorous sound.

The very rythmic, foot-tapping music, combined with Clarke's strange "crying" through the voicebox, presents a pleasant tune, but seems to hold back, cutting loose only at the end, where it suddenly stops.

The title cut itself is one song that definitely reaches its potential. Corea's mood synthesizers take the lead, swapping of with fine sax and trumpet work, mixing in and around a superb rythym section. The song is up-beat and peppy and features some of the finest brass work on the album. "Tap Step" implies a marching tune, and the airy melody of the song is bound to set anyone in motion.

"The Embrace," the only song on the album to feature any straight vocals at all, sets forth a straight jazz/fusion sound, mixed with the hauntingly beautiful vocals of Gayle Moran. Only "Samba L.A.," the album's lead cut, features any other vocals, and the song employs a religious-like chanting solely around a reggae type beat.

Corea's music is, to say the least, complicated. Each song presents many different layers of sound and many different styles of music. His versatility is admirable and matched by very few in these days of varied musical forms. Corea's home is jazz and fusion, but he displays comfort with other forms as well. It almost seems as if he can do whatever he wants and do it well.

Undeniably, Chick Corea's Tap Step is a worthwhile investment. The talent is there, both in the type of music presented, the way it is written, and especially in how it is performed. And in these days of hard flat-out new wave, it's often nice to hear a precision artists like Corea. That is truly refreshing.

Concerts on the Edge of Town – Here's the latest juice on Bruce: Mr. Springsteen will hit the road Oct. 3, beginning with a show in East Lansing, Michigan. From there he will proceed west and work his way back to our neck of the woods by November. He is scheduled to do two shows at Madison Square Cabbagepatch and from there will go to Philadelphia, Providence, Hartford, Boston and back to the Apple for a wrap-up performance at the Palladium.

...In a related story, CBS Records tells me there will be a double album (due out the second or third week of November) titled, The River. It will sell for the list price of $15.98 and rumor has it it will be packaged like Fleetwood Mack's Tusks (the jackets-within-a-jacket design). I wonder what Mr. Blackwell will have to say about this fashion? Two mentioned cuts: "Independence Day" and "Point Blank," plus a title track...

• • • • •

Talking Heads are also in the process of putting together a tour. Stage West announced Friday they'll be stopping by with their "nine piece funk band" sometime in late November. They will also be releasing a new LP for the Xmas buying season, as will their lead singer. As reported this summer in Rolling Stone, David Byrne and the Heads' chief instigator, Brian Eno are working now on the former's solo album. That should be a hot one!..."If I Had a Wheelchair" – Peter, Paul and Mary, those persistent purists of folk/soft rock are doing a reunion tour again. You'd think they'd get sick of seeing each other. Anyway, they'll be in our vicinity, doing a gig at Boston's Hynes Auditorium Oct. 3. If they could surpass the nostalgia syndrome, and come up with some fresh material, this trio has the talent to make a real "comeback." Say a prayer!...

• • • • •

This Year's Wreckage – Elvis (the Costelloed One) has a new album out. It's called 'Takine Liberties (To Be Reviewed) and features 20 more fast numbers. After last year's Get Happy, which I thought took more than a few liberties, Elvis is gonna have to go beyond this formulaic rut of fast and catchy tunes if he's to keep his image intact. This one features the B-sides to his singles plus four new songs, one of which is called "Clean Money." And you can just bet he's planning on making some monetary gain whether clean or no...David Bowie's Scarry Monsters is out, and word has it it's less experimental and geared more toward the melodic, shorter material from the days of Ziggy and Hunky Dory (TBR)...Incidentally, today is the day Aladdin Sane makes his Broadway bow in "The Elephant Man." All good Bowians should take a little trip down to the Gotham City to check him out...

• • • • •

Two more obscure bands have releases coming out soon. Virgin Records' recording artists the Skids have an import due, titled Absolute Game. These guys have turned out two very innovative, melodic but controversial LPs so far – 1978's Scared to Dance, which was released in this country, and last year's Days of Europa, which wasn't. The latter has been done in three versions so far. Rumor has it the first one's jacket painting was considered "too Nazi" for Jem Imports to distribute here. The other two, with the redesigned jackets are different mixes, the most recent of which excludes one of the best tracks on the album – "The Olympian." If you hunt around you might still find some copies of the original second albu. But even if you can't, buy the remixed one. This is a great "hardly new but hardly hear of" progressive New Wave band...CBS Records' hottest new entity is the English band the Photos, who have been described as a "croos-between the Pretenders and Blondie"...

HI KIDS! LET ME TELL YOU MY STORY: FOR YEARS, I WANTED TO BE A FAMOUS CARTOONIST, BUT I GOT NO WHERE!
FINALLY, I HAD TO TAKE A JOB AS A SALES CLERK TO MAKE ENDS MEET!
I STILL TRIED TO SELL MY CARTOONS BUT NO ONE WAS BUYING!
BAH! these suck!
I WAS GOING CRAZY! I NEEDED AN OUTLET FOR MY INNER FEELINGS AND HAD NONE!
BUT LAST WEEK, I JOINED THIS CULT WHERE YOU SHAVE YOUR HEAD, EAT ORANGES, WEAR DARK GLASSES AND TRY TO MAKE YOUR SKIN VERY SMOOTH!! I FEEL MUCH BETTER NOW!

elite constituency with his remarks but "to the whole nation just as I was when I wrote those words he quoted a few weeks ago."

Mileur disagreed, however, saying that Anderson knows his constituency of "old, eastern establishment types who understand such a concept and he is ignoring those he needs most to appeal to.

Donald Robinson, a Smith College political science professor teaching a course this semester called "The American Presidency" said he thought the debate held "few surprises for those who have been following the campaign all along."

Robinson also said Anderson did not appeal to the voters of the middle class. "I think he lacked the common touch but he had the best answer of the night when he responded to the question of abortion."

"Reagan appeared stuck for an answer and he appeared a limited thinker, uncertain of any answers other than those he had been hammered on beforehand," he said.

ZooDisc sweeps field, wins weekend tourney

By JOEL ZUCKERMAN
Special to the Collegian

ZooDisc scored more than twice as many goals as all of their opponents combined, sweeping the first ultimate tournament of the season held at Hampshire College this past Saturday. The three victories upped their season record to six and one.

ZooDisc rolled over Holy Cross 15-7; embarrassed Union College 22-4; and, for the third time this season, defeated the efending Western New England champions, Hampshire College, 21-16.

During the course of the afternoon fifth year player Reggie Mimms pulled down 10 touchdown passes and threw 2 more. Not an exceptional afternoon by Mimm's standards except that he has a fractured wrist, and was wearing an elbow-to-wrist cast on his throwing arm!

Senior Larry Denaro played the Holy Cross Crusaders with an intensity unequalled by any other member of the Zoo squad. In the final seconds of the first half, he blocked a pass that would have almost certainly resulted in a Holy Cross score. Later, he layed it out in the endzone for Zoo Disc's first tally of the second half. Overall, Denaro had a hand in 12 of ZooDisc's 58 total goals.

Midway through the romp over Union College, the field became a testing ground for many of the ZooDisc rookies. Kevin Peterson responded with three touchdown catches, Larry Pritika came up with two TD throws, and Dave Ostreicher contributed one of each.

The ZooDisc defensive zone so effective in shutting down the Holy Cross and Union College offenses, was not quite so tenacious versus arch-rival Hampshire. It was solid performances from solid players that won this one. Tom "Headlock" Baylock, Jim "Jeremiah" Melody, Edgar "Allan Poe" David, and Bobby Barnicle, all proved instrumental in the ZooDisc victory.

Riding high, ZooDisc takes on neighboring Amherst College today for the first time this season. Gametime across from the Southwest Horseshoe, is 4 p.m. Tomorrow, ZooDisc hosts Hampshire College, same time, same place, and will be attempting to win their fourth game against Hampshire, in as many tries.

UM grad student takes over men's j.v. soccer

By SUE BRIDGMAN
Collegian Correspondent

The men's junior varsity soccer team is under a new coach this year, an easy-going guy but a tough competitor.

Joel Mascolo, a 1978 graduate of UMass was offered the position by varsity Coach Russ Kidd this past Spring, replacing former coach Ed Neimic, who has moved on to the business world.

Mascolo looks for a strong season from his players. "We're very fit and will be a very competitive team," he said adding that he was shooting for an undefeated season.

His strategy will be to put a lot of pressure on the opponents' backfield and force them into making mistakes, thus enabling UMass to capitalize and score. Coach Mascolo exhibits a lot of enthusiasm and confidence about his players. He sums it all up when he says "as a player the moment, the winning goal, was momentary and spontaneous but as a coach the experience is heightened, more subtle."

Mascolo is now a graduate student here in the sports management program where he is studying facilities management. In the future he would like to open his own general fitness center.

Mascolo, born in New York, attended high school in Concord, Ma., where he graduated in 1974.

He played on the varsity soccer team at UMass, where he was captain in his senior year. In both his junior and senior years, he was named to the All-Yankee Conference selection and the All New England Team. During his senior year the UMass men's soccer team won the ECAC (East Coast Athletic Regional Champions) title.

Upon graduation at UMass, Mascolo tried out for the NASL (North American Soccer League) Seattle Sounders in the free agent draft. He also tried out with the Chicago Sting (NASL) and the Cleveland Cobras of the ASL (American Soccer League), but failed to make any of the squads.

After having had previous experience coaching J.V. soccer at Greenfield High School last Fall, Mascolo looks forward to college coaching, "where the basics are already learned." He feels coaching is a two way learning experience as the players will profit by his experiences on the soccer field and in turn he will benefit by observing his players.

Helping Coach Mascolo in his spare time is Assistant Coach Glenn Cristofori who is a graduate student in sports management studying pro soccer.

Cristofori hails from Arlington, Ma., and graduated in 1976 from Stanford University.

Cristofori also went to the free agent tryouts with the San Jose Earthquakes (NASL) and the New England Teamen (NASL), but was cut.

The men's jv soccer team opens the season tomorrow afternoon at Williams College at 4 p.m.

Netmen 3rd in EAA's

By CLAY BORGLUND
Collegian Correspondent

The UMass mens tennis team returned home after a very successful debut in the EAA's, held this past weekend at Duquesne University of Pittsburgh. They finished third overall, out of an eight team field. This represents their highest finish ever in this tournament, as fifth place was the previous high mark for them.

Neil Mackertich, number one singles, and Gregg Sanders, number six singles, led the way for UMass as both reached the finals in their respective brackets. Also giving strong performances were number four and five singles, Matt Modlish and Nick Julian, both placing third in their seed groups. In the doubles department, two of the teams from UMass took third, while the other finished fifth.

West Viginia was the eventual winner of the tournament, and with good reason. Their #1 player of last year, was demoted to the #5 spot this year, indicating the quality of players they picked up over the summer.

Coming off this strong showing in their first match the men head into the fall season tomorrow, with a match vs. New Hampshire on the Boyden courts at 2:30.

Fenway Park . . . by way of New York

Ken Lasker

By KEN LASKER
Collegian Correspondent

The air continues to become increasingly cooler and the thuds and grunts from the gridiron that much louder. The marching band sounds out its raw notes at practice while the soccer player prays secretly that his legs and ankles will survive another season of bumps and bruises.

Athletically, the fall signifies a beginning for numerous sports and activities, the "next year" for which they have all been waiting. And yet it also signifies the building pressures and excitement that is distinctly known as The Pennant Race.

It is in these surroundings that the National Pastime comes once again to a close, and these in which this writer experienced Boston's Fenway Park for the first time.

To a sports fan from New York, baseball is, very simply, the Mets and the Yankees. Memories of my youth would be remiss without the inclusion of Sunday afternoon games at Shea Stadium with my father, waiting in anticipation of Tom Seaver's first pitch. The Miracle Mets of 1969 and the "You Gotta Believe" Mets of 1973 were what dreams were made of, and even today in the dank, noisy, musty arena that is Shea Stadium, those spin-tingling moments live on.

And more recently, when an awe-struck teenager was finally allowed to venture his way into Yankee Stadium, did the magnitude of what it was to be a Yankee fan become a reality. To feel the history, to glance at the centerfield monuments, to be hollered at by a drunk fireman for not being vocal enough, to hear Frank Sinatra sing "New York, New York" when you enter and as you leave, to watch Reggie fling his bat after a tremendous home run. That is what this transformed Yankee fan took with him as he walked through Kenmore Square and into the bleachers of Fenway Park.

It was quite overcast when we entered the stadium and the day's first beers were beginning to make their way from our stomachs to our brains, leaving me with a feeling to match the weather.

But I was keen towards my surroundings as I strolled in, constantly being berated by the souvenir vendors selling a stock of "I Hate New York" paraphenalia. Fenway, I thought, here's your chance to show me that what I've heard about your greatness at UMass is true. And to say that this New Yorker was taken would be a tremendous understatement. Here it was, a ballpark that could easily have been a minor league field, still holding on, clutching to baseball's past in the 1980's.

The Yankees, taking batting practice in their warm-up uniforms, (What will Steinbrenner buy them next?!) looked like a team that woke up only to find itself pushed back in time. They simply didn't fit in, out of their mammoth modern ballpark and in the home of the Red Sox. There was something so unique about this quaint little ballpark situated in one of our nation's largest cities.

And when the home team took the field to warm up, the whole picture of what is Fenway Park became that much clearer to me. They fit in so well. It was a perfect marriage as these Red Sox blended in with the whole look of the backyard in which they earned their living.

Many cheers (and many beers) later, this composite Yankee fan was feeling so well about our nation's pastime. Howard's voice beckoned to me on Monday night, yet baseball was still the vital professional sport. And without the tradition and richness of its ballparks, ever so filled with nostalgia, the game would lack so much. My hat is off to Fenway. It was a restoration of what baseball means to our people: a chance to have a good time, let off steam and reminisce. Roll on.

UM hears G. Gordon Liddy

Expresses views on U.S. problems

By JANE M. DeVIRGILIO
and ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

Emphasizing the "peculiar American disability to lead a life of illusion," Watergate co-conspirator G. Gordon Liddy told an estimated 1700 people last night he believes the "arms race will not end because that is the nature of man" and that "there will be a draft in this country sooner than most of you think."

Comparing today to the time before World War II, Liddy told the Fine Arts Center crowd that "nobody wants to die now just as then, but that this is a reality you will have to deal with because of your age."

Without the use of a podium, Liddy amiably walked the stage expressing his opinions and later patiently responded to varied audience reactions and questions for almost two hours.

Liddy continually referred to the weakened defense capabilities of the United States when compared with the Soviet Union, comparing the world "to a bad neighborhood where the United States is like an old lady with a fat pocketbook ready to be mugged."

"We should, on the other hand, be like a 6'6" giant who has a gun in one hand and a baseball bat in the other," he said. "Then we could make it to the other end of the neighborhood."

Mixed reactions from UMass crowd

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students had reactions ranging from total agreement to hatred towards convicted Watergate conspirator G. Gordon Liddy following his appearance here last night.

During his speech and the question and answer period, Liddy's remarks were frequently punctuated by a mixture of applause and boos, while many other observers sat and silently mulled over what they had heard.

"I agree with his ideas. He said he was scared to death of everything when he was younger and now that he's older he's not scared. Maybe that's what the rest of us should be like," said Kevin Scanlon of Rolling Green Apartments, a senior in the Stockbridge School of Agriculture.

"I think he's totally real. If our government leaders were like him we would be on top and not struggling like we are," Scanlon said.

Jim Wiggins, a senior geography major from Belchertown, said he was "impressed" with Liddy's speech but disagreed with his political viewpoints.

"I'm very impressed with him as a speaker. He's very self assured. But I'm confused as eve. He's way too militaristic for me. His attitude towards Russia is way out," Wiggins said.

Warfare escalating between Iran, Iraq

By The Associated Press

Iraqi ground and air forces struck into Iran along a broad front yesterday, zeroing in on the Iranian oil center of Abadan, as the conflict between the two Persian Gulf military powers erupted into all-out war. Iran's U.S.-made warplanes hit back with punishing raids on Iraqi cities and oil targets.

The night sky over Baghdad was alight with anti-aircraft fire and Iranian bombs "falling all over the place," a witness reported.

Four unidentified Americans were reported killed in Iranian bombing raids on the petrochemical complex near Basra, Iraq. The war had an immediate effect on the 52 American hostages in Iran — the Iranian Parliament decided to "freeze" its consideration of their fate, and their militant captors said some were again being moved about inside Iran.

The U.N. Security Council scheduled urgent consultations on the conflict.

Iraq claimed its jets set the giant Abadan refinery ablaze, destroying it, and its armor-led ground forces captured the major Iranian border town of Qasr e-Shirin, 300 miles to the north.

The Iraqi invaders also surrounded the city of Abadan and the port city of Khorramshahr, across the disputed Shatt alArab waterway separating the two nations, Iraq government communiques said. They called it a "victorious march" into Iran.

The Carter administration, asserting a "special stake" in the Persian Gulf region, supported a United Nations effort yesterday to end the growing conflict.

The U.N. Security Council went into private consultations last night at the request of Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim, who called the fighting "a grave threat" to world peace.

Some diplomats on their way into the talks speculated they might lead to a statement from the council president calling for a cease-fire.

Violence, arrests mark first day of strike

Richard Sanders, Chief Negotiation and Union Organizer for the New England Health Care Union, was arrested by Amherst Police when, along with about 80 other strikers, prevented workers from entering the Amherst Nursing Home. The workers are striking for the right to retain a closed Union Shop and for higher wages. (Staff photo by Donna Platt)

Two men were arrested last night following a brawl involving thirty late night picketers at the Amherst Nursing Home, the Amherst Police Department said.

The Amherst Police have confirmed that an altercation took place last night at the home, where workers have gone on strike for the right to retain a union shop.

John Clifford, union organizer for the 60 nonprofesional staff members was arrested and charged with assault and battery on a police officer, disorderly conduct and trespassing after a brawl ensued in the nursing home parking lot.

Stephen Schulman was also arrested and charged with disorderly conduct and trespassing.

The brawl occured as the result of strikers trying to prevent workers from crossing their picket line, said Linda Edwards, union negotiator.

She claims that town officials, including selectmen Chester Atkins and Francesca Maltese, Town Manager Hayward, and Police Chief Donald Maia, assured union officials that Amherst policemen would not escort scabs across the union picket line. But tonight, she claims, she saw three scabs being escorted across the line. "I've worked at the home for three years, and know for certain that those workers are scabs," she said.

"I yelled to the picketers not to let them pass," she said. In the ensuing commotion, she claimed, violence broke out.

She then approached Chief Maia and said, "You told me you wouldn't escort them in." She then claimed that Maia said he intended to escort them across the line.

Maia could not be reached for comment last night.

Maltese denied that selectmen had sanctioned such an agreement with the police and union, but said, "The police are legally required to escort current employees across the picket line, but are not required to escort new workers across."

Officer Thomas O'Connor received medical treatment for lacerations received in the brawl.

Violence had erupted earlier during the first day of the strike at the Amherst Nursing Home, and resulted in the arrests of four picketers, two of them University of Massachusetts students.

Arrested in two separate incidents were Robert Banford, 26, of Amherst, Christopher Muller, 20, of Wayland, Richard Sanders, 31, of Holyoke, and Jerald Levinsky, 25, of Amherst. Banford and Levinsky are UMass students.

The first incident occured at 8 a.m. when twenty picketers attempted to prevent social worker Rosemary Morgan from gaining access to the building.

Union organizer Linda Edwards stated that the union will refuse entry to anyone besides emergency medical personnel.

Seven Amherst police officers, billy clubs drawn, formed a wedge to assist Morgan's forward progress. In the confrontation that ensued, picketers surrounded Morgan, jeering and slowing her progress. A fracas at the nursing home door resulted in Banford's arrest.

He is charged with trespassing and interfering with an employee gaining legal entry. He has been released on personal recognizance with the condition that he not return to the strike site.

Illegal alien claims British beat, torture Irish prisoners

BOSTON (AP) — Francis McCann of Belfast, Ireland, acknowledging at a news conference that he slipped into America illegally, claimed yesterday that the British beat and torture political prisoners at a northeast Ireland prison.

The news conference, in a room off the House chamber at the Statehouse, was sponsored by state Rep. Marie Howe, D-Somerville, who said, "It was just brought to my attention that McCann could be in the United States illegally."

McCann, 27, said in fact that his entry was illegal. He declined to say how he got into the country or where he would go from here, except that some interviews in New York were pending, and he planned to return to Ireland in a month or so.

'Black Death' in New Mexico on rise; kills 3, infects 11

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Bubonic plague — the ancient scourge that littered the lanes of medieval Europe with bodies — has struck 11 people in New Mexico this year, killing three of them.

Bubonic plague is a rare disease, but it hits New Mexico harder than any other state.

"There is no question that the disease is endemic in the rodent population in New Mexico," said Dr. Jonathan Mann, assistant state director for health promotion and disease prevention.

Fleas transmit the disease from animals to humans — a pet dog or cat might kill an infected rodent, a flea might hop from the rodent to the dog and the dog might carry it home.

Increase in consumer prices affecting auto, grocery sales

WASHINGTON (AP) - The biggest increase in grocery prices in five years pushed consumer prices up 0.7 percent in August, an annual rate of inflation of 8.6 percent, the government said yesterday.

Auto prices also rose sharply, although the price of gasoline declined for the fourth consecutive month.

Grocery prices rose 2.3 percent in August, the most for any month since July of 1975, when they increased 2.4 percent. The severe drought that destroyed crops in some sections of the country was largely to blame, analysts said.

The price of meats, poultry, fish and eggs rose a combined 4.1 percent, with egg prices alone up 6.6 percent to an average price per dozen of 91 cents.

U.S. officials order destruction of birds hit by exotic disease

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP) — U.S. Department of Agriculture officials said yesterday they have ordered the destruction of more than 200 pet birds in Maine and Vermont after discovering the birds were exposed to an exotic disease.

Susan Sperling, a department spokeswoman, said federal officials have traced shipments of the exposed birds to a chain of pet stores operating in the two New England states.

Ms. Sperling said officials believe that all of a wide variety of pet birds sold at the Pet Managerie stores in South Portland and Bangor, Maine, and two stores in Burlington, Vt., have been exposed to Exotic Newcastle disease.

Maine votes to keep nuclear power plants in operation

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP) — By a margin of nearly three to two, Maine voters chose to keep their only nuclear power plant in business yesterday, in a statewide referendum vote that had nationwide implications.

Climaxing a campaign of charges and counter charges over how much the cost of electricity would rise if the 8-year-old Maine Yankee power plant were shut down, voters rejected the referendum question 99,766 to 70,975 votes, with 62 percent of 665 precincts counted.

The referendum question was being defeated in all but three of Maine's 16 counties.

Residents of Wiscasset, home of Maine Yankee, voted two-to-one to keep their largest tax-payer in business. The vote was 966 against the shutdown and 481 in favor of it.

In nearby Bath, home of Bath Iron Works, Maine's largest private employer, the unofficial vote was close despite a campaign by the company in favor of the plant. Just over 2,000 people voted for the shutdown and 1,871 voted against it.

A two-to-one margin in favor of nuclear power prevailed in Aroostook County, the area farthest away from Maine Yankee.

Voter turnout was heavy, with the single-issue ballot question representing the most sweeping attempt in any state to ban nuclear power.

Other states have voted on banning future nuclear power but no state has considered shutting down an operating nuclear power plant.

Turnout for the single-issue referendum was unusually high in many cities and towns.

Gov. King orders new program to prepare youth for family life

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Edward J. King ordered the state education commissioner yesterday to develop a public school program preparing youngsters for the responsibilities of family life, one of four steps to help stem the alleged deterioration of the family.

King ordered a training program in family intervention for police officers and social workers and the development of model business personnel practices which are supportive of family life.

He also signed an executive order creating a special commission to help standardize probate court procedures relating to divorce, family violence and child custody.

The steps were taken in response to a report by King's Advisory Committee on Children and the Family, released at a news conference yesterday, which said:

—The rate of divorce in Massachusetts has tripled since 1960 and, nationally, has increased 700 percent this century. More than one in three marriages in Massachusetts ends in divorce.

—Recorded incidents of family violence is at an all-time high in Massachusetts. The Department of Social Services expects to handle 25,000 reports of child abuse and neglect in 1981.

—The number of live births to Massachusetts residents has decreased 40 percent since 1960, but the number of births to unwed parents has increased 92 percent.

Dr. Armand M. Nicholi, chairman of the committee, said parents in the United States spend less time with their children than in any other country.

He said this leads to a sense of rejection, resentment and hostility, and one result has been an increase in the suicide rate among youngsters.

The report said a study conducted in an unidentified Boston suburb "showed that the average time per day that fathers spent with their infant children was about 37 seconds."

The report said the most important factor in character development and emotional stability is a child's relationship with his parents, and trends in society make the relationship difficult to maintain. Included are:

—The accelerating divorce rate.

—A tendency to move, which "frequently imposes stress on families."

—The increasing numbers of married women and mothers with young children who work outside the home.

—Excessive television viewing, which "results from and causes parental inaccessibility. When parents are home physically, television often interferes with meaningful interaction..."

The report also said the "lack of impulse control prevalent in our culture today has a strong bearing on family life," and has led to steady increases in violence and illegitimate births.

King called families "our most vital human resource. No government can ever replace the family as the basis of a stable, productive society."

Amherst-Pelham teachers union seeks resumed negotiations

By LAURIE ZUCKER
Collegian Correspondent

Last Friday, 235 teachers belonging to The Amherst-Pelham Teacher's Association issued an open letter to the school committee requesting that contract negotiations be resumed.

"We, the members of the APTA believe a possibility still exists to negotiate our differences. If you share our feelings, we urge a return to the bargaining table," the statement said.

Contractual negotiations between the APTA and the school committee are presently stalled. Four proposals the teachers want written into their contract are the main bone of contention.

The proposals are:

-A reduction in the teacher work year from 190 days to 185 by the end of the three year contract.

-Freedom for teachers to leave school after classes if they have no other committments.

-The 'longevity concept' : A bonus for teachers who have worked in the Amherst area for fifteen years, and $650 after twenty years of service.

-Teacher's want to 'buy back' unused sick leave at $10 per day up to a maximum of $1,000 after a teacher has worked ten years in the system. (The town of Amherst is presently utilizing this concept, and the APTA wants equality with other public employees.)

The total cost of all four proposals would be $42,000.

The school committee exchanged proposals with the APTA on the Longevity concept and reduction in the work year, neither of which satisfied the demands of teachers. They have not, as yet, considered the other two proposals.

The school committee wants teachers to work 25 continuous years before becoming eligible for bonuses, and to return to work each year by Sept 1; teachers don't want to return until after Labor Day.

Contract negotiations between the two groups started last October. In March teachers tentatively agreed to a salary settlement of 51/2 percent, 71/2 percent, and 1/2 percent over the next three years, beginning in 1980-81.

Although teachers knew this wage package would not keep pace with inflation, they realized 'times are difficult for everyone,' and felt the school committee would appreciate their compromise and be more inclined to accept the four proposals teachers want written in to the contract.

When talks became stymied in June, James Lyden, a field investigator for the Massachusetts Board of Conciliation and Arbitration, stepped in to mediate. Last week he reported to this board that negotiations were at an impasse.

Clifford Fronsh, president of the APTA, said he thought Mr. Lyden 'did what he could.'

The APTA contract has been extended to Dec. 1. Another meditator, acceptable to both sides is being sought, which will take about six-eight weeks.

Marylou Theilman, chairperson of the school committee, said she had received the open letter, but felt, "It would be inappropriate to comment until the school committee meets on Monday."

Before talks became snagged, the school committee used to meet with the APTA directly on a frequent basis. When asked if the school committee would consider a return to this state of affairs, Theilman replied, "It isn't clear from their letter if this is what they want. The school committee decided collectively; I couldn't venture to guess."

The collective bargaining process does take time. 12-18 months is not unusual. The UMass teachers Union is also still engaged in contractual negotiations. The next step in this process is waiting for a mediator to be appointed," Theilman said.

Graduate Student Senate elects secretary

By RUTH HAGBERG
Collegian Correspondent

The graduate Student Senate elected Carole Counihan as their new secretary last night.

There were eight nominees for the position of secretary. Six were present at the meeting.

Each candidate made a brief speech before the voting. Twenty-six senators were eligible to vote, along with the three officers.

Before the election, the election committee had decided that the two highest vote getters would be voted on again by the senators. According to Committee coordinator Don Ross, this was because of the high number of candidates.

In the first vote, Carole Counihan received 12 votes, Sanjiv Dugal received 14 votes, and Terry Szold received 3. No other candidates received votes. In the second election, between Counihan and Dugal, Counihan received 16 votes to Dugal's 12.

The new secretary will be one of the 4 senate officers and must sit on a number of committees. She must also deal with the board of trustees concerning graduate student grants and jobs.

Carole Counihan, the new secretary, is in the Anthropology department, and has been at the University for 7 years.

She says she hopes to advocate student interest in the graduate school and stop what she refers to as the erosion of the idea of quality education at UMass.

She grew up in the Boston area and, as a native of Massachusetts, says she knows what problems exist.

She has served on many committees including the GSS bargaining committee, the affirmative action committee, and a woman's committee. She says she would like the Graduate Student Senate to be an "activist democratic body."

Also elected at the Senate meeting were the members of the finance committee. The committee's duties are to review all requests from organizations for GSS trust fund money before the senate votes on them.

The committee will consist of 6 senators and 2 officers. The six senators elected are: Mark Cobler, Sanjiv Dugal, Sharon Eberly, Lee Levin and Terry Szold.

U.S. Senate to reconsider financial aid bill

A bill which would grant a five-year extension of financial aid to students and institutions of higher education, narrowly defeated in the U.S. Senate earlier this month, will be reconsidered either today or Thursday.

The bill, HR 5192, was first killed in the Senate Sept. 4 by a 45-43 vote. Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., will motion to have the Senate reconsider the financial aid package.

The 14-part bill authorizes several new financial aid programs for students and makes major changes in several other programs.

Pell, who originally voted in favor of the bill, changed his vote at the end of the roll call, enabling him to request a reconsideration.

If the new bill is not passed, by Sept. 30, when the present legislation expires, current programs would continue to operate under an automatic one year extension.

University of Massachusetts Financial Aid director Edward Apodaca said although the bill would help more students, funding would not be increased to match the increased numbers of students on financial aid.

"Getting the bill passed is only part of the battle. Once it gets approved we will have to go back and fight for funding," Apodaca said.

Kenneth Moore, a member of the Public Policy team of the Student Center for Educations Research and Advocacy at UMass said several key votes, including Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., were lost when several senators were not present for the vote.

Moore said student support was needed to ensure Kennedy's presence during the upcoming vote.

"We've got to persuad him to be in the chambers to vote," he said.

Moore stressed the importance of the bill's passage saying, "This bill tries to address the needs and problems of students in higher education in both sectors."

HR 5192 emerged in August after weeks of debate by a House-Senate conference committee on the extent that student aid programs should be overhauled. An agreement was finally made to raise the National Direct Student Loan (NDSL) interest rate from three percent to four percent, hike the Guaranteed Student Loan (GSL) interest rate for new borrowers from seven to eight percent, and several other adjustments.

The bill had cleared the House August 28, 373 to 16, but once it appeared on the floor of the Senate, Chairman Ernest F. Hollings (D-S.C.), Henry Bellmaon (R-Okla.), and their colleagues on the Budget Committee argued that the bill did not include cost-saving loan provisions passed earlier by the Senate, including limits on government interest subsidies in the Guaranteed Student Loan program.

They felt this bill would raise interest rates on student loans and make other changes aimed at reducing defaults but these modifications would not be drastic enough to check the loan costs.

Brian Delaney, special assistant to Sen. Kennedy said the Senator traditionally has a very high voting record, but he was not in Washington when the bill came up because he was campaigning for Pres. Carter.

Congress has already appropriated student-aid funds for this academic year. But some financial-aid officers fear that students' ability to receive guaranteed loans could be hampered by commercial lenders uncertainty about changes in the program.

Movin' or groovin'

This past weekend hosted two events important to the Third World community here at the University. (No, they were not the Minutemen's first football game or Mount Holyoke's premier party.)

They were the dedication of the DuBois papers and the performance of The International Afrikan-American Ballet Company. And, as usual, the support from the Third World community was virtually non-existent. Even worse, was the support from the Euro-American at these events which only poured salt into the wound.

And then we wonder why so few programs are sponsored for our edification. Why should the University sponsor events for us if we are too busy to attend them? Even UMass hates to lose money.

I think the problem lies within each of us. We need to take time out to properly assess our priorities. Is it pertinent that we attend every party on this or one of the other campuses in the Five College area? Or, is it more important that we at least make the attempt to be present at functions which are prepared for our intellectual and cultural advancement as a unified people?

These questions are not to be dealt with slightly, but should be considered seriously.

The money we spend groovin' we could be moving — ahead.

"Like Magic" Bowker is Africa

Like magic, Bowker Auditorium was swept four hundred years through time as the International Afrikan-American Ballet Company journeyed to the thirteenth century empire of Mali, Saturday evening, taking with them an audience of approximately 150 onlookers. Both young and old submerged themselves in the warm, pulsating rhythms of percussion, the cool artistry of dance, and the light harmony of acappella song like a seed newly planted in fertile soil--like AFRICA.

The company performed a series of three dances. Opening the program was the "lamba" which is celebrated through the different "passages of life," according to Olukase Wiles, one of the troupe's artistic and musical directors. "These passages include weddings, births, or circumcision of male children," he continued.

The "saba" was presented as the second feature. This dance hails from Senegal Wolof and is a fertility dance for women, performed by women.

Their final dance was entitled "Collage" which Wiles says, "is our finale and is many dances together. We try to present positive energy and save the true feelings (of African culture)."

It is to this final statement the company bases their existence. Though none of the members are native Africans, they are able to capture the authentic spirit of the music and dance by duplicating the culture from where the dance originates.

In fact, they present such a genuine program that "the director of a Senegalese ballet company has asked them to visit Dakar because he feels the art of dance there is becoming westernized," stated an article which recently appeared in Essence magazine.

It literally "takes a lifetime," Wiles stressed, to learn the dances. For this reason the troupe researches and practices the significant culture's customs on a daily basis. From the construction of ancient musical instruments to the brightly colored costumes such backround is an integral part of the final onstage production. Their practical experience is well-worth the effort, as seen in the joy and pride they bring to their audiences, as well as the fulfillment each member enjoys.

Founded approximately four years ago in Brooklyn, New York, the company presently consists of seventeen to twenty-five members, ages two to sixty-two. However, not all dancers were able to perform in this past production because, in the case of the children, "Their heads are getting pretty big, and being around adults all the time, they're pretty 'grown' as it is, Wiles said half serious as he affectionately placed a kiss on his daughters small lips.

However, like many new dance troupes, the company is experiencing financial difficulties. Although monies from performances do provide some assistance in the upkeep of the instruments and costumes, they are not sufficient to support any of the members. Also, arts councils and similar foundations as the article in essence stated, hesitate to offer any assistance, choosing to wait until the troupe "has been around long enough to establish some longevity and a certainty that the group will not pocket the grant money."

The International Afrikan-American Ballet Company is a family of African-American men, women and children dedicated to their art whose objective Wiles stated,"is to propagate Africa as a hero (heroine) and to show that it does have structure and form and is very, very positive in many ways."

"There is a proverb that says 'Beauty is in the eyes of the beholder,'" commented one of the other musicians, "and the beauty you see here is the beauty within yourselves."

For The Children

"Come one, come all, come big, come small" to a People's Cultural Fair called "For The Children", on Saturday, September 27, in the Amherst Common.

Filling the Town green from noon till 5 with music, games, booths, and food, for children, their parents, and the entire Valley community, the fair is planned as "a statement of the need for a peaceful, healthy, and liberating environment for children and all people."

Music will include Rock, Fusion, and Reggae by "FX"; Jazz by the Dave Phillips Trio, and a local high school jazz ensemble; Irish Folk tunes by "Spancil Hill"; and Bluegrass by Barbara Stack and Friends.

A special life-size board game called "A-Maze on the Future: 1984—The Empire Strikes Back!" will be featured, as well as mural painting, jugglers, and other games. Weaving and silk-screen artists will practice their crafts, while on stage, a women's theatre collective will perform a series of skits on American history.

Organized by a recently formed community cultural coalition, the immediate purpose of the fair is to raise funds for the Che-Lumumba School—a Third World community elementary school, run and financed through the collective efforts of parents, teachers, and students themselves.

A tag sale to benefit the Amherst Montessori School will also be part of the "For The Children" fair.

On that same evening, another coalition member, the Amherst Alternative Youth Program is sponsoring a dance with "Martian Highway" in Grace Parish Hall, off the Town Common. The concert will support the youth program, which sponsors a variety of services for the town's young people.

Other "For The Children" sponsors include Politics & Education magazine, American Friends Service Committee, Amherst Disarmament Coalition, Venceremos Brigade, Amherst Food Coop, John Brown Anti-Klan Committee, Center for Racial Studies, the Irish Solidarity Committee, and the Amherst Survival Center.

"For The Children" organizers are seeking support from local campus and community clergy, and have already received endorsements from Father Joseph Quigley of the Newman Center, Rev. Donna Schapper of First Congregational Church, Rev. Peter Sabey of United Christian Foundation, Rev. Skip Umberger of Grace Episcopal Church, Rev. Arnold Westwood of the Unitarian Society of Amherst.

Black to head Color Guard

Karen Marie Thomas (Black Affairs Staff)

A black woman will lead the Color Guard at home football games; a first in the history of UMass.

Cynthia Williams, a 20 year-old junior from Springfield, has been involved with ROTC for seven years and is the highest ranking Non-Commission Officer (NCO) on the campus.

Williams has been an active member of the Army ROTC for the past three years. Currently she is squad leader for Company B, First Platoon. Company B is concerned with drills and ceremonies. Williams, and other members of Army ROTC are trying to form a co-ed drill team.

"I was a color guard commander for the Air Force Junior ROTC in high school," she said.

Upon graduation in 1982, Williams will become a Second Lieutant as well as a military police woman on base (MP). Williams has trained in the martial arts to assist her as a MP. She will serve six years of active duty and plans to make a career within the Army.

Williams and one other woman are the only two blacks currently involved with Army ROTC. Williams said that blacks "didn't want to wear the uniform or be hassled by their friends." She has not experienced any negative reactions from her own friends.

Study finds all tampons, not just Rely, cause toxic shock syndrome

By ANDREA ATKINS AND JANE DEVIRGILIO
Collegian Staff

The risk of getting Toxic Shock Syndrome can be eliminated by not using tampons of any kind and can be lessened by using them only intermittently, local and national experts said today.

A study released Friday by the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, Ga. concludes that TSS is related to tampon use, not exclusively to the use of Procter and Gamble's Rely brand. Tests show, however, the incidence of TSS is more common among Rely users. Published reports indicate Rely's absorbing agent Carboxymethylcellulose might facilitate the bacteria breeding.

Dr. Thomas C. McBride, director of medical care at the University of Massachusetts Health Center, said women using tampons should insert them gently and be sure to wash their hands throroughly before insertion.

An information officer at the Center for Disease Control said this was good advice. Katherine Lord, spokeswoman for the national center which has been investigating TSS nationally since Jan. 1980, said there is a "great possibility of insertion being the method by which the staphylococcus aureus gets into the vagina. "We have not found the staph on unused tampons."

According to Lord, the staph produces the toxin which gets into the blood and causes the syndrome. Symptoms include high fever, diarrhea, vomiting, a rapid drop in blood pressure which causes a skin rash and other symptoms of shock, Lord said.

Ninety-five percent of the 299 cases of the potentially fatal disease which have been reported since 1977 have occurred during a women's menstrual period, Lord said.

McBride urged any women who experience these symptoms during their periods to report to the Health Center immediately. The disease can be treated with antibiotics, he said.

Procter and Gamble's manager of Consumer Services in Cincinatti, Ohio said the company would suspend sale of the product until all the details of the disease are understood." In a telephone interview yesterday, Dorothy Puccini said refunds could be obtained for unused Rely tampons by writing to P&G at a special address: P.O. Box 85519, Cincinatti, Ohio 45202.

The C.D.C.'s study shows the incidence of TSS declining with use of tampons such as Kotex and O.B. brands which have no applicators. Lord said applicators might cause abrasions which enable the toxin to get into the bloodstream.

A vagina "blocked with a tampon might create an atmosphere in which the toxin would produce more rapidly," Lord said. Wearing a sanitary pad at night would be helpful, she said and added that women who wear tampons should remember that "frequent change is consistent with good hygiene."

TABLE 2. Distribution of tampon brands among toxic-shock syndrome cases and controls using only one tampon brand

Tampon brand	Cases (N=42)	Controls (N=114)
Rely	71%	26%
Playtex	19%	25%
Tampax	5%	25%
Kotex	2%	12%
OB	2%	11%

Alternative energy meeting on Saturday; sponsored by Conte

By FRANCINE MINTZ
Collegian Correspondent

Governor Edward J. King will be one of 15 speakers from government and industry speaking at an energy symposium entitled "Energy Alternatives and Assistance for the 80's" Saturday, 9 a.m.-6 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Congressman Silvio O. Conte (D-Northampton) is sponsoring the energy meeting, which will give individuals an opportunity to hear leaders discuss the energy situation in this country today, and what they intend to do to alleviate the problems facing the consumer.

Missi Tessier, congressman Conte's press release secretary, added that energy conservation will be discussed from federal, state, and local standpoints.

King will speak at 2:00 p.m. Other speakers include Jake Plante, Director of the Franklin County Office of Energy, who will talk about his program of conservation, and Bart Barry, Chairman of the Pittsfield Resource Recovery Commission, who will discuss source renewable energy — using waste as energy.

There will be seven alternative energy films, advocating solar, wind, gasohol, and home energy assistance for the 1980's, during the syposium.

In addition, there will be displays on home energy conservation and an outdoor display featuring the Stirling Automobile, built by a company in Sweden in cooperation with The American Motors Corporation.

The car has a multi-fuel engine, which means it can run on conbustible fuels, such as gasoline, gasohol, and kerosene, and its mileage is 30-40 percent better than that predicted for 1984 vehicles, Tessier said.

ART: Five college area galleries offer a vision of beauty, wonderment, color

From Portfolio in Honor of Meyer Schapiro, a 1973 lithograph and silkscreen with embossed plate done by Roy Lichtenstein, and part of the University Gallery's permanent collection.

By GARY EYNATIAN
Collegian Staff

Among the five colleges there is a lot of art to appreciate. What follows is the first of three articles on the collections and galleries of each of the five colleges. First the University. . .

The University Gallery, located on the bottom level of the Fine Arts Center here on campus, is the main showcase for art on campus. It houses the University Collection, hosts temporary exhibits of different artists' works and organizes travelling exhibitions and loans from the collection to other institutions.

The collection consists mainly of 1,200 20th-century prints, drawings and photographs. There are also some sculptures and paintings.

Among the highlights of the collection is the Meyer Schapiro Portfolio, a collection of prints commissioned in honor of the eminent art historian Meyer Schapiro and the chair established in his name at Columbia University. Andy Warhol, Claes Oldenburg and Roy Lichtenstein (whose print is shown) are a few of the artists who contributed to the portfolio of twelve prints. The marvelous and almost unlimited potential printmaking has as an art medium is well illustrated by the works in the portfolio.

Also noteworthy in the collection is a photograph collection, gift of the Class of 1928, of 86 works by contemporary American photographers.

Such greats as Ansel Adams, who received an honorary Doctorate in Fine Arts from UMass in 1974, Henry Callahan, Aaron Siskind and Emmet Gowin whose works have made significant contributions towards making photographs which may be considered true works of art as well as pictures of people, cities and the land. Ansel Adams' White Branches, Mono Lake, California, 1950 is one example of the artists gift for portraying the beauty and mystery of nature.

The current exhibition on view in the main gallery until November 2 is an exhibition of wooden sculptures by Jackie Ferrara, a woman artist who lives and works in New York City. Her sculptures are very modular, based on geometry, and some are as tall as nine feet. They seem to go quite well with the geometry of the stylishly modern interior of the University Gallery. Open to the public 11 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Tuesday-Friday and 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. on weekends, the University Gallery is well worth checking out. There is no charge for admission.

In addition to the University Gallery we have the Herter Gallery located in Herter Hall and the Student Union Gallery in the Student Union which house exhibits.

The Student Union Gallery hosts shows of student or former students' works. The recent show of paintings by UMass graduate Mark Brown was quite good. For listings of current and upcoming exhibitions check the Five-College Calendar and the Collegian.

Paul's Confusion: Part Four

by Eric Janszen

Outside his house, Paul yelled across the lawn to Peter, "Wait up!" Peter stopped and waited. His eyes lingered on the forested hills surrounding him which had started turning yellow and red. Paul caught up and together they walked — Paul consumed in thought, Peter classifying, in his mind, the drivers of the passing cars which filled the spacey silence for the three blocks to the bus stop. Almost there, Peter turned and stuck out his thumb and a Volvo roared by with its exhaust flatulating, the driver staring paralytically ahead.

"I'll bet you fifty bucks the next Volvo doesn't stop either," Peter said, "Except I don't have fifty bucks to lose."

"Datsun drivers are the worst," Paul said.

"Granadas," Peter said, "and Volares, at rush hour, when strings of them roll by you, middle-aged Polish ladies blinking out the window with both hands firmly on the wheel — one at ten o'clock and the other at two, just like their husbands taught them. And there you are — your thumb sticking out of your grungy down parka, your ratty jeans bunched at the ankles — blinking back. Symbols of their childhood," he said.

They found Beary, the third of their four-member household, at the bus stop waiting for the 9:15. She struggled with a newspaper, the gusting wind pulling one side from her hands and plastering the other against her face.

"Shit," she exclaimed loudly and matter-of-factly from behind the Times, crushing the paper closed and stuffing it into her large, black carrying-bag. She smiled warmly at Paul and Peter.

"Kiss your mother with that mouth?" Peter said, watching her hair blow across her face. There was newsprint on her nose. He wanted to wipe it gently off.

"How did you get here before us without our seeing you this morning?" Paul asked her.

"I came from over there," she said and pointed up the road away from their house. Paul gave a nod of casual comprehension that belied his inward embarassment for having assumed she would not stay over at her boyfriend Rick's house until they were all moved in, had all gotten to know each other. Peter looked away.

"There's ink on your nose," Paul told Beary, pointing. She scrubbed it off with her sleeve.

The distinct squeal of bus brakes pulled the waiting crowd to the curb like turkeys to a fence when any human form, the promise of food, comes into view. Overloaded, the bus tore by and the crowd slackened. Another, a minute behind it, stopped. The three of them got on together just behind the rear door.

The bus hummed slowly through campus as students walked sleepily into the road and, seeing the approaching bus, either staggered backwards or sprinted half-heartedly to the other side.

They were the first ones off the bus so Paul bade Peter and Beary a swift good-bye and jogged away to avoid the cascading mob. Soon, he entered the lecture hall.

Paul's class was in Mahar Auditorium — a peculiar hexagonal structure with terrible visibility, oddly separated, window-sized blackboards, and miserably tight seating from which a group of several hundred students was expected to comprehend the garbled distortions of speech, reminiscent of defective plumbing, emitted by several critically undersized loudspeakers in front of the room. For the students' convenience, a porkchop-shaped writing surface the size of a small breadboard could be rotated into a horizontal position just inches over the lap, thus locking all but the most undernourished firmly in place.

It was the sound like clogs dropping, as a row of students rotated the formica-covered wings to allow passage of the latecomer, that brought Paul to his professor's attention. An imposingly large, bearded man, his professor stopped his lecture abruptly to observe the ruckus in the back of the room. Several hundred of Paul's classmates turned to watch too.

Presidential politics depressing

Sometimes I won't get up until the bed's on fire. It happens when I'm depressed. Then, when the morning comes I simply roll over once and once again, for good measure, to get out the crink from the night, and fall back asleep.

Mother said that when I was in high school I had my share of depressions. Then, after high school no problem. For three years straight I got up in the morning. But now, again, its dark before I move.

Another depression has settled in on me. This time, though, it is different. I know, because in high school I would never grasp the irritant long enough to realize what it was, what it could be that sent away the day.

David Cole

The cause of this depression has much to do with presidential choices in an inevitable election. It is about choices in an election that might mean the coming of much more than any of us has ever hoped would come to pass.

And the problem with me is that I can't offer anyone advice on what they should do.

It might have been easy. For those of us with a liberal bent, as I profess to have, the answer should have been clearly to defeat Reagan at any cost within reason. And there are several good reasons for this. For one, the man gathers much of his support and money from the "New Right," a movement that, unfortunately for Reagan, is more dualistic than single issue. A major force in the "New Right" are the "pro-family" groups like Phyllis Schlafly's Eagle Forum, an organization opposed to the ERA, which encourages women to leave the work place and return to the home.

This, could not be successful without the implementation of new programs of family assistance. Yet money for these programs would not be available if another force in the new right groups pursuing traditional conservative aims, such as elimination of welfare and government regulations, had their say. This type of infighting would go on behind the doors of the Oval Office, presumably weakening Reagan's administration.

Another good reason for undermining Reagan's plans is his nationalism. Believing that part of the job of a president is being a prophet, Reagan sees the U.S. as "a shining city on a hill." He has explained how America was once one of these cities, although now in a lapse, and how inevitably it will again reach such illumitable heights. Unfortunately, the road Reagan will pave to this city has to be through a wilderness darkened by the politics of domination and military escalation. It would be dangerous and costly.

The logical step then should be to advocate a vote for Carter. An incumbent president has the best chance of all. Even here, however, I have to hesitate.

Carter is a conservative Democrat, although this is not as important a consideration for he must listen to the liberals or else run amuck in vetoes. My reluctance to vote for him however, has deeper roots: it nags me from my subconscious. It tells me that a vote for this man is a willful betrayal of the following survival instinct: Thou shall not succeed with failure, therefore do not make a success out of failure. A Carter election has the appearance of being but the continuation of economic woe, energy policy rift, and hazy international policies.

Perhaps, then, there is an answer in Anderson. I think I could want to vote for him, if only because he'll look you straight in th eye. With the other two candidates, no matter how focused the camera, they appear oblique. It seems they are always putting something over on us. This feeling is belittling.

But with Anderson there might also be reasonability. His conservation orientated energy program, based on a fifty cents a gallon gas tax, would be a stroke of good luck, and no doubt has an urgency hidden behind the veil of this election year. Yet he carries with him the insecurity of taking a vote from Carter — if Reagan wins. And even if the choice, based on well thought out convictions, was made not to vote for Carter, the guilt still might flood in. It could be at least a four year clean-up.

Also with Anderson comes a personal vagueness. Could I really handle his heat, that is to say, pay the fifty cent tax on the gallon? Could I take all the other conservative measures that might be imposed in similar stride? I think I could — right now. But if not, did I vote for a man because of a certain straightness to his eyes?

Is there any end to my dismay? My friends tell me I must come to terms with myself. This means, literally, to let go of all instincts, i.e., all doubts, holding me back from voting for Carter. As you might guess, they fear Reagan, too.

But who ever heard of instincts being wrong? And since they hardly ever are this election must be but a pitiful example of damned if you do, damned if you don't politics.

It doesn't matter. My illness is back. Therfore, I'll sleep right through election day. And please don't bother to wake me with the results.

Wrong photo for incorrect story

To the Editor:

As Director of the Durfee Conservatory, my staff and I were surprised and chagrined to read the article entitled, "Closure of Greenhouses Due to Falling Glass Fragments" in the September 18, 1980 issue of the Collegian.

The reported "facts" as collected by Chuck Kilfoye were a jumbled mess. The article continually and inaccurately referred to the Durfee Conservatory but described the French Hall Greenhouses condition and current plight. The article's photograph was of the Durfee Conservatory while it should have been of the French Hall Greenhouses.

We feel we must set the public straight about the condition of the Conservatory. The Durfee Conservatory is a well kept, metal framed greenhouse with intact and secure panes of glass. It is not plagued with a falling glass problem or any other structural hazard. It is not now, nor even has been, condemned since being entirely rebuilt as a modern greenhouse in 1954. It is still open to all classes, the University community and general public.

The Collegian article was a classic of mistaken references, better suited for your "April fools'" issue. The wrong story with the wrong photograph with the wrong greenhouse. We feel a retraction statement by the Collegian should be printed to counter the adverse publicity the renowned Durfee Conservatory has suffered and still the deluge of inquiries we are receiving as to the current status of Durfee.

John Tristan and Staff ,
Durfee Conservatory

Editor's note: A correction of the "Greenhouse" story appears on page six.

Liddy balances DVP program

To the Editor:

You, the editors, have taken an unfair swipe at one of the most valuable organizations on this campus. You insult the integrity of the Distinguished Visitors Program (DVP) without considering its purpose, which is to make the University community sensitive to the world in which it exists by bringing to campus those persons whose experience in politics, the sciences and the arts qualifies them to raise questions about life in all its dimensions.

G. Gordon Liddy meets the specifications of the DVP for an ideal speaker. He is a dynamic character who, by his underhanded actions, is very controversial and newsworthy. Such a person provokes the thought of many and certainly increases the awareness of the university community of the world in which it exists.

I praise the DVP for bringing to campus such an arousing character. I would like to hear what this man has to say, for it is not too often that students get a chance to fire questions at such a powerful political asshole.

Will the Collegian praise the DVP for scheduling Daniel Ellsberg merely because he is a "good-guy," or rather for offering a superbly balanced program?

Bruce Dern getting himself wet in "Middle Age Crazy."

'Mid-Age' well done

By ANDREW GORDON
Collegian Correspondent

Although virtually no college student has reached the seemingly traumatic age of 40, it is easy to relate to the plight of Middle Age Crazy's hero.

Bruce Dern stars as Bobby Lee Burnett, a nouveau riche building contractor who reaches the ripe age of 40. He realizes how tied down he is by his own life and tries to escape, if only temporarily. Fast cars, flashy clothes and a fling with a Dallas Cowboy Cheerleader are part of his attempt to regain his lost youth.

In the movie's funniest scene, Dern fantasizes himself giving a high school graduation speech advising everyone to stay 18 forever because "The future sucks." The film is similar in theme to such comedies as 10 and The Last Married Couple in Ameri a, but it more seriously and more effectively tackles the subject. It is a well done and often moving film.

Bruce Dern does a fine job in a part distinctly different from the bad guy psychotics he's played in such films as The Cowboys (In which, with a grin on his face, he shot John Wayne in the back(, Black Sunday and Coming Home. He has quite visably gotten into the character and is the driving force of the film. Some of his more emotional lines of dialogue, however, are delivered as if he were in deep physical pain.

Ann-Margret turns in a particulary unimpressive role as Dern's dingbat wife. The rest of the supporting cast, especially Graham Jarvis as Dern's business partner and Deborah Wakeman as the cheerleader, turn in admirable performances.

The film is British director John Trent's first major American work with established actors and a large budget. Trent, who has run the gamut from producer to screenwriter and finally director, has made a few obscure films such as Love at First Sight and Sunday in the Country. He will surely move on to bigger and better projects as a result of Middle Age Crazy.

Carl Kleinschmitt, the screenwriter, has successfully made the jump from television to motion pictures. It is his first film after working for almost 20 years as a staff writer on such shows as "The Dick Van Dyke Show," "The Odd Couple" and "Mash."

Middle Age Crazy is playing at the Mountain Farms Cinema in Hadley.

Back to good ole rock n' roll

By STEVE BERLIN
Collegian Correspondent

The Stompers stormed into the Quonset last Thursday, gave it a healthy dose of old-fashioned (no new-wave!) rock and roll, and the Quonset will never be the same.

The enthusiastic audience, many who were obvious seasoned Stompers fans, all agreed with lead guitarist/singer Sal Baglio when he suggested "let's knock down all the disco lights in this place." Will the Quonset become the Happy Valley's CBGB?

The Stompers played with a freshness lacking in so many "New Wave" groups, in that these guys actually have fun while playing. Isn't fun what rock is supposed to be about?

This Boston band plays Bruce Springsteen/barroom type rock, but covering everything from an obligitory "Dirty right mood for it, too, singing along and cheering at all the right places. They came to hear simple, good-time rock 'n' roll and that's what the band gave them, doing what seems the impossible in the 1980's, by making it all sound new and refreshing. The only low point in the show was when they played such disco tunes as "You're Love Has Lifted Me Higher" to a rock beat.

The Stompers (Sal Baglio, vocals and guitar; Steve Giligan, bass; Dave Friedman, keyboards; and Mark Cuccinello, drums) announced that they plan to play in the Bluewall "sometime in the near future", and said they will introduce a new course here, "Rock 'N' Roll 101". Seriously, I think UMass could use such a course. This may be rock going back to the basics, but, oh, the basics never sounded so good!

Ballet company enchants crowd

By SARAH SCHULTZ
Collegian Staff

The hall was packed with the usual assortment of ballet-goers, formally attired and generally sober. But the performance was punctuated with the sounds of laughter, and a quick glance around the room confirmed my suspicion that the audience was relishing the performance as much as I.

This was the scene at Smith College Saturday as the Boston Repertory Ballet company enchanted the capacity crowd. The program was a melange of four separate pieces, three of which were written specifically for the company.

The first piece, "Arcana," was choreographed by a former Smith student, Marjorie Mussman. The dance was as intriguing as the title (which means cards from a deck, referring specifically to tarrot cards). The deck was shuffled before our eyes as each new combination of dancers reflected a different card. Expressive movements of the dancers alone illuminated us as the music, costumes, and lighting were simplistic. The dancers expressed each new character eloquently in the language of mime and modern dance as well as ballet.

Next, we saw "Pas de Deux," an excerpt from the compalet ballet Flower Festival, which was choreographed by Auguste Bournonville. It was unusual to watch because it was danced in the old "bournonville" style which appears more fluid because all the lines are open, the arms soft and relaxed, and turns are on half-toe instead of on pointe. Pas de Deux is a dance of courtship. The frolicking antics of the two lovers and the rich innuendos of their facial expressions charmed the audience.

The third piece was an abstract ballet entitled "Octet Plus Four." Choreographed by Choo San Goh, it was the only piece not written specifically for the company. It was also the most dramatic. In fact, I had the sensation I was a spectator at a grandiose Roman event. The audience was bombarded by constantly-changing geometric patterns of bodies weaving back and forth in a restless display of high energy which crescendoed without relief. It peaked in the electrifying juxtaposition of red light on green, which coincided with a guttural yell emitted from one of the dancers. The agitated symphonic music which accompanied the ballet kept us on the edge of our seats as well.

The last piece, in contrast, was the more traditional Rahmaninoff Suite #2, choreographed by Samuel Kurkjian. The controlled yet fluent movements complemented the music perfectly. Like the "Pas de Deux" it was a romantic ballet which seemed to express the ideals of perfect love and beauty and poetry in movement.

Grand jury indicts former Senator Kelly

BOSTON (AP) — A federal grand jury returned an indictment against former state Sen. James A. Kelly yesterday, charging him with extorting $34,500 from the now defunct Worcester architectural firm of Masiello and Associates, the U.S. attorney's office reported.

U.S. Attorney Edward F. Harrington said the indictment was based on the federal Hobbs Act, which makes it a crime for a public official "to induce money from persons seeking to influence the official performances of his public function..."

The indictment alleged that Kelly induced payments of $500 per month from the Masiello firm "in return for Kelly's misuing his position as Senate Ways and Means chairman" to benefit the company financially.

Kelly, 54, a Democrat from Oxford while in the Legislature, was one of the state's most influencial legislators while he held the ways and means post between 1970 and 1978.

Kelly's lawyer, George A. McLaughlin Jr. said late yesterday that he had not read the indictment and he had no immediate comment.

The former legislator, who retired from the Senate in 1978, claimed his constitutional rights against self-incrimination in testimony before the state corruption commission in June.

Kelly fought a summons to appear at the crime panel's public hearings for months, finally appearing under court order.

The statement from Harrington said Kelly steered the award of public contracts to the Masiello firm by inserting items favorable to the company in state budgets and interceding with state and local officials.

"This case results from an investigatin begun by the FBI three years ago," Harrington said.

He said the investigation was closely coordinated with the corruption commission, formally titled the special Commission Concerning State and County Buildings.

The commission was created by legislative act following the 1977 extortion convictions of then Sens. Joseph DiCarlo, D-Revere, and Ronald C. Mackenzie, R-Burlington. Both went to prison for a year for allegedly extorting money from the firm which supervised construction of the University of Massachusetts' Boston campus.

DiCarlo, at the time of his conviction, was majority leader in the state Senate.

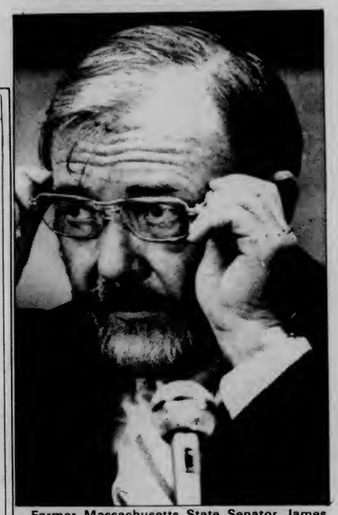
Kelly was a central character in the corruption commission's hearing this spring. The allegations about the monthly payments from the Masiello firm were first disclosed at the hearings.

Frank Masiello, former owner of the firm, testified that Kelly proposed the payments in exchange for accounting work which, Masiello and others claimed, was never performed.

Kelly, who was reported to be living in Florida while the commission was holding its hearings, used to own an accounting firm. Kelly also maintained an address in Boston.

Frank Masiello and his brother William also testifed to picking up lavish expense tabs for Kelly and paying for golf clubs and other gifts.

The indictment, Harrington's office said, charges Kelly with taking the monthly payments from the Masiello firm from November 1970 through November 1976.



Former Massachusetts State Senator James A. Kelley was indicted by a federal grand jury in Boston yesterday, on charges of extorting over $30,000 from the former Worcester architectural firm of Masiello and Associates. Kelley is shown testifying before a state corruption commission hearing in June, 1980.

TASTE THE BEER THAT OUTSELLS MOLSON GOLDEN IN CANADA: LABATT'S.

Good news!
Labatt's, Canada's No. 1 selling beer, is now imported to the U.S.
So, now it's easier to compare the taste of our Labatt's with the brew of our friendly competitor
See what you think.
We, like most other Canadians, prefer a bottle of Labatt's Beer over a Golden.
If we didn't, we'd likely be drinking Molson® instead—and we certainly wouldn't be running this ad.

THINK OF CANADA
THINK OF LABATT'S

PS The green Labatt's bottle comes equipped with one of those twist-off tops—which can be rather handy, especially whilst one is otherwise engaged.

Study says Nukes to increase

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Energy produced by nuclear plants in the United States will increase during the next 15 years despite the controversy over nuclear power, a study released yesterday predicts.

"Several new plants have been under construction and are due to come on line in the next five or six years," wrote Mary M. Menino, an author of the study conducted for the Arthur D. Little consulting firm.

"The power companies are not allowed to pass the capital costs on to consumers until the plants are operational. So they have a very strong incentive to make sure the plants are completed and working."

The study also says the country must cut its use of oil by one-third during the same period voluntarily or be forced to do so by international developments.

"Either we place a cap on our oil consumption or the world will do it for us," said Christopher E. H. Ross, the other author of the study.

"There may be less oil available; it will cost more, and more countries will be competing for it."

The demand for oil in the non-Communist world will rise to more than 62 billion barrels a day by 1995, but maximum non-Communist supplies will total only 52.6 billion barrels, the study estimates.

A "limited oil diet" that would cut domestic oil demand from the current 18 billion barrels per day to 12 billion barrels can be realistically achieved through new conservation techniques, expanded use of coal, increased nuclear production and a small increase in the avilability of natural gas, according to Ross.

Such efforts could cut U.S. dependence on foreign oil by as much as 70 percent, the study said.

"I think it is an optimistic message, in that we're saying it is possible to do all of this, based on current estimates," Ross said. "And we may have to, given the international situation."

Additional conservation steps necessary to make the "oil diet" work will require greater government intervention, according to the analysis.

Yale President cites candidate inefficacy

NEW HAVEN (AP) — Yale President A. Bartlett Giamatti faults the three presidential candidates for not giving more attention in ther campaigning to the troubled state of U.S. education.

It is a "scandal" that nation's political leaders are not pointing out that the nation's problems of unemployment and urban decay are closely related to the quality of its schools, he said Monday during a public luncheon speech.

Colleges and universities must share some of the blame for keeping high schools off-balance by continually redefining the task of the secondary school system.

"Part of the fundamental disarray stems from the lack of direction from universities," he said.

I hope that you will take a moment to read how you and the student body can benefit by your being a student representative on a University or Faculty Senate Committee.

The University has many areas in which students can participate in developing policies which effect the campus community. If your major field of concentration is related to any committee listed on this page, then you could possibly participate in developing and recommending policy in the management of that respective field. You can receive first hand experience on how the committee functions. As a student you will not only be effected by your committee's policy recommendations, but you will have participated in developing new policies.

Look carefully at the list of committees and think of how you are effected by them. Are you interested in any of the particular fields listed? Do you want to work in any of these areas someday? If so, you may be eligible to be a student representative. It is not a time consuming committment and your membership should not interfere with your studies.

If you wish to pursue a possible committee, please feel free to contact me. Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,
Richard T. Moran

Wiggins also said he felt the majority of the people who had asked hostile questions of Liddy were uninformed and less prepared for a debate than Liddy was. Wiggins added he felt the $3,000 cost was well worth Liddy's appearance.

"I think it was worth it, but I didn't before I came," Wiggins said. "He's rationalizing right wing politics, which is really big now. He is presenting views people want to hear. That's what you're getting people here for."

But Joan Antonino, a senior legal studies major from Shutesbury, said she was disappointed at the favorable reaction Liddy seemed to get and was "disgusted" with the UMass community.

"I'm really disgusted at the way the UMass people are applauding him. He's a dirty pig, he's a real fascist. Everytime the audience claps I feel more alienated from the UMass population. I can't believe UMass paid to get him here. It's a sin."

Ed Eldredge, a sophomore Stockbridge student from Webster dormitory, said he was impressed with Liddy and his intellect.

"He's a good guy. He's a genius, he's got an answer for everything. He covered a lot of ground. He's obviously a mastermind," Eldredge said.

Another student, Glenn Braverman, a sophomore history major living in Cashin dormitory, said that although he did not agree with Liddy's politics, he was impressed by his personality and speaking ability.

"I was definitely surprised. I had a preconception that he was unbalanced. But except for a couple of slip-ups where he let his emotions show through, he really did impress me. He had a lot of charisma and he answered people fairly. I differentiate from his political views, but I respect them," Braverman said.

Summing up Liddy's appearance, Lars Berlund from Sweden, a graduate student in polymer science, said "he really took a John Wayne attitude and people seemed to like it."

At a press conference following his Fine Arts Center appearance, Liddy said he was "somewhat" surprised by the seemingly favorable audience reaction towards him, but saw the response as part of a new trend in political thought in this country.

"I think the country appears to be aware of the price of the contrary view and I don't think they like it. Perhaps that was reflected this evening," Liddy said. "But I was somewhat surprised. I expected the left to dominate."

Liddy also said he preferred to speak at colleges and college appearances will dominate the remainder of his 50 date speaking tour of which UMass was his first stop.

"If I had to make a choice I would choose colleges to speak at because, as the song says, 'tomorrow belongs to you,' and I would like to prepare young people for the world," he said.

"If I had been able to be here five years ago—I was in prison at the time—Maybe I would have been able to turn things around sooner," Liddy said.

Liddy described himself as a "multi-talented man" who has "engaged in many professions. Now I'm a professional author and lecturer."

'Moonie' church wins retrial

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — Ruling that a jury relied more on emotional testimony than evidence and instructions from the bench, a federal court judge yesterday ordered a new trial after jurors awarded the father of a woman member of the Unification Church $30,000 for the loss of his daughter.

U.S. District Court Judge Shane Devine said the jury's award to Donald Kieffer of Bedford showed that his instructions to the jury were not clear enough regarding the amount of proof Kieffer was required to show or that the jury "willfully disregarded his instructions," in the celebrated case.

Devine maintained that Kieffer had not presented enough evidence or met "his burden of proof" and that he had instructed the jury that in such cases only "nominal" damages may be awarded.

He said he must conclude that "passion and prejudice on the part of the jurors infected and effected their award."

Devine said he was shocked at the results and ruled "the verdict cannot stand."

Keiffer's lawyer, James Winston, said he was "shocked" by Devine's ruling.

Winston said he could not comment on the decision until he reads it. He said an appeal of the order was possible, but "when you win a victory that is taken away from you, it is hard to meet the costs of appeal."

A legal assistant for the Unification Church, Mark Brann, said, "We are not in the least bit surprised. We always considered that the verdict of the jury should not stand."

Kieffer sued the Unification Church, whose members are called "Moonies," for $1 million, saying the church, through mind control, had interferred with legal custody of his stepdaughter, Jana, and caused him emotional distress.

After a 15-day trial this summer, during which Kieffer saw Jana for the first time in five years, the jury awarded Kieffer the $30,000.

But Devine said evidence supporting such a verdict was lacking.

"It is a well established rule of law that one who claims damages has the burden of proof and must by a preponderance of the evidence show that the damages which he seeks were caused by the alleged wrongful acts, and he must further show the extent and amount of such damages," the judge said.

Kieffer charged that the Moonies had brainwashed his daughter, who went to join his ex-wife in the church in 1975, at age 17.

But the judge ruled today that the evidence did not show that the Church officials knew that Kieffer had legal custody of his daughter. He said there also was no evidence "which might furnish casual relationship" between the alledged acts of the church in inducing Jana Kieffer to join the Church and Kieffer's emotional distress.

At the trial Jana, now 21, testified against her father.

"I don't think brainwashing goes on in the church," she said. "You can't control somebody's mind. That's ridiculous."

Kieffer was convinced after seeing his daughter in court last month that she was under the control of the church.

"To see her again was devastating. To see her on the stand, testifying for the Unification Church and against her family . . . It seemed unreal to me, and it seemed so wrong," he said.

Law enables students to seek loopholes in the drinking age

By JACKSON KATZ
Collegian Staff

The legal drinking age in Massachusetts was raised from 18 to 20 years old in April, 1979. According to a random survey of 30 UMass students, however, the law has done nothing to stop 18 and 19 year-olds from drinking alcohol.

The 30 respondents unanimously agreed there was widespread defiance of the law among 18 and 19 year-olds. There was some difference of opinion as to what the legal age should be. More than two-thirds of the students surveyed thought the age should be 18, while a little less than a third felt the age should be 19. One student said he agreed with the present age of 2[illegible].

The law raising the legal drinking age was passed almost a year and a half ago, following an intense lobbying effort by the King Administration. The legal age had been 18 since 1972, when it was lowered from 21.

The students surveyed had varied thoughts on the drinking age law, despite their overwhelming agreement on it's ineffectiveness with regard to 18 and 19 year-olds drinking. Some students felt that raising the age to 20 has made it more difficult for younger kids to obtain alcohol, while others contended that if kids want it, they'll get it no matter what the age is.

One student mentioned that he was against raising the age when it affected him; but now that he's 20 he thinks they might as well leave it that way.

Another student said she felt that raising the drinking age is a simplistic solution to a complex problem: That of the role and use of alcohol in our society. Echoing the words of more than one Massachusetts legislator who opposed the raising of the legal age, she said that the law had in effect made hundreds of thousands of good kids into so-called "criminals".

UMass Chief of Police Robert Joyce said he didn't consider 18 and 19 year-olds who drink "criminals", but that law enforcement people are bound to enforce the law. He acknowledged that thousands of young people on this campus and across the state drink illegally, but he said an underage drinker really only has to worry if he violates someone else's rights or calls attention to himself.

"It's always tough to enforce an unpopular law," Joyce said.

The high concentration of 18 and 19 year-olds on the UMass campus, plus the fact that many students come here from other states where the legal age is lower, adds to the problem, he said.

Stricter enforcement of party alcohol regulations and the ban of beer kegs on campus have caused a transformation of drinking habits at UMass, according to a number of students.

More students are drinking in their rooms, and more students are going to off-campus parties, where UMass alcohol regulations do not apply.

Joyce and a number of students agreed that many legal drinkers regularly buy alcohol for younger drinkers. Joyce said the courts are harder on people who buy alcohol for minors than they are on the illegal drinkers themselves. But he added it's very difficult to prove someone has bought alcohol for a minor.

One 19 year-old said, "You ask if I think the law is fair. We can vote, we are tried in court as adults, and we can get drafted, but we can't even drink a beer legally. What more do I have to say?"

Vowing to "continue with the struggle", Banford said: "I am going back to the picket line tonight."

For nearly two hours, Richard Sanders, union organizer and the union's chief negotiator, shuttled between the strike site and City Hall, "trying to stop Betty Kravitz (nursing home owner) from driving a troop transport over us." Police Chief Donald Maia confirmed that Kravitz had assembled workers in front of City Hall, and intended to use a Civil Defense troop truck to gain access to the nursing home building.

Claiming that he had "advised them not to try to make access into the nursing home," Maia met with Sanders in an effort to study Sanders contention that Kravitz should not be allowed to use a public vehicle to cross the picket line. Kravitz then decided to use private vehicles.

At 3 p.m., two carloads of workers tried to cross the picket line, but were refused entry by the picketers. Police again formed a wedge and the crowd sat down. As police cleared strikers from the path of car, the cars slowly edged forward. The cleared strikers continued to obstruct the cars' progress, sit down closer to the building, only to be cleared by police again.

The cars continued to edge forward in this fashion until the workers werre close enough to the nursing home facility to walk inside.

Sanders was arrested immediately upon sitting down, and charged with disorderly conduct. Muller and Levinsky were arrested shortly afterwards in a scuffle with police, and were both charged with assault on a police officer. All have been released and are scheduled to appear in Hampshire District Court tomorrow.

John Clifford, union organizer, charged that the Amherst police force had used excessive force in dispersing the crowd. "They brutalized these people and are harrassing the union," he said.

But Chief Maia claimed that, other than providing a traffic patrolman, he "had not planned any police presence at all." He claimed that only under "extraordinary circumstances" would the State Police be called for support.

★Liddy

He stressed the need for a build-up in defense forces, both of nuclear and conventional arms, saying "our enemy is the Soviet Union" and "in number of weapons and strike capabilities, the Soviets are way ahead of us."

"The SALT (Strategic Nuclear Arms Limitations Talks) process is negotiated from weakness and is not in the best interest of the United States," Liddy said. He also cited the inferior training of pilots and soldiers in the United States military as compared with other countries.

Liddy's comments were frequently punctuated with vigorous applause as well as booing according to the political sentiments of the audience factions.

Of his role in Watergate, Liddy said "I was not about to let the government down." He termed the rebellious 60's as "undeclared civil war" that "the right side won and it doesn't bother me that I served a substantial term for that."

He said the United States is suffering now because "our intelligence force has been 86'ed in the international intelligence community because we so often violate the promise of secrecy," that he said is necessary for the transfer of any information.

"The CIA (Central Intelligence Agency) is a shadow of its former self because of this," Liddy said "but I think now Washington is coming to realize we need the CIA" and again "beginning to understand we're in the real world."

He continually described this real world as a place where "they don't fool around" and to survive "we have to play hard ball." He said he believed if Reagan is elected, he would recognize the necessity for a strong intelligence but it will take time to build it up again."

Liddy did not, however, endorse any presidential candidate, saying he thinks "it will probably do the poor guy more harm than good."

Liddy said he would have mounted an operation to rescue the hostages in Iran immediately if he had been in the position to do so. "They did two things wrong. They ran the operation from Washington when they should have had a man responsible enough right there as the Israelis did in Entebbe. They also had the wrong mindset, going from point to point, when they should have gone in like the Conquistadors saying 'we're going to this or die.'"

In reference to a question on the interests of United States multinational corporations tied to CIA international actions, Liddy said "The United States doesn't treat our corporations well enough." He said that foreign countries such as Japan and Germany recognize the importance of their industries by having the "industrial leaders constantly accompanying government leaders. They recognize that able and effective corporations contribute to a strong military power."

"In this country," Liddy continued, "we split them up with anti-trust laws when they get powerful and prevent them from helping us."

The quiet man from Vermont

Kevin Cullen

It is just after six, practice is over, and the quarterback has taken his cleats off.

"Sit down," Tim Fontaine says, shaking the visitor's hand, "Have a seat."

Tim Fontaine, UMass quarterback, is the epitome of the quiet man. There is no brashness, no hey-I-did-this, I-did-that. Just a quarterback talking, about himself and his team.

"Hey, Saturday was all I could have asked for," Fontaine says. "To win like that, and to win with such a total team effort. It's the only way."

What Fontaine did last Saturday in Alumni Stadium was much like the man himself. While most attention focused on touchdowns by Garry Pearson, bull-dog runs by Brian Heyworth, and near-decapitations by George Lewis, Tim Fontaine led the Minutemen to their 24-12 upset of Villanova.

Quietly.

"I felt a little pressure going into the game," Fontaine says. "I mean, it's natural enough. We didn't move the ball up at (the) Dartmouth (scrimmage), and a lot of things were said and written. I don't want to make excuses—I won't—but we didn't have our first offense out there for the game. We went up there for the contact."

Fontaine has also had to bear with every story and word-of-mouth mention of him include, in the same breath, the name of Mike McEvilly, whose graduation last spring left Fontaine with the starting job.

"It doesn't bother me," Fontaine says. "Actually, I learned quite a lot from McEvilly. When I came here I had never really played on a team that used all those quick pitches and a lot of movement in the backfield. Mike was easy to learn from. McEvilly was so much quicker than me, it's really hard to compare us. There's no need to. We're different types of quarterbacks."

Fontaine's quarterbacking days go back to Union High in Bellows Falls, Vt., where he also lettered in baseball, basketball, and track. Fontaine spent one year at Vermont Academy before coming to UMass, where he was McEvilly's backup for a couple of years.

Tim Fontaine paid his dues, waiting his turn, and this summer he paid some more.

"I might look slow, but I've tried to work on my quickness," he says. "I did a lot of sprints, trying to get that extra step. We pitch out a lot, so I've got to move."

Fontaine did the little things Saturday. He threw the quick, short pass at the numbers; completed 10 of 13 passes for 79 yards; he ate the ball and took a loss when it would have been easier to pitch out and let the tailback get eaten alive in the flat. He didn't throw three touchdown passes; he didn't throw for 200 yards and run for another 100; he didn't even score.

What Tim Fontaine did was lead a disciplined, conservative offense with subtle control. He did what his coaches asked him to do. There wasn't a hell of a lot of noise, no screams and chants of his name from the crowd. Fontaine just did his job. Quietly.

"We didn't throw a lot on Saturday," Fontaine says, admitting he'd like to pass more.

"The way our backfield ran we really didn't have to. But that'll open things up for the passing game, eventually. Other teams will have to key on our running game and it'll give us more room to pass."

As for the rest of the season, Fontaine, a 23-year-old Wood Technology major, is reserved—sensible, if you will.

"I won't say anything like 'we'll do this and we'll do that,'" he says. "I'm just going to take every game one at a time. And the next game is Delaware State."

The boo-birds are probably waiting. They always are. If Tim Fontaine has an off-game, if he doesn't do the job, the whispers and questions that have been asked already will be asked again. You can't get rid of the cynics. You can only shut them up for a while.

Tim Fontaine has shut the cynics up for at least one week. If the quiet man from Vermont has his way, they won't be talking for a good, long time.

Minuteman Scott Cooper moves the ball between two defenders in Saturday's loss to Bridgeport. The Minutemen hope to rebound today when they travel to Williamstown to face the Ephmen of Williams College. (Staff photo by Bill Harrold)

Women kickers face Westfield in home opener

By JEFFREY BILLARD
Collegian Correspondent

The number two ranked UMass women's soccer team will open its 1980 season against Westfield State, today at 3:30 p.m. at NOPE field.

Head Coach Kalekeni Banda is looking for an offensive game by his team. "We outshot every other team in the Plymouth State tournament and we have improved since then," Banda said. "We are strong in every position, but especially in our halfback line where our offense is generated from."

When asked about the Westfield State team Banda said, "we beat them 5-0 last season in a scrimmage game, but that is not a good indication because every team in New England has improved because of use of better skilled freshmen."

"We are using a total team concept this season," Banda said. "Last season we played a more individualistic game." Banda is looking for sophmore halfback Nina Holmstrom to lead the team. "Holstrom is our quarterback, she is responsible for setting up the offense," Banda said.

"Everyone is ready for the game," Banda said, "We have to play a game so we can see where we must improve."

This year's team is ranked second in the New England Coaches Poll behind Harvard. "We are one of the teams favored to go all the way." Banda said.

The team finished second behind The University of Connecticut in the Plymouth State Tournament with a 2-0-1 record two weeks ago. U Conn was also 2-0-1, but outscored UMass in total goals for the tourney.

"We need student support for this game," Banda said. "It is about time that the University recognized us."

The team will host Boston College on Saturday, Sept. 27 at 1:00. That game will also be played at the NOPE field.

ZooDisc routs Amherst, 19-7

Brings record to 7-1

The UMass ultimate team won its fifth in a row yesterday defeating Amherst College 19-7 on the fields at Southwest. The rout brought their record to an impressive 7-1.

John Pisello threw three touchdown passes and John "Dube" Dubinsky and Eric Kehough each threw two in the 19 goal effort. Ken "Boards" Boardman had one goal and one assist.

ZooDisc'ers will be seen in new uniforms this fall. According to co-captain Joel Zuckerman, Flying Feet will be paying part of the cost of new jerseys for the ultimate squad in exchange for their wearing the Flying Feet logo on the arm of the jersey. "Each teamember will pay $4," Zuckerman said.

ZooDisc will be looking to win its fourth straight game over Hampshire College tomorrow afternoon on the field across from the horse shoe in Southwest. Hampshire, a perennial Mass. power, has yet to beat UMass this season.

This weekend, ZooDisc travels to Boston for a four-team tourney with Harvard, Tufts and Boston College. The tournament will be held at Harvard Stadium.

According to Zuckerman, Dave "Buzz" Elsworth, who has been out all season with a badly bruised foot, is expected to see some action this weekend. Elsworth is the team co-captain.

Tensions escalate in union strike

Five arrested on picket line

By STEPHEN MORAN
Collegian Staff

Nine people were arrested yesterday in connection with the two day old strike at the Amherst Nursing Home.

Four University of Massachusetts students were included in the arrest. The total arrested as a result of the District 1199 New England Health Care Employees Union strike is now 15 people.

Arrested for trespassing, disorderly conduct, and interfering with an employee gaining legal entry were Elizabeth Hill, 20, a UMass student from Amherst; Elizabeth Kelleher, 20, of Amherst; Daniel LeBarre, 19, UMass student from Amherst; Karl Mayer, 27, of Amherst, and Gerald Fresia, 32, of Amherst. Mayer was also charged with assault and battery on a police officer.

Arrested for trespassing and disorderly conduct were Josep Gannon, 24, UMass student from Franklin, and Robert Banford, 26, UMass student from Amherst. It was Banford's second strike related arrest in two days.

Also arrested was Rita Kropf, 50, of Amherst. She was charged with assault with a deadly weapon and driving so as to endanger. She allegedly tried to crash through the picket line with her car, Amherst police said.

All arrests except Knopf's resulted from picketers' attempt to keep anyone from crossing their picket line.

Police role questioned

By JAMES F. MAHONEY and STEPHEN MORAN
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts Society of Professors yesterday condemned the use of the University of Massachusetts police in the picket line crossing efforts at the Amherst Nursing Home.

The UMass police have assisted the Amherst police in protecting the workers at the nursing home as they try to cross the Union Picket line. Yesterday the UMass police also assisted in the arrest of six picketers.

Question has been raised by the union regarding the role of the UMass police in the nursing home case. An informal agreement exists between the two departments stating that each will help the other out in the event of need, Dean of Student William Field said last night.

Union organizers have said the police, both town and campus, are using excessive force in attempting to cross the picket lines

"The police came and started to drag people away and twist other peoples arms," said Linda Edwards, union negotiator. "I don't think they need that many police there, we're not a bunch of mobsters."

Richard Fantasia, a UMass graduate student and supporter of the union workers, said the police were arriving at the site withtheir night clubs drawn.

"It's a war, a terrible situation," he said.

Although the police are only supposed to be bringing across the line employees who worked at the home before the strike started, Edwards said she has seen many people crossing the picket line, with assistance, that are not regular employees—"scabs".

She said she asked Amherst Police Chief Donald Maia not to bring scabs across the line and he told her that all the people he was bringing across were employees.

A strike supporter said the police seemed to be very angry about something when they arrived at the shift change yesterday.

"The police are provoking the picketers, they're making them scared," said David Horowitz, a UMass student.

An exasperated Edwards told the Society of Professors the union really wants to go back to the bargaining table and iron out a compromise. She said the nursing homes' lawyers, Skoler, Abbott and Hayes, are delaying the meeting by not compromising with the union.

The Springfield law firm also represents the administration in three out of four contract talks on campus. Richard Sanders, union organizer, thought it was ironic the UMass police are one of the unions on campus who are fighting against the firm at UMass and are fighting for the law firm at the nursing home.

Neither Amherst police Chief Donald Maia nor UMass Public Safety Director Gerald T. O'Neil were available for comment on the charges last night.

Meanwhile, a University of Massachusetts student group is extending financial and strike support to workers at the nursing home. About 35 members of the UMass strike support committee, a coalition of the Radical Student Union, graduate students from the University's Labor Relations Center and other students, met in the Campus Center last night and set picketing and leafletting schedules.

Committee member Ellie Bagli said she was surprised and concerned about police actions at the picket site.

"It's brutal. I'm not sure why they are acting this way. I know police get brutal in strikes but it's happened so quickly," Bagli said.

Senate endorses strike at Amherst Nursing Home

By KENNETH ROSS and DON STARUK
Collegian Correspondents

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night passed a resolution endorsing the strike at the Amherst Nursing Home and voted to allocate $470 towards support of the strikers.

The resoultion, which passed without opposition, affirms senate oppostions to "any use of police force" against the strikers, "condemns UMass police department's participation" against the strike, and affirms that "scabs are not entitled to police escorts" through the picket line.

About $170 of the money allocated by the senate was put toward the Union Video Project which will bring televised coverage of the strike to campus. The remaining $300 has been earmarked for supplies, such as posters, to be used at the stikers disposal. The motion to allocate money from the senate's finance account passed by a 37-9 vote with two abstentions.

Strike organizer Richard Spencer spoke at the meeting and solicited student support for the strike saying "We need bodies on the line."

"This is unquestionably a student issue," said Spencer. "Students work there, wages in the area are depressed and this is an opportunity to oppose that, and students should get involved in town support."

Spencer also detailed what he called "appalling" police actions, saying that "students are being beaten brutally." Spencer showed the Senate bruises on both his arms which he said he incurred in a confrontation with police at the strike.

Speaker Linda Geary said that efforts were made to have management present at last nights meeting but they chose not to be represented.

Student Government Association co-President Richard LaVoice expressed his concern that UMass police were being used at the nursing home and said he would bring the matter to the attention of the UMass Board of Trustees.

"The UMass police are not protecting the campus, the're all down at the strike sight," LaVoice said.

Senator Joel Weissman urged senate members to give their support to the strikers and to join them on the picket lines.

"We look for community support," Weissman said. "To get that support we must support the community in fights such as this one. I think all of you should go down and check it (the strike) out. Give your support."

Oil terminals strategic targets in Iraq, Iran war

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Iraqi armor and infantry pushed deeper into Iran yesterday, claiming the capture of three more towns and driving hardpressed Iranian troops away from the border. The two Moslem enemies urged their people to fight on in a "holy war."

As a worried world watched, the "oil war" continued.

Flights of U.S.-made Iranian fighter-bombers and flotillas of gunboats attacked Iraqi oil installations for a third day, and Tehran said far-ranging Iraqi warplanes had attacked Iran's giant Kharg Island oil terminal. The important Iranian refinery at Abadan was reported still burning, two days after Iraqi warplanes and artillery began bombarding it.

The Persian Gulf oil-shipment facilities of both nations were reported shut down.

The war poses no immediate serious threat to U.S. oil supplies — unless the fighting widens and stops all oil trade in the Gulf.

Iranian reinforcements were being rushed to the flashpoint areas along the 300-mile war front, Tehran Radio said. The beleaguered defenders of the Iranian oil-refinery city of Abadan apparently were holding out doggedly against an Iraqi siege.

The Iraqis claimed to have captured at least three more Iranian towns in the central border region 350 miles southwest of Tehran. Iran's government conceded its forces had made tactical withdrawals.

The Iranians asserted that four Americans, whom they did not identify, were captured with Iraqi soldiers in the border fighting north of Abadan. The report, which gave no further detail, could not be verified.

Official reports on total casualties in the ground fighting and the heavy air raids were not available. Each side claimed to have shot down dozens of the other's planes during the cross-border air raids.

In Baghdad, which was the target of repeated air attacks Tuesday, dependents of American diplomats were ordered evacuated by the U.S. State Department. The Baghdad airport was closed, and it was reported that some 50 Americans, including stranded businessmen, would ride by bus more than 400 miles to Jordan later Wednesday.

There was a flurry of diplomatic activity to try to bring about a cease-fire.

Yasser Arafat, leader of the Palestine Liberation Organization, arrived in Baghdad, reportedly to offer his services as a mediator. Cuban President Fidel Castro, head of the Non-Aligned Movement, dispatched his foreign minister to Baghdad in another mediation effort.

In Tehran, the Iranian prime minister, Mohammad Ali Rajai, accused the United States of "trying to invade Iran by aiding Iraq." The Soviet Communist Party daily newspaper Pravda charged that the war was a "necessary" excuse for the United States to justify its stationing of a "quick reaction force" in the Mideast.

Possible ousting for Myers

WASHINGTON — The House ethics committee voted yesterday to recommend that Rep. Michael Myers, D-Pa., be expelled from Congress for accepting a bribe.

Rep. Charles E. Bennett, D-Fla., the panel's chairman, said the vote was 10-2 to strip Myers of his seat in Pennsylvania's First District.

Bennett said a committee report would be fired in the House by midnight enabling that body to take up the expulsion matter this week.

The chairman said it was his intention to have a House vote on Myers' expulsion before Congress adjourns Oct. 4.

"There will be a detailed report filed for the public in a few days," Bennett said, who refused further comment.

No Nukers to try again

AUGUSTA, Maine — Hours after losing the nation's first statewide attempt at outlawing nuclear power, Maine's anti-nuclear forces yesterday set in motion the process for "Referendum II."

Ray Shadis, leader of the original petition drive that failed by a three-to-two margin Tuesday, yesterday morning filed for another petition drive, Deputy Secretary of State James S. Henderson said.

It appeared that the wording on the proposed petition was identical to the original one that called for a ban on nuclear power in Maine, including shutting down the 8-year-old Maine Yankee nuclear power plant.

Shadis could not be reached for comment.

However, Alan Philbrook, a member of Shadis' Nuclear Referendum Committee, said the group would not relent in its campaign against nuclear power.

At an informal news conference at the Statehouse, anti-nuclear activists distributed a statement vowing to mount future referendum campaigns.

Anchorman dealt tax blow

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Tax Court has dealt a blow to a Boston-area broadcaster battling the Internal Revenue Service over nearly $55,000 in income taxes.

Mr. and Mrs. John B. Hynes Jr., of Chatham, Mass., appealed to the court after the IRS charged them with tax deficiencies totaling $54,721.23 for the years 1973 through 1976.

Hynes, an ancorman at WCVB-TV in Needham, had created a trust for the purpose of developing and selling real estate and on his individual income tax returns for 1973 through 1975 deducted losses suffered by the trust.

The court, however, ruled that the trust was a corporation and thus the couple could not deduct those losses on their personal tax returns.

State fees begin to increase as new law takes effect

BOSTON (AP) — Car registration, insurance broker and public skating rink rental fees went up yesterday as the King administration began taking advantage of a new law giving the executive branch control of all state charges.

The Legislature gave up its authority to set fees with passage of the new law early this summer, turning responsibility over to the executive Office of Administration and Finance.

The first round of increases took effect yesterday and Richard Asadoorian, heading up the fee project, said other hikes will be made on a regular basis.

Asadoorian noted that the new law expires at the end of 1982, so "the project must be undertaken in as short a space as possible."

There are about 400 state fees, and he said many have not been reviewed since the 1930s.

"The review is ongoing," he said. "Many of the fees are really not realistic."

Effective yesterday, the fee for renting a public skating rink during primetime jumped $10 to $40 for 50 minutes.

The fee for the two-year private passenger car registration went from $14 to $20.

Other increases at the Registry of Motor Vehicles include:

— $20 per year for a vanity plate, up $10.

— Low digit reserve plate, $40 for two years, up from $18.

— Truck registration fees will go from $5 to $7 per 1,000 pounds.

— Certificates of title will cost $10, rather than $5.

Elsewhere, the Division of Insurance will charge $150 for a 3-year broker's license, up from $50.

Asadoorian said the new fee was supposed to be the rate under a bill passed by the Legislature in 1976, but a mixup the next year actually decreased the price of the license. It went from $25 per year to $50 for three.

Also increased yesterday was the Department of Revenue license for truck operators who use diesel fuel. That charge went from $1 to $5 annually.

Asadoorian said there were no figures immediately available on the amount of new revenue yesterdays increases would bring the state, but the registry's increases are expected to amount to some $22 million per year.

He also said there are no scheduled dates by which other increases would take effect.

Until passage of the omnibus fee bill this year, each increase had to be approved by the House, the Senate and the governor.

Foreign policy victory for Carter permits shipment of Uranium to India

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a foreign policy victory for President Carter, the Senate voted 48-46 yesterday to permit shipment of 38 tons of enriched uranium to India, which diverted U.S. nuclear material in 1974 and used it to detonate an atomic bomb.

The vote came after one of the most thorough and contested Senate debates in years. It was marked by personal and extensive telephone lobbying by President Carter, who suffered a sharp setback last week when the House refused to go along with the sale.

A vote against the sale by both houses was required to stop the transaction.

Leaders of the drive to block the sales said that permitting them would "eviscerate" U.S. efforts world wide to stop the spread of nuclear weapons because India has refused to agree to safeguards aimed at blocking diversion of the fuel to weapons use.

But backers of the sale argued that blocking the transaction would undercut Carter's attempts to persuade India to accept international safeguards for its nuclear program and would alienate the Indian people at a time of warfare and political and religious unrest in Southwest Asia.

India wants the low-enriched uranium to resupply the reactor at its atomic power station at Tarapur near Bombay. Carter overruled the Nuclear regulatory Commission in authorizing the sale.

In arguing for approval of the sale, the White House said no further sales will be permitted to India unless that country agrees to full scope safeguards on all nuclear facilities to prevent a repeat of the 1974 nuclear explosion.

In debate before the final vote, Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, said the decision would show the world whether the United States means to stand behind its goal of halting the spread of nuclear arms.

"The bottom line is what is going to happen to the 111 non-weapons nations which signed the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty," Glenn said. India has refused to sign the treaty.

Sen. Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn., said a decision permitting the sales would "call into question the strength and tenacity of our non-proliferation efforts" and said the NRC was right in saying that the issuing of licenses permitting the sales was illegal.

Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, said a decision to block the sale could undercut Carter at a time of crisis in Southwest Asia and actually harm America's non-proliferation policy.

He said the sales should be made to assure "that the U.S. voice in New Delhi will not be drowned out by a strident, anti-American outcry in India, which could drive the Indian government even further away from U.S. policies."

And Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., said the decison could not be made without considering the precarious nature of the Asian subcontinent," including the border war between Iraq and Iran, the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan, "the tattered political fabric of Iran" and "some instability in Pakistan."

"We need to ensure that the largest democracy in the world, India, is not alienated to such an extent that the Soviet Union can gain major new leverage in Indian government policies," Jackson said.

US ready for oil slowdown

BOSTON (AP) — President Carter's energy policies have prepared the United States for any oil-production slowdowns resulting from the Iran-Iraq war, Vice President Walter F. Mondale said yesterday.

Because of Carter's policies and Americans' response to the energy crisis, the United States is importing millions fewer barrels of oil than it was three years ago, Mondale claimed at a news conference.

Mondale said the United States has no plans to involve itself directly in the Middle East Conflict but is working with the United Nations Security Council to bring peace.

"We have said we have no intention of becoming involved and we want no other foreign power involved," Mondale said.

Mondale's news conference was his first appearance in Boston during a two-day campaign swing through New England.

Earlier in Rhode Island, Mondale responded to a charge by Republican presidential candidate Ronald Reagan that a weak U.S. military position led to the Middle East crises, saying there was little the Carter Administration could have done to avert a conflict.

Dispute leaves women homeless

Steve Densmore
Collegian Staff

While Perkins Street residents and the Department of Mental Health (DMH) haggle over housing regulations, three mentally-retarded women are suffering, said Lisa DeSalvio, a Community Homes for Children staff member.

The three women are experiencing "behavioral problems" while living at temporary and crowded residences in the area, DeSalvio said.

Community Homes for Children has been trying to rent a residence on Perkins Street for the women and one live-in staff member. The home would be part of a DMH policy of de-institutionalizing mentally retarded individuals by placing them in the community environment.

Despite a meeting held last week between Northampton Mayor David Musante, DMH officials, and Perkins Street residents, ther remains dissatisfaction among some residents with the DMH policy of de-institutionalizing mentally-retarded individuals.

Mayor Musante said most residents were unaware of the nature of the de-institutionalization program.

"There were all kinds of rumors and alot of misinformation," he said.

Although most residents at the meeting were satisfied with explanations offered by Hal Gibber DMH regional director, Musante said several Perkins Street residents worried that the area was becoming "Saturated" with mental health patients.

Edward Torres, a Perkins Street resident, said he would like to see the matter resolved in court. Resident Chiara Torres-Ayala said another meeting with the DMH will be scheduled "in the near future."

In the meantime, the three women are temporarily residing in homes in Amherst and Northampton according to David Scanlin, director of Community Homes for Children, a county-wide social service organization.

Scanlin said the situation has led to overcrowding in the two houses. He said the problem is "taxing" staff, facilities, and, most of all, the patients.

"I would like to see the problem solved as soon as possible," Scanlin said.

Solution will come when Gibber and residents of Perkins Street reach an agreement, Scanlin said. The DMH must give approval for any de-institutionalization program, he said.

Prize winning designs to be displayed in CC

By CATHERINE CLABBY
Collegian Staff

An exhibit of two prize-winning designs, one for a radiation shield over the Campus Center and another for an open air plaza in front of the Student Union will open Friday in the Campus Center Music Library.

The designs won first and second prizes in the spring 1980 Environmental Design Competition sponsored by the Campus Center Board of Governors (BOG) last May. The exhibit will include the designs and commentary from their creators.

Patrick Condon, a landscape architecture student, won a prize of $250 for his design for the Campus Center Plaza.

Condon's plans include an urban-type plaza which would create an expansive flat area in front of the Student Union and to the west of the Campus Center. The Plaza could be used for public events and would provide an unobstructed path from the area north of the Campus Center and past the Student Union.

Glenn Ruga, a social thought and political economy student, won $150 for his design for a radiation shield for the Campus Center.

Ruga's plans include the construction of a shield, comprised of layers of lead and concrete, that would cover the Campus Center Complex. All entrances, except for the tunnel leading from the Student Union Building, would be sealed. In his commentary, Ruga says the shield would serve as protection from meltdowns in two nearby nuclear plants in Vernon, Conn. and Rowe, Vermont.

John Furbish, a member of the BOG, said there were two reasons for holding the contest.

"We wanted to increase the public awareness over problems on the exterior of the Campus Center and Student Union buildings," he said. "And we wanted to provide material from students for future planning to the Campus Center administration."

Furbish said the plans are not detailed enough to be used in a bidding procedure. "We hope they will be referred to," he said.

If the plans are not referred to by the Campus Center administration they will be kept in the University Archives indefinitely, Furbish said.

The opening of the exhibit will be held from 7 to 9 p.m. Refreshments will be served and the public is invited.

All benefit from Boltwood project

By JULIE GEANAKAKIS
Collegian Correspondent

Five College Area students are playing a major role in the lives of mentally and physically hadicapped patients at the Belchertown State School, through a program called the Boltwood Project.

Sharon Desautels and Debbie Lauder, both Boltwood student supervisors and Community Service majors at the University of Massachusetts said,"we see Boltwood as a positive learning experience for both the client and the volunteer."

The student volunteers main job is to be a role model and a supportive force in their clients eventual re-entry into the community. Belchertown is progressing in de-institutionalization and plans on closing its doors in 1985 when all the participants should be integrated into the community, Desautels said.

Student volunteers recieve one colloquium credit for keeping a journal and seeing their client for three hours one night each week.

Established in 1969 by a group of freshmen at Amherst College, the Boltwood Project began as an experimental service fraternity. The following semester a new kind of living unit, trheBoltwood House was opened. Through correspondence with the Massachusetts Department of Mental Health the founders arranged a series of volunteer programs involving 70 students. The program was implemented the same year with the planning of student volunteers.

The program continues to be modified and planned each year by students and the Belchertown School administration to suit the needs of the School and the Five-College community.

Artist's drawing of proposed radiation shield for the Campus Center.

All student volunteers take part in a two-week on-grounds orientation and training session offered at the beginning of each semester, aquainting them with many aspects of mental retardation and the operation of the state school. The sessions, led by proffessional, cover patient discipline and psychology, physical therapy, ocular-motor threapy and individual client's needs.

The programs in the Project include community skills such as shopping, social hours, movies, and concerts, arts and crafts from finger-painting to leather-crafting and academically oriented activities. Allowing time to build a quality relationship between client and volunteer, each program is a framework for initiating activities that make the client at ease in this new situation. Later, the volunteer will give input for activities and they will evolve spontaneously, said Desautels.

Hatch provides Rock 'n' Roll

By ROB HUFFMAN
Collegian Staff

A "Rock'n Roll weekend" is the only way to describe what's going on tonight through Saturday at the Hatch.

The Paper Dolls, our valley's premier power-pop pamphleteers, will be cutting up the Campus Center crowd this evening, playing what one eloquent fan has described as "good tunes". Their "Farfisa Beat" (as Squeeze describes it) include songs with titles like "Amusement Park Blondes" and "Feel like a Jerk". In addition, the Paper Dolls are recording a single — "I Thought You Knew," with "I Shouldn't do this to Me," which should be released next month. That's tonight at the Hatch, and don't forget your dancin' shoes!

Playing "rock from Boston," Ballon breezes into the Hatch Friday night. They've headlined at Boston's Paradise, and have opened for groups as diverse as the B-52's and Bill Bruford. Opening for Balloon will be another hot band, August, who will also open the show Saturday for the Atlantics.

The Atlantics, a Boston-based outfit whose album Big City Rock is loaded with catchy rock 'n roll, will be the subject of closer scrutiny in tomorrow's Collegian.

So remember, if you're looking for rock'n roll this weekend, just wander down to the Hatch, conveniently located in the Student Union Building.

King launches job program

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Edward J. King, who failed to get the Legislature to start a new job training program for the state's so-called growth industries, moved yesterday to launch the project on his own.

King signed an executive order creating a 13-member Bay State Skills Commission and authorizing it to spend $1 million from his own special account. George Kariotis, King's secretary of economic affairs, said the administration will go back to the Legislature next year seeking about $3 million more for the enterprise.

Announcing the project to a gathering of computer executives, King said it was aimed at producing trained workers not only for their industry but for all expanding fields.

"There are plenty of jobs in Massachusetts," King said. Ultimately, he said, he hopes the program will train up to 100,000 of the 250,000 people on unemployment and welfare rolls.

Kariotis, who head the commission, said its immediate goal will be to organize short-term training programs for blue-collar jobs.

Anderson accuses opponent of risking nuclear war

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press Writer

Independent presidential candidate John B. Anderson suggested yesterday that President Carter and Ronald Reagan both favor policies that inadvertently heighten the risk of nuclear war between the United States and the Soviet Union.

While Anderson said his two principal rivals have formed an "alliance of folly" in their view on nuclear warfare, GOP running mate George Bush declared that Reagan "will be the peace president. And Vice President Walter F. Mondale insisted that Reagan has suggested "willy-nilly" military interventions overseas.

The man who started the campaign '80 war-and-peace debate earlier in the week, Jimmy Carter, stayed at home in the White House. In a crosscountry campaign journey earlier this week, the president said that voters face a war or peace decision this fall and that Reagan has a habit of calling for U.S. military intervention overseas.

But Reagan campaigned in three states, declaring that he was finished answering the president's charges. "I'm not going to bother every day answering those things," he said.

"The issue of this campaign is his record and I'm just going to keep talking about it," the GOP candidate declared as he attacked Carter's energy policies in Texas, a major oil and gas producing state.

Anderson, who has sharpened his attacks on both his major rivals in recent days, told the Council on Foreign Relations in New York that both Reagan and Carter favor targeting nuclear weapons toward military command centers in the Soviet Union in addition to Russian missile sites.

They also support development of the highly accurate MX mobile missile system, he noted.

"Obviously, neither Mr. Carter nor Mr. Reagan is advocating nuclear war," Anderson said. "But I consider both of them to be seriously misguided in their endorsement of the socalled nuclear warfighting thesis."

He said their endorsement of new targeting plans and the MX missile could make nuclear war more likely by giving Soviet leaders more to fear about U.S. intentions.

"The creation of these weapons and plans would move both sides toward a hair-trigger posture in which each would feel more inclined to launch its land-based missiles on warning of attack lest they be destroyed on the ground," he said.

Kissinger: conflict shows US influence deteriorating

HARTFORD (AP) — The giran-Iraq conflict underscores how badly U.S. and Western influence in the Persian Gulf has deteriorated, former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger said yesterday.

Kissinger made a brief visit to Hartford to campaign for Republican U.S. Senate candidate James Buckley. Kissinger was to be the guest-of-honor at a $250-a-couple cocktail party at the West Hartford home of Republican financier E. Clayton Gengras.

At an airport news conference, Kissinger said the developments over the last few days in the Persian Gulf region would never have occurred four years ago.

Before President Carter took office, he said Iraq, a Soviet Union ally, would never have dared attack Iran, a former ally of the United States. He said even if Iraq had been that rash, the regime of the late Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi would have been able to handle the situation on its own.

"I think the crisis underlines the deterioration of the Western position in the Persian Gulf," Kissinger said.

Kissinger said it would not be appropriate for him to discuss in detail what "tactics" the United States and its allies should use, but he said the West must seek to assure the moderate states in the Persian Gulf region that they will be supported.

He said it must be made clear to the radical Arab states and the Soviet Union that there is a "firebreak" beyond which they cannot go.

Editorial/Opinion

Liddy and Hoffman for the non-conformist

While waiting in line for entre to the G. Gordon Liddy lecture, I viewed the sunset, a streak of orange like a spill in the sky. Suddenly, my view was blocked by a rotating white disk, which then became transformed, as if by magic, into a very familiar rectangle. I then became angry, not because I am such a committed sunset watcher, but because my hopes to discover an invading UFO had been dashed once again. Instead, I looked face to face with someone's UMass ID card.

Seth Jacobson

"It says 'Massamachusetts' on the back! Look! 'Massamachusetts'! Isn't that funny?" A stubly faced young man said, limply holding out his card for my examination.

"You could get good money for this," I kidded. "Why if there are so many people paying thousands of dollars for baseball cards, then why not ID cards, especially such a novel one as yours." His blood-shot eyes lit up like a traffic light as he yanked the card back into his possession, then he proceeded to put it up to the sky so that he could peep up through the punch-holes.

"Good money, huh? You know, the new ones don't have holes? I suppose that makes mine even rarer, right? Hey, wanna see my photos?" My enthusiasm was slight, only because he had switched the subject. So he took out his wallet and began flipping the pictures over with the rhythm of a card dealer.

"This is my ex-ex, and this my sister, another ex, another ex and another ex." He giggled as he said this. I looked over their faces and heard the sound of a sucked lip.

"The way you say it. 'Ex, ex-ex.' It doesn't sound right." This comment was made by one of two serious faced women, both of whom wore matching "alligator" shirts.

"They're still my friends." He said as he quickly squished the wallet out of sight in his rear pants-pocket. Standing between them and the sunset he introduced himself.

"I'm a sixty's dude. You know, Abby Hoffman was my idol and everything. You like to party?" They said yes which gave him the green-light to continue.

"I'm a guitarist. Been playing for eleven years. I do it better with a buzz. It loosens me up, you know, gets me mellow."

It was after seven o'clock and one of the student officials made an announcement that there would be a slight delay before we'd be seated. My neighbor wore a tortured expression and then looking over to the women for support he said, "The add said seven. We could sue them for false advertising, you know?"

When we were finally inside I had the misfortune to be seated near him. While he whistled an off-key version of "Sugar Magnolia" he made frantic attempts to continue the rapport he'd established with the two women.

"I'm a non-conformist.Like, I only clap if I think someone deserves it." Then I heard him mention that he didn't like feminists who wore a certain tee-shirt reading "Women shouldn't just want equality with men."

"Like affirmative action, I'm for parts of it, but then I'm a white-anglo and we're the ones being hurt by it all." He flipped over opinions like he did his photographs. In a moment he'd become "an Aryan whose best friends were Jews." Did the women buy any of this? They didn't seem to mind but then what did I do besides sit meekly listening?

When Liddy finally swaggered on and bellowed his amorality, which he termed "ends justifying the means," my neighbor finally shut-up. He had met his match and instead he just licked Liddy's boots laughing at every quip and half-quip. But I wouldn't have minded it so much if he hadn't been joined by an auditorium of other squealers. Was everyone so much an non-conformist as he, I wonder.

Beware the Whitmore whitewash

To The Editor—

"Who does the work? We do," was the rallying cry at the University Staff Association/Massachusetts Teacher's Association picket line outside Whitmore — a scene sure to become familiar throughout the semester. Many students may be unaware that all three campus unons (Massachusetts Society of Professors, and Local 1776 American Federation of State, County, Municipal Employees) have been working without a contract since July. These unions represent the entire university work force from professors, to maintenance and dining commons workers, to clerical workers and technicians. Without them this university could not funtion. All three unons have been trying, to no avail, to reach a contract settlement with the university, and given past union experiencs at UMass it is unlikely that a quick settlement will occur. This is due to administrative incompetence and anti-unionism.

As union members become frustrated with the lack of success at the bargaining table it is likely that their unions will increase the pressure on Whitmore via demonstrations, picket lines, work slowdowns, or possibly a strike. Such a situation affects all students and disrupts the 'normal' functioning of the university. If such a situation should occur, however, students should be clear that, contrary to what Whimore will tell us, it is not the fault of the unions. It is the result of the backwards anti-union bargaining stance of the university administratin. The adminstration's refusal to bargain in good faith causes these disruptions, not irate campus workers who, like the rest of us, are trying to make ends meet.

Whitmore will say that a fair contract will cause our tuition to increase. This is total nonsense, the increased tuition of the last six years has resulted from a Borad of Trustees that has been spineless in resisting legislative and gubernatorial attempts to restrict access to public higher education. Our tuition money goes directly into the state treasury not the university. There is no logical connection between icreased tuition and cost associated with union contracts.

Beyond seeing through Whitmore's inevitable smokescreen it is necessary for students to actively support campus unions and the local labor movement as well. A fair contract for UMass unions increases the quality of living and learning for all students. It is in our best interest that UMass employees are paid fairly and work under good working conditions. We should view the struggle of campus workers as part of our own to stop cutbacks and increase the funding of the university. It is only by working in coalition with labor can we, as students, effectively fight for our own interests. It is important to remember that organized labor has been a consistent supporter of low cost high quality public education for many years. If the budget cuts of the past six years are to be reversed it will only come about through the united action of students, faculty, and university workers. As the old saying goes — "united we stand divided we fall."

Bill Bluestein

UMass police aid union busting

To the Editor:

Labor history 101 is being taught at the Amherst Nursing Home this week. The first lesson: The long hard struggle for decent wages, decent working conditions and the right to unionize is not over.

But students who have been supporting this strike were horrified Wednesday morning at the sight of University police officers involved in the strike-breaking effort. While the town claims that there exists a "reciprocal agreement" between Amherst and University police, we see the use of University police in this capacity as an illegitimate use of university funds and personnel.

We demand that the University refuse to allow University police or security officers to be involved in strike breaking at the Amherst Nursing Home.

The Amherst Nursing Home has a history of low wages for its employees. In fact, five out of every six workers in the union make minimum wage. Many of these workers are single parents and working mothers trying to make it on their own. No one can be self sufficient at the wages paid by the Amherst Nursing Home ($3.10/hour, weekly take home is $99.) Due to this, there has been a very high turnover rate of employees, with 60 percent of the non-professional staff changing since May. This high turnover rate means quality healthcare for the elderly is very hard to maintain. The union has been without a contract since May 8, and contract negotiations have been proceeding very slowly. Last Sunday the workers voted to go out on strike as the only means left to continue their struggle.

The union proposals for a new contract ask for wage increases totalling $1.45 over the next two years. This will barely keep up with the rising rate of inflation. In response, the management first offered an immediate pay hike of 25 cents. This offer would have brought most workers salaries up to $3.35 an hour. This is also the new minimum wage effective January 1, 1981. Finally after four months without a contract, the management offered raises totalling 85 cents over the next two years. This raise would not even keep up with inflation or the erosion of employee standard of living. The union also is requesting that the new contract be retroactive to May 8, the day the last contract expired. This request has been refused, furthermore, management is demanding an open shop policy. This is a blatant attempt to try and destroy the power of the union. The owners claim to be negotiating in good faith, to do this they have hired as their legal representatives the law firm of Skoler, Abbott & Hayes. This firm is being paid at a rate of $100 an hour — this is more than most employees bring home in a week! Skoler and Hayes ae known as the authors of a book on union busting, and the firm has been involved in numerous attempts at union busting in the New England area.
